NETHERLANDS INDIA.

The Singapore Free Press learns that cholera has broken out at numerous places in Java. The new Governor-General of Netherlands India landed at Batavia on the 10th May, and on the 12th assumed the functions of government. His Excellency is said to meditate extensive reforms, and, it is reported, will commence with the civil service, whose allowances are threatened with curtailment.

CEYLON.

The Ceylon Times has the following with reference to cholera at Jaffna:—"We hear sad accounts of the ravages of this disease in the north of the island; the cases since the beginning of the year having been about 5,000, the deaths near 3,000. In the district of Wadamaratchy alone the number of cases have been 2,400, out of which 1,300 have proved fatal." The Governor, the same paper understands, leaves Kandy for Colombo early in July next for the Session of the Legislative Council, when the new arrangements contemplated in the civil service will doubtless be brought forward.

AUSTRALASIA.

The Sydney and Port Phillip papers are filled with appalling accounts of the destructive bush-fires which commenced in the beginning of February, and have caused extensive damage in the colony of Victoria. Their origin, though some allege the combustion to have been spontaneous, seems attributable, in the first instance, to the firing of the stubble by the farmers, after harvest, and the flames, owing to the great heat and drought, became uncontrollable. We subjoin, from the different journals, descriptions of these fires, and of the terrible heat and hot winds.

Kilmore.—The aspect of the heavens at sunrise upon the morning of the 6th February foreshadowed an intensely hot day. At 10 a.m. the thermometer stood at 90° in the shade, the atmosphere being loaded with a heavy, stifling vapour, occasioned by the fires. The altitude of the sun could only be distinguished by its lurid glare through the veil which enshrouded it. About this time a heavy gale, varying from N. to N.W., sprung up, bearing clouds of dust of a hot, suffocating nature. The greater portion of the stubble upon the wheat and other lands, about 3,000 acres of which were under cultivation during the last season, had been burned off on the 4th, according to an almost unanimous agreement entered into amongst the farmers; but, unfortunately, one of the farmers, it is understood, fired his stubble on the 5th, just before the commencement of the gale, and to that may be attributed, in some measure, the extensive loss; but, almost at the same time, fires might have been seen raging to each of the cardinal points. The tongues of flames, driven by the gale, glided through the stubble, like the fiery serpents of old, utterly consuming and melting away whatever opposed their course. The fences next provided fuel, forming direct lines to houses, farm buildings, stacks, &c.; all human aid could avail nothing against the consuming enemy, whose advances were rapid, steady, resistless, and overwhelming. It was distressing to witness the destruction of stacks, barns, and houses, by which was prostrated all the hopes of the industrious farmer; parents and children tearing themselves from each other with a heart-rending cry, and seeking in flight security from the enemy who followed close upon their heels. Although many were scorched by the flames and otherwise injured, no human life was sacrificed. After nightfall, the scene was grand and impressive. Kilmore being built in a valley, the high surrounding lands, covered with glowing trunks of trees stripped of their branches and leaves, bore a remarkable resemblance to the lights of a mighty but distant city. In many instances the flames coquetted with the stacks and farmhouses, approaching within a very few feet, burn all around them, and then retreating, sparing that upon which the farmer had literally garnered up his hopes. The loss sustained in wheat only is estimated from eight to ten thousand bushels, independent of oats, barley, hay, agricultural implements, &c. Several drays travelling on the road were destroyed.

—Geelong Adv., Feb. 7.

Geelong.—Yesterday morning, from the north-westward, came sweeping along a heavy cloud, accompanied by towering columns of dust, driven with a tempestuous hot blast; so sudden was the change, that the fiery blast might be felt on one cheek, whilst the southerly wind played on the other. This was about half-past seven o'clock. The wind grew in fury and in heat. The air was full, not only of sand and dust, but of small pebbles, which drove with incredible force. The heat increased every hour, and the wind blew with resistless fury. It swept the streets—it hauled round the angles of the buildings, and fell with a deadening heat on all that it came in contact with—men were prostrate and helpless—business was stopped—the streets were deserted—the houses closed; and for many weary hours the blast and the sand storm ruled supreme. The sun, where it struck, seemed to leave a burning spot; the suffocating dry air filled the lungs with a rarefied heat and choking thirst. The thermometer ranged 111° in the shade; sometimes rising, sometimes sinking, as the hot winds swept by, or partially lulled. All were stricken, and cowed before it. The horizon was dimmed, and ever and anon the face of heaven was obscured with the thick murky clouds of sand and stones, hurled aloft and scattered by the sirocco, which now blew with increased and increasing fury. The will was powerless, and sunk into a dreamy torpor; men lay on floors, couches, and chairs, denuded of all superfluous clothing, and on them, and on everything else, came the fine dust, insidiously creeping through every crevice, and spreading itself over all, human and inanimate,—dust to dust. Appetite was destroyed, and in its place came thirst, and then sleep. The dogs slunk to dark corners, and lay panting—the fowls covered in covies, with half-opened beaks and ruffled feathers—the bullocks hung down their heavy heads, turned tail to the driving wind, and lolled their tongues, uttering now and then a faint bellow—men rushed desperately round the corners, and plunged madly into the whirlwind, in the hope to regain their homes; others, dead beaten, turned their backs to the tempest, and journeyed crab-like. Towards evening, it would have been not only futile, but dangerous, to have faced the storm, which hailed pebble-stones; and westward of the Dam, the wind had drifted the sand ankle-deep, so that the rise to the west of the bay was one huge drift, out of which, swayed by the wind, the trees rocked to and fro, with threatening motion, and groaned as their branches were thrown about for the sport of the passing wind. In the evening the sun sunk with a malignant aspect into a dark bank of clouds, and then the wind blew furious again for a while, bringing down upon the town a thick dense vapour from the north-west, which increased in density and volume as the night wore on, until the pungency of its nature but too truly demonstrated the existence of large fires, accounts of which came fast trooping in, with melancholy descriptions of the losses sustained, and the fears entertained that further devastations might result—rumours unhappily but too true. The day will be remembered with sorrow.—Ibid.

A most remarkable meteoric phenomenon occurred on the 6th February, which will be long remembered. The morning opened fine, but gave strong indications that the day would be sultry. Between 12 and 5 o'clock, the heat was oppressive; the inferior animals felt it to be so, and eagerly sought shaded places; even the poultry drooped their wings, and gasped for breath. At 2 p.m. the thermometer stood at 92 in the shade, and 130 in the sun. At about 4 o'clock a dense and murky mist, resembling a combination of smoke and fog, gathered all round the town, and completely obscured the sun. The appearance of the atmosphere was remarkable. The retreating sun, shining behind a vapour, imparted a lurid glare, resembling the light reflected from polished brass. The timid and superstitious anxiously inquired if similar appearances had been before observed; some mentioned the similarity of the phenomena which preceded the dreadful earthquake at Lisbon. The evening was followed by a fearfully dark night; but, fortunately, at about 1 o'clock on the ensuing morning a breeze sprang up, accompanied by a slight shower of rain, which cooled the atmosphere delightfully.—Launceston Examiner.

The master of the Henry Edward, on arriving at the Laurence Island, experienced a hurricane of hot winds, which parted the vessel from her cables, riding at a hundred fathoms on each cable. The fire flew above the vessel in large flakes, which caused to burn the running gear, so that the sails fell down on deck. The lights below were lit from 11 a.m. till 2 p.m., which burnt as blue as possible. After this the gale ceased, and blew from the W.S.W. a moderate breeze.—Portland Herald.

It would appear that the sirocco-like north-west wind extended over a tract of country exceeding 600 miles: we have accounts of its being felt at the same time at Adelaide, Port Phillip, and at sea to the eastward of Wilson's Promontory. Although we have often suffered from bush-fires in this part of the colony, we have never had them to the extent to which they have recently prevailed in Port Phillip. The amount of damage done will probably never be known, but it must have been immense. Mr. Willis, of Geelong, estimated the loss of the settlers on the Barrabool Hills and adjoining district at 50,000 bushels of grain and 700 tons of hay.—Sydney Morning Herald.

Terrific as was the visitation of the bush-fires in the neighbourhood of Geelong, the phenomena displayed in the enormous forests of the Cape Otway Coast, extending from near the Barwon Heads to Apollo Bay, were more fully grand, although the amount of loss to settlers has been, although serious, not so great as in the open country. The most striking features of the Cape Otway country are the immense size and crowdedness of the timber trees, and the density and luxuriant growth of the fern scrub. This scrub, in ordinary circumstances, burns slowly, while a fire may continue for weeks in some parts of the timber without extending far from where it originated. Such a fire was, in fact, known to have existed for a month past in the ranges, but no alarm was felt in consequence. The hot blast of the 6th February, however, playing upon the kindled nucleus, caused the fire to spread with such fury that the dense scrub was swept away like stubble, and the flames were carried along the tops of the trees, leaving the massive trunks ignited wherever any decayed, hollow, or dead branch gave it a nestling place. The body of flames came down with such rapidity from the ranges towards the coast, that, as was the case here, those persons who left their huts for a few hours found on their return all swept away.—Geelong Ado.

The ship Diana, from Madras to Sydney, encountered the hot wind, and the ashes from the fires to the eastward of Bass's Straits. The following extract of her log appears in the Madras papers:—"At noon of the 6th Feb. we were in lat. 39° 03' S., long. 147° 26' E., a clear sky overhead, but a strong haze all round. At 1 p.m. the haze increased in thickness from E.N.E. and by N. to N.W., extending up to the sun, and preventing it from casting a shadow. At 1.30 the breeze freshened, bringing more haze with it, which increased so fast that at 2 p.m. the sun was invisible, and at 3 it was difficult to read in the cuddy; small, dry, dark, burnt-looking leaves were borne along by the breeze, and a considerable quantity of dragon-flies. At 3 p.m. the breeze was light, the haze increasing in thickness in the W.S.W., and assuming a peculiar dark-looking colour. At 3.15 the haze began to disperse a little in the S.W., the breeze shifting to N.W. increasing, and bringing hot puffs of wind with it; sail was at once reduced, so as to prepare the ship for the worst. At 3.30 the haze thickened all round, increasing so fast that at 4 was as dark as it ever is at night; the sun, however, made one more attempt to exert its power, by tinging the haze red for about a quarter of an hour, soon after 3.30 o'clock. At 4.15 the whole heavens were darker than ever remembered by any on board; it was literally impossible to see even a mast whilst standing within half a yard of it, much less any of the upper spars; the boom, painted white, could not even be seen: the darkness was complete. The breeze from 3.15 to 4 was variable between N.W. and W., bringing with it a fine black dust, very similar to powdered charcoal, in addition to hot wind, the hottest of which came from W. in gusts; in the face of which, the thermometer rose to 98, and no doubt would have risen much higher, had the gusts lasted long enough to affect the mercury fully, before the colder portion of the breeze blew upon it again. At 4.15 the breeze settled down at N.N.W., increasing fast, so that at 4.30 it blew a fresh gale, continuing so until 5.45, when it began to lull, and at 6.30 had fallen to a moderate breeze. During this period, viz. from about 4.30 to 5, we had an exhibition of the phosphoric lights, illuminating the points of the three royal and top-gallant yards, the gaff and fore top mast studding sail boom ends, and the royal yard lifts, both to leeward, a swell at windward, these latter being quite covered with it. This gale brought with it a quantity of the fine dust, preventing any one from looking to windward."

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Advices from these islands, to the 3rd of May, represent their condition as one of continued prosperity. Strong opposition, on moral grounds, seems likely to be raised against the concession demanded by France, and which the king has consented to submit to the House of Representatives, of a reduction of the duty on spirits from five dollars to two dollars and a half. The commerce of the port of Honolulu still increases, and efforts are being made to call general attention to its advantages as a commercial depôt, consisting in its general safety, its facilities of access, which require only a small steam-tug to make them perfect at all periods; the wharfrage, where ships can discharge without the expense and delay of lighters, and to which extensive additions are now being made by the Government; and, lastly, the convenience of warehouse-room. In addition, vessels can get stone ballast and wood in any quantities, and also abundant supplies of soft water so near the shore, as to allow of casks being filled simply with the use of a hose connected with the iron pipes. "In view of these facts," it is said, "and with the knowledge that goods can be entered at Honolulu for re-shipment, subject only to a transit duty of one per cent., it would appear that consignees at San Francisco, having cargoes upon their hands, might effect a material saving by sending their ships here to discharge, and store their goods until a favourable moment for having them forwarded to meet any existing demand." A line of steamers, it was believed, would be established shortly between the islands and San Francisco, when the communication would be sufficiently rapid for the objects contemplated.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

The progress of knowledge, by limiting the domains of the imagination, tends to curtail a fruitful source of intellectual enjoyment. Fancy, which once could sport at large in the world of nature, is now "cribbed, cabined, and confined;" the pure sciences have encroached upon the regions of poetry; the spiritual essences, that were supposed to throng the air, thick as "the motes that people the sunbeams," have shared the fate of the vulgar witches, and even the sublime phenomena of the heavens are now regarded as parts of a mere mechanical machine,—a kind of huge clock. The recent total eclipse of the sun, which would have at one time startled mankind, was looked at by the few, besides astronomers, who could catch a glimpse of it through the veil of clouds which interposed, almost as an ordinary physical occurrence.

Eastern nations still treat these matters less prosaically. Their notion of an eclipse is that it denotes a struggle betwixt the powers of the air for the mastery,—a mode of reasoning not to be ridiculed, since nothing is more calculated to inspire an uninformed mind with supernatural awe than a total eclipse of the sun. The Chinese, indeed, pretend to a knowledge of the true nature of these obscurations of the heavenly bodies from the earliest times, and a total eclipse of the sun is recorded in the She-king as early as the 6th September, in the year 776 before Christ. In the ancient works of the Hindus, the celestial phenomena are allegorized in a highly poetical manner. Some time back* we adduced striking evidence of this in extracts from the Rig-Veda, the oldest authority for the religious and social institutions of the Hindus, in which Indra, lord of the firmament, is described as battling with a demon named Ahi or Vritra, whom he smashes with his thunderbolt, the electric fluid.

But the fullest personification of the agents of a solar eclipse is given in the episode of the "Churning of the Ocean," contained in the 15th chapter of the first book of that ancient Hindu epic, the Mahābhārata, which represents the demons or giants warring with the gods. We subjoin a metrical translation of a portion of this episode from the Asiatic Journal.†

"Another mount there is, Mandāra called,
Lifting its craggy summit to the clouds,
Whilst deep in earth its giant roots descend.
Its desert waist the wandering creeper clothes
With tangled tendrils, that reticulate
Hamper the tiger in their mazy toils.
This mighty mound the heavenly bands essay
To lift into the deep :—a vain attempt!
Firm stood the stubborn rock. The Dévas, foiled, Besought Great Brahma's succour. At his call
The snaky deity appeared, and taught
By great Naráyana, he upheaved and raised
With its incumbent weight the ponderous load,
And on his Atlantean shoulders bore
His burthen to the ocean. Váruna
Beheld with dread the impending mass, and claimed,
As compensation, to divide the prize.

The mountain placed upon the tortoise-back
Of Kúrama rāja, Vāsuki, the snake,
Twined as a rope around its well-poised bulk,
The fiery Indra whirled the monstrous staff,
That made the ocean boil. The serpent's head
Anon the Sûras seize; the Asûras grasp
The tail; thus to and fro they vigorous pull
The living cable, whilst its gaping jaws
Belch mingled smoke and wind and ruddy flame,
O'er head concentrating in pitchy clouds,
That dart the forked bolt. Fainting with toil,
Refreshing dews revive the bands divine,
And showers of blossoms from the sky descend.

Meanwhile old ocean groaned; its finny tribes
Were crushed to paste and mingled with the foam.
The dire convulsion from the centre shook
The solid earth; devouring flames burst forth
From conflagration; craft, nor strength nor speed
Could rescue man or beast, the general prey:
The conflagration runs with direful speed,
Till Indra's power the spreading ruin stays.

The ocean now a milky hue assumes,
And straight coagulates like thickened cream.
But sinking with their task, the exhausted bands

Once more implored the omnipotent; whereat
Naráyana their drooping spirits cheers
With words of comfort and encouragement.

The labouring gods again commence their toil;
Again the frothing ocean boils and groans.
When lo! from out the foamy, unctuous mass,
First rose the moon, with placid aspect, clad
In twice ten thousand beams of lambent light,
Looking benignity; next Sri appears,
Couched in the water-lily's snowy cup;
Wine's smiling goddess next arose, and then
Uchisrava, and that bright gem Kaustubha,
And Párijátaka, and the sacred cow:
Along the solar path they march to heaven.
Last came the bearer of the precious lymph,
A Déva, but in mortal shape; his hand
A crystal goblet held, where sparkling flowed
The AMRIT, beverage of the deathless gods.

Loud shouts of triumph from the Asûras spring,
And each with boisterous uproar claims the prize,
As vast Airāvata uprears his bulk.

Not yet the mighty staff suspends its whirl;
The ocean still fermenting, from the dregs
And fæces of the mass, a deadly bane
Was spawned upon the surface: flame and smoke, Pestiferous, rank, and mortal, issued thence,
Wrapping all nature in the garb of death.

Now had the universe itself expired,
But Siva, touched at human misery,
Stood forth in man's behalf, and ate the drug,
Which to his throat adhered, blue-dyed, and thence
'The blue-necked god,' his name 'mongst grateful men.

Despair the Asûras seized: when Vishnu stood
In lovely form before their wondering eyes,— Fairer than fairest amongst mortal fair,
Whose charms with magic fascination stole
Each heart, and maddened they resign the prize
To their enchantress: she passed round the cup
Till every Sûra quaffed the living stream.

Ráhu alone, of all the Asûra throng,
Clothed in a Sûra's shape, tasted—no more:
The sun and moon revealed the cheat, and ere
He drank, Naráyana his chakra seized,
Miraculous weapon, like the solar disk
Refulgent; launched with more than lightning's speed,
Its treacherous edge severed the demon's head.
Down dropped the unwieldy trunk, ploughing the earth,
That shuddered at the shock; hills, islands, woods
Rocked, as when labouring nature feels a pang.
The monster's head, immortal, cleaved the air
With horrid cry, and heavenward took its course;
And there its rancorous feud it still maintains,
Still striving to devour both sun and moon."

The term pagoda, now usually applied to the lofty hexagonal storied towers common near Chinese cities, is said to be derived from the Sanscrit word bhagavati, or 'holy house.' By the Portuguese and French writers, the word is still used to designate temples of all kinds in India, Siam, and China; the lofty storied pagodas being called towers. Many of the temples in India have lofty pyramidal structures attached to them, as in the famous pagoda at Tanjore; and the application of the term to the Chinese structures was easy and appropriate. English writers, however, have looked chiefly to the towers in China as resembling the Hindu buildings, while continental travellers seem to have paid more regard to the general purposes of the latter establishments, and have called the temples in China pagodas. This distinction needs to be attended to in reading books on China, for a large proportion of the pagodas here have no temples attached to them. Whether the ták, or Chinese pagoda, is derived from the Indian, is a question which has been discussed at some length; we are inclined to think that it is indigenous, and that even the unimaginative Chinese architect would have produced something better than the simple nine storied pagoda, if he had tried to imitate the ornate pyramidal edifice of the Hindu. The similarity between the two is too slight, and the purposes for which they were erected too unlike, to lead us to suppose that one was copied from the other. The Chinese ták is somewhat connected with the Buddhist faith, and a few still have monasteries near them; but they are so much more closely related to the geomantic notions of this people, that they are not now much associated with the Buddhists. The remark of the Rev. Mr. Milne, in reference to the tower of Ningpo, "that the presence of such an edifice not only secures to the site the protection and favour of heaven, if it already bears evidences of enjoying it, but represses any evil influences that may be native to the spot, and imparts to it the most salutary and felicitous omens," at once explains their purpose, and discloses the motive which has impelled the Chinese to erect such apparently useless buildings.

The number of pagodas in China is unknown, and there is some variety in their height and mode of construction; but their general aspect is marked with the same uniformity that attaches to everything architectural in this country. De Guignes has given drawings of seven, which he visited in his journey to Peking; the highest among them was near Káutáng chau, in Shántung, and was eleven stories high. This writer seems at a loss to account for the fact that those erected near small towns are lower and smaller than those in cities, and supposes there may be some proportion demanded by usage between the size of the pagoda and the town; but the difference is owing probably entirely to the greater wealth of the city. This author mentions one of seven stories high, near Yángchau fú, in Kiángsú, nearly uniform in size to the top, the stories of which were merely divided by three rows of black bricks. He also speaks of many pagodas of five and seven stories in height; indeed, no district town or prefecture is considered to be complete without one of these felicitous structures, and they are probably as numerous as the district towns, though in many cases a cheap brick edifice of five stories is made to insure whatever of good luck the tá can bring.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

WEDNESDAY, July 30, 1851.

In a preceding number,* we noticed a case, in the Sudder Adawlut at Bombay, in which the wholesome law of 1850,† which protects a native, changing his or her religion, from loss of civil rights, came to the rescue of a Hindu convert to Christianity, and restored to him the possession of his minor son, detained by his wife, the child's mother, who separated from him upon his conversion. In our present issue will be found a similar case, though of still more importance, wherein a Brahmin, who had renounced his own creed and embraced that of the Gospel, by virtue of the same law recovered his wife (who had been withheld from him), by the judgment, not of a native tribunal, but of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Madras. The incident seems to have made a deep impression upon the native mind, and caused no little stir amongst the proud and inflexible caste to which the suitor belonged.

The convert, Streevanassa Charry, who received the rite of baptism in April last, and desires to be employed as a missionary amongst his countrymen, was immediately deserted by his young wife (not more than fifteen, to whom he had been married nine months), as he alleged, through the influence of her relatives. The process of the Supreme Court brought her before one of her Majesty's judges, who decreed that she should be immediately restored to her husband, the order of Court providing that, whilst under his custody, she should be permitted to partake of food prepared after the manner of her caste; that she should not be forced to eat with her husband, or do any act calculated to forfeit her caste; and that she should be allowed to speak with her parents once a week, in her husband's presence.

These very proper precautions show some of the difficulties which beset a work that, in the sight of many zealous persons at home, appears light and simple,—that of converting the Hindu people to Christianity. The sequel of this case reveals difficulties and perils of another kind.

When directed by the judge to go to her husband, this young creature refused. The husband was told to take her hand, but it was resolutely withheld. The judge employed entreaties and soothing language, but in vain; it was found necessary to use force, and a European constable carried her into the judge's room. The scene without the Court became somewhat alarming. A female relation of the wife endeavoured, or seemed to endeavour, to commit suicide. A crowd of excited Brahmins, with uplifted fists and loud imprecations, assailed the Court-house, charging the police peons, who, highly to their praise, in this critical emergency, stood firm, and repelled the exasperated mob, happily unarmed.

That the natives at the Presidencies, especially at Calcutta and Madras, are beginning to discern a growing change of religious sentiment in their community, is pretty evident from various indications. The anti-missionary movement amongst the "orthodox" Hindus at Calcutta, the result of which was recorded in our last impression,* affords the strongest testimony to the jealousy of the Brahmin caste of the progress made by missionary teaching, and to the apprehensions of this section of the Hindu people that their domination is in a tottering state. It was acknowledged at the meeting at the Oriental Seminary, that, in consequence of the conversions, it was necessary that "a great Hindu movement should be organized to resist the progress of the missionaries;" and a mild form of purification was suggested, to enable those who had embraced Christianity to return to their ancestral creed. It appears, likewise, from a letter written by certain native converts (which is given in a preceding page), that "the most tempting offers" had been made in the vain hope of seducing them into apostasy.

The account of the Hindu castes, contained in the last Calcutta Review, proves that, although the influence of the Brahmins, owing to the political ascendancy of the Mahomedan and other foreign powers in India, has diminished, and the "earthly gods" do not enjoy the unqualified reverence they once claimed and received, their spiritual supremacy remains unaltered in theory, and they are still venerated by the other castes. We must be prepared, therefore, for the most bitter and uncompromising hostility on their part towards every measure of improvement which tends to dulcify the condition of the inferior castes, and to impair still further the fabric of power constructed by the crafty contrivers of the Hindu social system, which, like other schemes of mixed spiritual and temporal government, is built upon the ignorance of the many. "Every man," observes Dr. Channing, in his argument against slavery,† "has a right to exercise and invigorate his intellect, and whoever obstructs or quenches the intellectual life in another, inflicts a grievous and irreparable wrong." This truth is almost a truism; and the Hindu people, with a very little enlightenment, will discover the results to which it leads. Their enthrallment to the Brahmin caste must, then, give way, and, the keystone of the arch removed, the edifice must eventually fall. The dominant classes perceive this consequence, and are bestirring themselves to avert it.

There is so much natural equity in the law of 1850, which extends and enlarges the provisions of a previous Act, applicable to cases where one party in a civil suit was a Hindu and the other a Mahomedan, that even an "orthodox" Hindu would encounter some embarrassment in devising a sound argument against it; but simple and equitable as the principle is, the consequences with which it is pregnant are serious. Whilst the provisions of the Hindu law of caste formed part of our code, religious freedom and the rights of conscience were idle words; the present law establishes those rights, but, as observed in the Friend of India, at the period when it passed, it virtually abrogates that portion of the Shastras which was intended to keep the land of India for ever bound to the support of Hinduism.

THE alleged disturbance of our shipping trade in the East by the appearance of fleets of American vessels from California at the ports of British India, offering to carry goods to Europe at freights so low as to shut our shipowners out of the market, furnished a formidable and plausible argument against the change lately made in the navigation laws. Our readers will, perhaps, remember that, a few months back,* we noticed a statement of an alarming character by Mr. Aylwin, who appealed to the fall of freights at Calcutta, owing, he said, to the increased number of American ships ready to bring cargo on return at any rate, and insisted upon the absurdity of supposing that our shipowners could contend with "the gigantic fleet that has been constructed for the Californian trade." This subject has been recently placed in a more prominent light, during the debate of the 24th July, in the House of Commons, when Mr. Herries and Mr. Young strongly urged this point, which appears, however, to have received a satisfactory answer.

Mr. Herries, in presenting to the House a very gloomy picture of the state of the British shipping trade and of the reduction of freights from 50 to 40 per cent., asserted that the San Francisco ships drove the British out of the Chinese market, and under-bid them in India; whilst Mr. Young reproduced Mr. Aylwin's statement, observing that, in 1850, 1,100 ships left the Atlantic ports of the United States for California, a very large portion destined to take away our trade in our Eastern ports.

"If the tonnage thrown into the trade of the East was doubled without any increase of the quantity of goods to be carried, the result must be low freights. When we come to that competition, who must go to the wall? The British shipping, of course, because, the American having made a very large freight from the Atlantic ports of the United States to California, was only completing the voyage, and could take any freight whatever."

The reply to these allegations, by Mr. Labouchere and Mr. Wilson, if there be truth in figures, refutes them altogether. The former showed that, in the year 1850, the tonnage of British ships employed in India had increased, the inward 55,000 tons, the outward 120,000 tons. Mr. Wilson entered more minutely into details. Mr. Young, he said, had

"Referred to inroads made by the Americans on the East-India trade of this country. From accounts of tonnage outwards and inwards employed in the East-India trade for the last three years, it appeared that in 1848 there were in that trade 840,000 tons; in 1849, 928,000 tons; in 1850, when the British East-India trade was said to have been absorbed by America, the tonnage rose to 1,015,000 tons. During the last six months the tonnage of shipping inwards and outwards in the East-India trade, as compared with the tonnage in that trade during the corresponding six months of 1849, was 486,000 tons to 439,000 tons, showing an increase of 47,000 tons in the East-India trade alone. It further appeared, from accounts brought by the last Indian Mail, that British shipping was scarce in India, and that freights had risen from three guineas to 4*l.* and upwards."

We must, in fairness, say that Mr. Wilson is not quite accurate in his last assertion, inasmuch as the rates of freight in India had (as our readers may satisfy themselves) slightly declined; nevertheless, the quotations from Calcutta to London were 4*l.* to 4*l.* 5*s.*; rates which are by no means unremunerative, and which present a strong contrast to those of Mr. Herries.

That in America we have a rival who will run us very hard, no one denies; the question is, can we beat her by removing the restrictions of our navigation laws? It is, in our opinion, a delusion to think that this is practicable. On the other hand, affording the shipowners of both nations fair play, we have as little doubt that those of Britain will succeed in a struggle from which the community will reap the benefit resulting from cheapness of conveyance. Mr. Lindsey, the owner of half of each of the vessels forming the new line of Indiamen, has enumerated certain "grievances and burdens" to which British shipping is exclusively subjected; but "there is not one of them," he adds, "that need terrify the Chancellor of the Exchequer." All these will doubtless in time disappear; meanwhile, there are advantages on the side of the British shipowners, which, though they are, for obvious reasons, not generally put forward in this controversy, will always secure to them some odds in the race.

The journals brought by the present mail state that complaints are made by the mercantile community at Calcutta, that while by Act of Parliament their vessels must carry a certain number of men, the Americans are left free to sail their ships with as few hands as they please, and also that the capacity of American ships so much exceeds their registered tonnage, that they pay nothing like the amount of port-dues, in proportion to the cargoes they carry, that is paid by their English competitors.

The result of the debate to which we have referred, ending, after the speeches of the four gentlemen before named, in the withdrawal of the motion, seems to imply that, in the opinion of the House, a sufficient answer had been given to the advocates of the shipowners, and that our liberal policy, so far as it has yet been tried, has realized expectations.

THE BORNEO CHURCH MISSION.

A meeting of the friends and supporters of the Borneo Church Mission was held, July 24th, at the Hanover-square rooms, the Earl of Ellesmere in the chair, supported by the Bishops of London and Oxford, Sir James Brooke, the Earl of Harrowby, Sir R. Inglis, &c., and others.

The Chairman, in his opening speech, referred to the Rajah of Sarawak in the following terms:—"In mentioning that illustrious man, he felt admiration and gratitude. When that man left England, but a few short years ago, the men of worldly wisdom would have sneered at the earnestness of his enthusiasm, but few would have suspected the eminent success that was to attend his devotion to the cause of humanity. He went forth to establish Christianity and civilization in a far country: he did not go for conquest; but if conquest fell in his path, who was there that would blame him for subduing the enemies of the human race?"

The Bishop of London, in moving the first resolution,—"That the accounts received from Borneo are highly encouraging as respects the progress of the mission and the opening there presented for the progress of Christianity; but at the same time they show the necessity for increased exertions to promote the accomplishment of the objects for which the mission has been established,"—alluded to the measures resorted to for the suppression of piracy. That suppression was the work of Sir James Brooke, who devoted his time, talents, means, and faculties of body and mind to the cause of humanity and civilization. The blessings of Christianity would follow in their track, and the name of Sir James Brooke would be enrolled in the annals of history as the pioneer of Christianity in the Indian Archipelago. The commencements of the Bornean mission were prudent, temperate, and limited, according to Sir J. Brooke's advice, and it consequently had been eminently successful. Great credit was also due to the Rev. Mr. Macdougall, the missionary, who attended to the temporal as well as to the spiritual welfare of the population, and whose discretion, prudence, and piety triumphed over the greatest difficulties. The Dyak population were in many respects singularly unfit for Christianity. In other respects they were singularly fit to become converts. They had very distressing feelings and practices. They immolated human creatures, and were fond of taking heads. The possession of many heads made them respectable. They believed in a future life, but they also believed that the chance of happiness in another world depended on the number of their followers—in other words, on the number of heads they had taken. This description would seem to indicate a hopeless state of things; but hopeless it was not. The Dyaks were cruel on principle rather than by their feelings. They were naturally mild, gentle, and generous, and as such, open to the teachings of Christianity. If the Church of England would not convert the Dyaks, there were those who would convert them to a less pure creed.

The resolution was seconded by Sir James Brooke, who reminded the meeting that, four years ago, in that very room, he intimated his willingness to receive and foster the Bornean mission. He had then his grave anxieties and fears. He knew that the collision of Christianity and Mohammedanism had been attended with lamentable results to social order and peace, even in much better regulated communities. He was aware that in Sarawak he reigned by moral influence alone. Still the greatness and the sanctity of the object in view tempted him to brave the dangers with which he knew it was surrounded. When the missionaries arrived, he impressed it upon the nation, that all he wanted was toleration for them and their converts. One of the people—the prime minister—told him that the Dyaks were happy to see the missionaries, who would save their bodies and souls, and, therefore, he proposed that they all should become Mahomedans, and live in peace. This proposal he (Sir J. Brooke) respectfully declined. The mission was established, and flourished; and it was something to say that, after four years, there was peace, goodwill, and toleration between the Christian and Mahomedan population, and there was now a Dyak population not one of whom had taken a head. Sarawak was the central point whence the mission must radiate into the interior. The tribes in the interior were given to plunder and to the taking of heads; they were ferocious in their habits, but they were a generous nation. They were not treacherous. He spoke of them as he found them. With respect to himself, he must disclaim the merit of any bold, enthusiastic, and premature plans. His views arose with his position. In the course of events, his view of his duty became clearer and, he hoped, better. As to the future prospects of the mission, he was of opinion that the missionaries ought not to lose sight of the prudence with which they commenced. It was better that the population should remain as they were, than they should hear the inculcation of Christian principles and find no Christian practice. He was the protector of that people; and if it were his misfortune to fall on evil times and on evil tongues, he would bear it. He would, in such cases, stand by the judgment of his country.

The Bishop of Oxford moved the second resolution:—"That this meeting agrees with Sir James Brooke in his opinion that the erection of the bishopric of Sarawak is a step urgently required by the circumstances of the mission." The right rev. prelate protested that the step proposed was the true, apostolical, and primitive way of planting the Gospel, and that the abandoning it had marred the success of many missions that had been sent from England.

The last resolution affirmed the propriety of making an appeal to the public for the endowment of the bishopric of Borneo. This resolution was carried by acclamation.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MR. BUCKINGHAM has at length succeeded in his long contest with the East-India Company for indemnification for his losses as an Oriental journalist. The Bill before Parliament for restitution has been withdrawn, the Court of Directors and the Government having agreed to settle upon him a pension of 400*l.* per annum.—Globe.

RAILWAY BETWEEN CAIRO AND ALEXANDRIA. — The Viceroy of Egypt has made final arrangements for the construction of a railway between Cairo and Alexandria, and has signed an agreement for that purpose with Mr. Borthwick, who is here on the part of Mr. Robert Stephenson, and who intends returning to England by the next steamer to send out a staff of engineers to commence operations forthwith. This undertaking will confer inestimable advantages on Egypt, by bringing forth the resources of the country, besides facilitating the transit of passengers and merchandize to and from India. It is calculated that the line will be completed in about two years and a half. The whole length will be about 130 miles, and it will cross the Nile at the barrage, where a substantial bridge is already nearly finished, having been made by French engineers with the object of damming the Nile for the better irrigation of the land—an attempt in which they have signally failed, after having spent an immense amount of money.—Times Alexandria Correspondent.

THE BISHOP DESIGNATE OF BOMBAY.—Oxford, July 28.—In a convocation held this day, the honorary degree of Doctor in Divinity was conferred on the Rev. John Harding, M.A., of Worcester College, the bishop designate of Bombay.

This is the final reduction of duties upon British plantation sugars. A further reduction of duty on the sugars mentioned in the second and third tables, will take place on the 5th of July, 1852, 1853, and 1854, respectively, when the import duties on all descriptions of sugar, whether foreign or colonial, will be entirely equalized.

A DESCRIPTION OF CHASSELOUP DE LOUBAT'S SYSTEM OF FORTIFICATION, as executed at Alessandria, has been published by Mr. J. S. Macaulay, accompanied by plates to illustrate his treatise. The impulse given to the study of fortification, which has been required as a necessary qualification in candidates for commissions in the army, induced Mr. Macaulay to think that a system prepared by Marescot and Chasseloup, and approved by Napoleon, possesses an advantage over mere theoretical systems, as a manual in field instruction.

BOOKS.

Tibet, Tartary, and Mongolia; their Social and Political Condition, and the Religion of Boodh, as there existing. By HENRY T. PRINSEP, Esq. London. Wm. H. Allen and Co.

THE basis of this compilation,—for Mr. Prinsep offers it as nothing more,—is furnished, as mentioned in the title-page, by the Souvenirs d'un Voyage dans la Tartarie, le Thibet, et la Chine, pendant les Années 1844, 1845, et 1846, of M. Huc, who, with M. Gabet, a fellow Lazarist missionary, performed a hazardous journey from Chinese Mongolia to H'lassa, the capital of Tibet, whence they were forced by the Chinese resident at H'lassa, the celebrated Ke-shen, to return through a dreary alpine country to the frontiers of China, and thence to Canton. A copious notice of this highly-entertaining work, which is not only full of curious incidents, but is written in a lively strain, appeared in the Edinburgh Review for April last.

Mr. Prinsep has made a careful résumé of this work, compressing all the materials contained in the two volumes which he required for his purpose into about 120 pages: he has prefixed a digest of the reports of early European travellers into Tibet and Tartary, and has appended some new matter concerning the Buddhist faith, or rather the Lamaic form of it, pointing out the resemblances which its ritual and observances present to those of Roman Catholicism.

There is a work which appears to have escaped the notice of Mr. Prinsep,—who justly laments the penury of our information respecting these countries,—which, we think, might have supplied him with much assistance. We allude to the Description of Tibet, translated from a Chinese account, written by a civil officer employed in the country, into Russian, by the Archimandrite Hyacinth, rendered afterwards into French, and republished, with some valuable notes, geographical, political, and philological, by the late M. Klaproth, in 1831. This work contains copious itineraries, as well as historical records of Tibet and the adjoining countries, the political and military institutions, and details respecting the manners, customs, and creeds of the people. It has a map of the country between long. 86° and 102° (meridian of Paris), and the parallels of 28° and 32°, with a chart of the route from Ching-too-foo, in Sze-chuen, to H'lassa, and a very curious coloured view of the city of H'lassa, its temples, and the residence of the Dalai-Lama, from a Tibetan original. The proper names in the work, the Archimandrite says, were written being by him from the pronunciation of the H'lassa Tibetans he met with at Peking, and they were adjusted to the true orthography of the Tibetan tongue by M. Klaproth.

A reference to this work would have enabled Mr. Prinsep to expand his narrative, and to correct the nomenclature, which does not appear to be very accurate in the original text, owing to the missionaries being forbidden to take written notes, and being obliged to write chiefly from memory. Thus the "Teeshoo Lomboo" of Capt. Turner, who knew nothing of the language, should be (as M. Huc writes the name) "Jashi Lombu." It is the place of residence of the incarnate divinity, Banjin, written "Punjin" by Turner, and "Bundshan" by M. Huc. The title "Nom-khan" should probably be "Nam-gial." The four kalons, described by M. Huc as state officers of the Nom-khan, are represented by the Chinese author as local governors. We have vainly endeavoured to identify various titles given by M. Huc with those contained in the Tibetan vocabulary furnished by M. Klaproth.

The reader must not infer from our remarks that we mean to depreciate the work before us; on the contrary, we think the public are much indebted to Mr. Prinsep for a very readable volume, which combines amusement with information.

All holders of Policies in India on the Profit scale, who may have paid five annual premiums, will be entitled, at the expiration of the fifth year, to a year's profit, calculated on the average of the preceding five years; such profit to be paid in cash, or to go in diminution of the future premiums payable, or to be added to the sum assured by the policy, at the option of the holder, after the calculation of the profits shall have been made in London.

After the expiration of 1851, the profits will be declared annually, and the payers of five complete annual premiums be regularly entitled to a participation therein, with a like option as to the mode of application.

Parties assured in India for Life shall, on their return to England for a permanency, and on the first half-yearly premium becoming due, be entitled to come upon the English rates of premium, and be placed under the rules and conditions of the Society there obtaining.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 14th of May, 1851, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.

*• The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assurers to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

We are again nearly in the predicament of Mr. Canning's needy knife-grinder,—

"Story! God bless you, I have none to tell, Sir!"

All the journals of all the Presidencies, with those of the Mofussil to boot, assure us that they have little or nothing to relate worth relating. The Bombay Telegraph alone ventures, though with hesitation, to notice a rumour of disturbances in Cashmere, in which four European officers had been murdered; withholding credence, however, until this intelligence shall have been confirmed. The report was communicated in a letter from Wuzerabad, dated the 22nd June, which states that, on the 21st, the officer in charge of the Secret Intelligence department received information from one of his emissaries, that he had been recently to Bhimbur (a place on the border of Golab Singh's territory), and had found the passes shut, in consequence of a disturbance which had broken out in Cashmere; that four European officers had been murdered by the order of Golab Singh's youngest son,—either for killing a cow or for insulting some women of the country; and that four of Golab's regiments were in open mutiny.

Letters from the Nizam's capital concur in representing that the long-expected crisis is instant; that General Fraser, the British resident, had received positive orders from Simla, to demand payment of the debt due from his Highness forthwith, and in the event of nonpayment, to take immediate measures for occupying certain districts; namely, Berar, Neildroog, and Shorapore, the revenues of which are estimated at thirty lakhs annually. A grand durbar was to be held on the 1st July, when the Nizam, it was expected, would exert his utmost efforts to postpone the evil day, by paying down part of the debt in cash, and pledging his jewels for the remainder. The Madras Athenaeum observes:—

The purport of the letter from the Governor-General to the Nizam is variously reported. The most generally received version of it is to the effect, that the cession of territory, or rather we ought to say, perhaps, the usufruct of territory, has been peremptorily demanded in discharge of the debt of eighty lakhs due by this state to the British Government; that the Nizam immediately appoint an efficient dewano; and that the treaties between the Hyderabad Government and the Honourable Company be declared void. With regard to this latter article, we quite concur in the opinion of the Madras Spectator, that "this news is too good to be true;" for as that journal rightly points out, the dissolution of the Nizam's existing engagements might, if turned to good and legitimate account, prove the political salvation of the Deccan, as his highness could then at once shake off that intolerable incubus on the resources of the country, saddled upon it by the present treaties,—the Contingent. But, to quote the words of our contemporary, "Lord Dalhousie has no intention of letting the Nizam slip his neck out of the treaty noose, although he may seek to work on his fears and ignorance, by threats which his highness does not see the meaning of. Freed from the British yoke, a vigorous and able sovereign, backed by judicious ministers, might yet renovate the expiring kingdom of Hyderabad, and place it once more on that footing among the states of India which it used to occupy."

The matter appears to have proceeded so far as the arrangements for the administration of the assigned districts. Berar is to be placed, according to report, under the charge of Mr. Dighton; and the other two portions under the management of Capt. Bullock and Capt. Meadows Taylor.

The kingdom of Oude remains in the same condition as it has languished in for many years past. The revenue is coming in very slowly, and some of the districts are in a disturbed state, that of Nunpara for instance, where the collection of the revenue is obstructed by a dispute for the raj between two Ranees. The younger had taken possession of the raj, and the king's troops were sent there to protect her; but the dependants of the elder Ranee, who was obliged to fly to the Company's territory, made inroads into the zemindaree, burning and plundering the villages, and destroying the fields. The king had married, and brought his bride from her father's house, which, with everything in it, he claimed as her dowry. The minister was disgusted, the more so, as his niece, the first queen, had had influence enough to persuade his Majesty not to grant him the expected document of exemption from paying up the revenues due to the treasury. The first queen had, however, been obliged to present her nuzzer to the bride. A letter from Lucknow says:—

Many people think that the minister, instead of having made his position more secure by marrying his daughter to the king, has gained nothing by it but enemies. His niece, the first queen, and mother of the princes, is of course very angry with him for having given her an equal and a rival, who is particularly favoured by his majesty. The young begum has a larger monthly allowance than the first, and her title, "Akhter Begum Nawab Moolky Oudh," proves her superior rank. The elder queen would, in fact, now have little influence with her consort, if the dowager queen, the king's mother, did not intercede for her with her son.

At Peshawur, Kohat, and throughout the Punjab, the country was tranquil and the troops were healthy.

The rumour of the death of Dost Mahomed Khan, of Cabul, was revived: the Agra Messenger had been assured by "a trustworthy correspondent at Loodiana," that authentic information had reached that station of the death of that ruler. Reports were afloat at Agra to the effect that a vast number of Sikhs were in the neighbourhood, waiting an opportunity to rescue their countrymen from the Agra jail.

The Eastern Star informs us that the Governor-General positively leaves Simla in progress to Calcutta in the middle of October: his lordship was to visit Lucknow on his way.

The Commander-in-Chief, who remained at Simla, is said to be still engaged in considering and maturing the "compulsory mess" system, which, though likely to be very unpopular with the army at large, is understood to be recommended generally in the reports of commanding officers of corps.

A letter from Simla states that the much-talked-of tunnel on the Hindostan and Tibet road was opened on the Queen's birth-day, when the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces, attended by Mr. Edwardes, superintendent of the Hill States, walked through it.

The neglect, so long deplored, of the health of European troops in India, is now beginning to be remedied: the bulk of the Europeans in the Bengal army are now quartered in the hill stations in the N. W. Provinces; barracks for the accommodation of a large body of Europeans in the Madras Presidency are to be constructed, at the expense of 30,000, on the Neilgherries; and investigations are in progress at Bombay to ascertain whether Paunchgunny or Poorundhur be the more suitable station, or whether it might not be judicious to adopt both. The expensive barracks built for Europeans at Hyderabad, in Scinde, will hereafter remain tenantless, and none but natives be ever quartered away from the coast, unless in cases of emergency. At Bombay the Colaba barracks, long notable from their liability to fever, are to be abandoned, and quarters built on the fine airy romantic ridge of Chinchpooogly Hill, near Parell, six miles from the fort, and 200 feet above the sea close by—the railway is on one side, the boat accommodation at Sewree on the other.

The Calcutta papers report that the Committee on ship-burning continued its investigations, but nothing had been made public as to the progress or results of its inquiries; and that Mr. C. D. Fox, a gentleman employed on the railway survey, a young and quiet Englishman, had been sentenced to twelve days' imprisonment by the authorities of the French settlement Chandernagore, for having assaulted a sepoy upon duty.

The communications between India, Europe, and the further East, exhibit a gratifying tendency to acceleration. The Bombay Times says:—

The Moozuffer, with the mails of the 7th June, reached Bombay on the 2nd July, having occupied twenty-four days, thirteen hours, on the transit. This is the fastest mail by twenty-seven hours, the fastest save one by three days, that has ever reached India yet from Suez. The rate of steaming was no more than nine and a half knots, with a strong wind in favour,—at twelve knots, the speed now attained by many of the Peninsular Company's steamers, three days would have been saved. The present speed is mostly due to the improvement by twenty-four hours of the transit through France. The railway would enable the mails to pass through Egypt in eight in place of sixty hours, as at present; and, with these two sources of acceleration alone, we should have the transit from England shortened by four days, and our mails transmitted on an average of three weeks, giving return of post for eight months in the year from all parts of India. The P. and O. Co.'s steamers begin in September plying from Bombay direct every second month; they will be of great importance to those bringing goods overland, the war packets at present carrying nothing but samples and packages, and charging for these the most extravagant prices. Assuming the average voyage by the Cape to be a hundred days, it will save us two-thirds, our brethren only half the whole time, and assist in effecting the celerity of mail conveyance now so desired. Steam communication betwixt Bombay and Kurrachee, and thence all up the Indus to the centre of the Panjab, will be opened so soon as the stormy season is over.

The public benefits to be derived from the establishment of a direct steam communication between India and China have been exemplified in the return to Calcutta of the P. and O. Co.'s steamer Erin, with news from Hong-Kong only fifteen days after date.

The China papers continue to speak of the insurrection in the Kwang provinces as alarming, and as exhibiting tokens of an approaching crisis in the affairs of the Celestial Empire. The pretender, who had been proclaimed emperor, and had issued an imperial almanack, which his emissaries were circulating throughout the country, had arrived within 200 miles of Canton.

The intelligence from the Cape of Good Hope is by no means of an encouraging character. The Caffres were becoming more numerous and bolder than at any time during the war; the Hottentots in Lower Albany had risen, meditating the expulsion of the colonists, and the creation of a Hottentot nation; whilst the levies of this race, chiefly from the Western districts, had determined, with whatever motive, in spite of the most alluring offers, to return to their homes at the close of the period of their enlistment, the 10th July, which would deprive the Governor of a large portion of his field force, and that upon which he chiefly relied, as best adapted for bush-fighting. In the meanwhile, Sir H. Smith had been compelled to remain at King William's Town, sending out patrolling parties, it is true, but unable to take any measure of a decisive character. The Cape Town Mail says:—

The accounts from the frontier become at every post more painful and disheartening. It is evident that the colonists there find themselves unable to make head against the increasing hordes of the enemy. The most active and resolute leaders are falling one after another. Field-Cornet Gray, in Lower Albany; Field-Cornet Bower, of the Kaga; Field-Cornet Albertse, of Albert District, have all been struck down within a month. We receive week after week lamentable news of the murder of travellers, the burning of homesteads, the devastation of wild tracts of country, where the horizon is described as lighted up at night by the flames of deserted farmhouses. There is no wonder that, as our correspondent writes, a general gloom prevails at Graham's Town. The frontier colonists have certainly done almost all that has been done during the last six months, and that is not a little, for the defence of the colony. But there is no concert, no system—in a word, no Government. Our enemies are united, and the colonists, the troops, the military officers, the civil authorities, are working, if not absolutely against one another, at least without co-operation or sympathy. The levies are about to return to their homes. Sir Harry Smith, who lately announced the approaching close of the war, has ordered a European force of 300 men to be embodied at Graham's Town for a term of six months; but, under the present system, there is no apparent reason why the war should not continue for six years. Yet, with a colonial parliament, uniting all classes of the colonists in a phalanx for the common defence, and with Sir Andries Stockenström as commandant-general of the colonial forces on the frontier, this wretched contest, which is wasting the best blood and devouring the wealth of the border districts, might be brought to a close in six weeks.

The latest advices from Cape Town mention a rumour that the Home Government had consented to grant a constitution to the colony, and that "a constitution will shortly be granted to the Cape, based in its main provisions on the '16 articles' of the popular plan of government."

By this mail we have received our missing files from Bombay, from the 25th May to the 4th June. It appears that the Sesostriis steamer, which left Bombay with the Southampton mail on the 7th of June, found herself compelled from stress of weather to make for Ceylon, where she put in for repair on the 18th. The Calcutta steamer expected to carry on her mails, and which she was to overtake at Aden, had passed on the 13th, and reached Aden on the 24th.

BENGAL.

THE NIZAM'S TERRITORY.

To tell you that the Arabs have again been busy putting men to death, is to repeat an often-told tale. These murders and affrays originate in money dealings, and are considerably multiplied, as the Arab is now the universal capitalist, being engaged, either for himself or for another party, in almost every money transaction. No man now lends money without the protection of an Arab's name; in fact, the Arabs are concerned for or against every person of note in some one of the several capacities in which their power can be useful.

The recent events have been the slaughter of six sepoy of the line by a party of Arabs, acting under the direction of Bowanee Sing. Thirty of these sepoys were going to Bowanee Sing's to exact payment, by such means as they possessed (a dunga), of an order for ten thousand rupees, which they held from the Nizam's Government. The Arabs were sent forward to meet them, and before they had reached Bowanee Sing's house, or had committed any overt act to justify hostility, they were fired upon by the Arabs—six men fell, the rest dispersed. This affair occurred in the city of Aurungabad. I hear the Arabs were hired by Bowanee Sing for this special service.

The house of Meer Bubbar Ali was attacked by his Arab creditor, Sultan Ghalib. The house was carried against a few Arabs who defended it for Meer Bubbar Ali. Four Arabs fell on either side, and, as usual, Meer Bubbar Ali's house being situated in the city, two unconcerned persons suffered. There is something peculiarly atrocious in this attack; Meer Bubbar Ali is a member of the starving Khas Ressala, who have been sitting for three or four months at the Nizam's gate, making it their petition that they would relinquish all their arrears, provided the Nizam would satisfy their Arab creditors; and Sultan Ghalib might at least have refrained from violence till the result of their application, likely to produce money, and to enable the Khas Ressala to discharge a portion of their debts, had been ascertained. His Highness's order to Sultan Ghalib is significant of his approbation; upon what part of his conduct that can be made to rest, His Highness can alone tell—"when you have done with him, send him to me."

Events are occurring here, produced not by the volition of the Nizam, nor devised as a systematic measure of government, but forced upon it by the unavoidable necessity of the case, which promise to extricate the Nizam from his pecuniary difficulties. It is no less than the forcible extinction of all his liabilities, whether on account of loans or arrears of pay due to the different departments of the state. If upon the total ruin of the Nizam's finances depended the interference of the British Government, the day of its advent is protracted. The state of affairs is in this position. The debts to the Sahoo-kars and dispossessed Talookdars are virtually extinguished, inasmuch as they are never heard of. The arrears of the Munsu-bdars are equally extinguished; they are too powerless even to ask for them, and as assignments on the revenues are allotted to them for a portion only of their pay, it may be considered that (though not professedly) retrenchment has been made in the department. The line, a large body of infantry, have accepted the condition proffered them by Ghoolam Hyder Khan, of receiving fifteen days' pay in each month, for five months, and subsequently their entire pay. This gives example for future measures, which I presume will be still more encroaching upon their rights. Not a word has been said of their heavy arrears, which may also be considered as extinct. The Khas Ressala, a body of remarkably fine men, after a protracted mutiny of some three or four months, have consented to receive two lacs of rupees, guaranteed by Ghoolam Hyder Khan, and subsistence money for the future at the rate of twenty-five, instead of fifty-five, rupees per man. Not a word has been said of the balance of their arrears; and that also is in effect extinct, and a large retrenchment made by restricting their demands for the future to subsistence money. The humiliating acquiescence of these brave men is not imputable so much to fear of the Nizam's power in his Arabs, as to the wretched condition of their class, for which there is now no maintenance throughout India. A considerate review of the new attitude assumed by the Nizam's government will instruct the British Government, that if, in expectation of its speedy dissolution from its financial embarrassments, it has permitted the evils which prevail to exist for a time, that expectation must now be foregone; and the British Government will have nakedly to bear the odium that it did not redress the wretchedness and misery, which never could have arrived at this height without the support which its power carries to the Nizam. The subsidiary force is the safeguard of the Nizam's person and authority; were it not here, the Nizam might suffer, but the condition of the corporate body would be meliorated by any revolution, whether Abdoola Bin Ali or Ghoolam Hyder Khan were at the head of it.

JUSTICE AT CHANDERNAGORE.

Mr. C. D. Fox, employed in the railway survey, in the neighbourhood of Chandernagore, is now experiencing the blessing of living under the tri-colour flag. He is incarcerated a second time in the Bastille of that place. There exists in Chandernagore a municipal regulation, prohibiting any one from riding his horse at a canter on the Esplanade after a certain hour in the evening. Mr. Fox, in blissful ignorance of the local rule, was cantering along the forbidden ground, when he was stopped, as we hear the story, by a sentry, who pointed his bayonet at him. The horse shied, and Mr. Fox, in high indignation, called the Sepoy a "soor," the abomination of the Mohammedans. He was immediately collared by the Sepoy and others of his comrades, and pulled off his horse, and conveyed to a miniature black hole, where he remained for thirty-six hours. He was then accused by the Sepoy before the procureur, of having "assaulted a sentry upon duty," but the fact of assault was most strenuously denied by Mr. Fox, supported, as we understand, by other English gentlemen present on the Esplanade. The Sepoy, however, showed a bruised hand, and called upon his comrades, who gave their evidence in his favour. There is a curious report current as to the real origin of the bruised hand, but, as we do not wish to be libellous, we refrain from publishing it. The procureur considered that there was sufficient evidence to send him up for trial, and he was accordingly tried in the "Supreme Court," and condemned to twelve days' imprisonment, and he is now undergoing this sentence. It is difficult to speak of this transaction without appearing to violate that respect which is due to the representative of a foreign power; and we fear that there are few who hear of it who will not at once regard it as a vindictive proceeding, and believe that the French authorities are now making Mr. Fox expiate the indignity committed on the French flag by the forcible abstraction of Mr. Arrathoon.—Friend of India, June 19.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Hindustan, with the London Mail of May 24, reached Calcutta June 28.

FOUR INFANTRY MAJORS are about to take Major Bygrave's bonus.

SPORTING ACCIDENT.—The following is an extract of a letter from Nagode, Bundelcund:—"Capt. Robertson, of the 22nd M.N.I., met with a very severe accident the other day when out shooting with Lieut. A., at Dunnow, where they were on command. It seems Capt. R. and Lieut. A. got separated in the jungle, when R. suddenly heard a tremendous shouting, but thought nothing of it till he saw an enormous wild boar charging down on him; he let fly at him, but with no effect (with small shot); the animal knocked him over, very fortunately on his stomach, ripped him up from side to side, and inflicted an awful wound. I am sorry to say Capt. R. is in a very bad way." Englishman, June 14.

CONVERSION.—At Benares, the parents of a boy, who had taken up his dwelling with a missionary and declared his conversion to the Christian faith, lately brought an action before the magistrate for his recovery. The magistrate, Mr. Tucker, on the score of the boy's nonage, issued an order that he should be restored to his natural guardians. The decision has delighted the natives in the neighbourhood.—Hurkaru.

THE CHURCH AT SERAMPORE, recently a Danish settlement, has been made over to the Bishop of Calcutta, who performed divine service in it on the 31st May. The church was erected in 1805, through the exertions of the Governor, the Marquis of Wellesley, giving Rs. 8,000 towards it.

RAPID SAILING.—The City of Glasgow has arrived at Calcutta, from the river Clyde to the Sandheads, in only eighty-seven days!

FEMALE EDUCATION IN INDIA.—We learn with much gratification from a native correspondent, that the education of females is favourably regarded by the natives across the water. A number of young men have undertaken the tuition of their wives and other female relatives, and in several cases with no inconsiderable success, as it is mentioned that some of these Hindoo ladies are able to aid their sons in preparing their school lessons, while one of them has actually on hand the translation of a series of Bengalee tables, and that she has already gone through half the task. Thus the mustard seed of native female education sown by Mr. Bethune is fast putting forth shoots in all directions.

THE EX-AMMERS OF SCINDE located in the Deccan seem destined to misfortune. A fire breaking out on the premises where they were residing, they have been burnt out of house and home, besides losing property to a large amount.

AN OFFICER at Agra is before a court of inquiry on the charge of cramming food from his table down the throat of his kid-mutgar.

MARTABAN.—CAPTAIN IMPEY.—News of a really exciting nature came to hand lately, and which we lay before our readers. Capt. Impey had been located at that place during many days, and been seen moving about in the Burmese costume. It is stated that having failed to establish himself at Zimmay as a merchant, to accomplish which object he had betaken himself to the Shan country in the first instance, he contemplates a trial at Ava, but whether of the same pursuit he had followed among the Shans, or has other objects in view, we have not been able to obtain satisfactory information. That he is on his way to the metropolis of Burmah, we have reason to believe. While at Martaban he is said to have corresponded with some of his friends at Maulmain, the nature, however, of which we have not been able to ascertain.—Maulmain Chron., June 4.

JOTEE PURSAUD.—It is asserted in the Delhi Gazette, that the interest of Mr. Lang in the Mofussilite has been transferred to Lala Jotee Pursaud, and that a new editor has been engaged by the new proprietor.

STAFF EMPLOY.—We have been informed that the Honourable the Court of Directors have sanctioned the absence of seven officers, three captains and four subalterns, from each regiment of native infantry on staff employ.—Delhi Gazette, June 28.

The Bangalore Herald says:—"Capt. Impey, 31st N.I., was at the Burmese town of Martaban (on the opposite side of the river, and two miles from Maulmein) last month. He was visited daily by his old friends, &c., from Maulmein, who reported that his manners are as pompous and magnificent as ever, his spirits as good, and his expectations as grand. He announces that he has been solicited to take the command-in-chief of the Burmese army at Ava!"

SALES OF LAND FOR REVENUE ARREARS.—A table, appended to an official return of the revenues and expenditure of the N.W. provinces, should be forwarded for the especial information of Mr. Chisholm Anstey, that gullible worthy, who was told by somebody, and who repeated it in the Commons House of Parliament, that a great proportion (we think he said one-half) of the landed property of India was yearly sold for the recovery of arrears of revenue. This table shows that the number of land sale sales that took place in one year was eighty-one, and that of these even sixty-nine were sold in one division alone (that of Allahabad, Banda being the chief defaulting district), leaving the ridiculously small number of twelve estates sold for rent in 1848-49, throughout the vast districts of Delhi (1), Meerut (6), Rohilkund (3), Agra (5), and Benares (3). The revenue due by these estates at the time of sale was Rs. 81,072.—Lahore Chron., June 21.

GANG ROBBERIES.—The Englishman calls the attention of the Government to the astonishing frequency of gang-robberies, and the boldness with which they are executed. "Not a tenth of those which happen find their way into the newspapers," observes, "yet those are quite enough to strike any one with the insecure state of the country. The pet service itself is seriously alarmed. It sees that its own incompetence is thus loudly proclaimed, and that the rapid impoverishment of the country will soon begin to tell upon its finances. The service has accordingly put forth a feeler or two through its Serampore organ, in the hope no doubt of leading the investigation, which must take place, into its own channel. The true remedy will of course be purposely overlooked, but it must come out at last." There has been a dacoity at an indigo factory at Subdulpore, and the dacoits were so audacious that they did not move off until after fourteen shots had been fired at them from a double-barrelled gun.

MOVEMENT OF CORPS.—We understand that the 7th regiment N.I. now stationed at Loodiana, will march for Meerut at the close of the present year, in accordance with the requisition of Major-General Sir Joseph Thackwell for another native regiment. It is said that the company of sappers at Loodiana will be removed to Meerut at the same time, and that this, with the departure of the 8th N.I. on escort duty with the camp of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief during his cold weather tour, will do much towards the long-talked of "breaking up" of the former station. The troop of horse artillery will, it is said, go to Jullundur, and all the force left will be one regiment of irregular cavalry, the 17th, and the 40th regiments of N.I.—Ibid.

THE LATE COLONEL SKINNER'S FAMILY.—We are glad to hear that the Court of Directors have taken into their favourable consideration the claims of the late Colonel Skinner's family. It is said that instructions have been sent out to India, that Captain Hercules Skinner, at present in the Nizam's service, is to succeed his brother, Captain James Skinner, in the command of the 14th irregular cavalry. Captain James Skinner's health, we regret to hear, will, in all probability, oblige him to retire before long.—Delhi Gazette, June 25.

MAJOR MACTIER.—The Calcutta journals inform us, that Major Mactier has filed an action for libel in the Supreme Court against Mr. Lang, proprietor of the Mofussilite, on account of the passage reflecting upon that officer's reputation for courage, which occurs in the report of Mr. Lang's speech in defence of Jutee Pershad. The action is brought against Mr. Lang, in his character of newspaper proprietor, rather than in that of advocate, in order, we suppose, to avoid the legal sophism, that an advocate has a right to utter anything he pleases, till checked by the judge. The jury have found a true bill against Mr. Lang.

DHULEEP SING.—The Citizen is informed, upon the very best authority, that the report of the little Maharajah Dhuleep Sing's having eaten a beefsteak is without foundation. He has, however, it is said, expressed an earnest wish to be educated in the principles of the Christian faith, but his present guardians are careful that he should keep within the restrictions of caste, at least for the present.

COMMISSIONERS OF INQUIRY IN INDIA.—While Mr. Anstey is proposing to Parliament to send out a Commission of Inquiry to India, to examine the state of the public administration. Lord Dalhousie appears to be anticipating his wishes by the appointment of a number of local commissions to investigate the state of various departments of the public service. In fact, we may almost affirm that the establishment of these commissions has been the distinguishing feature of his lordship's administration. They are composed of some of the ablest and most experienced public servants, who are authorized to call for all evidence, oral and documentary, and to make a searching inquiry into the state and condition of the public establishments placed under their revision. They are of far greater utility than any commissioners sent out from England could possibly be, for their ignorance of the subjects submitted to their investigation would deprive their reports of all value. These local commissions have also the additional merit of being economical. Within the last fifteen months, we have had no fewer than five such commissions in Calcutta.—Friend of India, June 12.

MORMONS.—A correspondent of the Hurkaru announces the arrival of a Mormon Elder in Calcutta, and says he has established himself near Cooly Bazar, with the view of setting up a branch church in Calcutta. He has already secured some converts, and professes to work miracles.

CHERRA POONJEE.—The Eastern Star, with reference to the libel case at Cherra Poonjee (see p. 412), and its incidents, has the following remarks upon the state of society at that station:—"We are convinced that ere long the Bengal Government will find it advisable to believe, that beneath the guarded grumbling of the press, some unpleasant truths are concealed, truths which at 5,000 rupees a piece would be rather dearly told, and which here as elsewhere are silenced by the terrors of the law, the force of power, and the weight of influence. We have said that the social condition of society in and about the Cossyah hills is not creditable to the Anglo-Indian Community residing there, and we may add that even this itself is so anomalous and unwholesome, as to convey at once an impression that there must be something very wrong indeed to have induced the state of disunion and feud in which its members have lived and died for the last few years, as the following items will prove. A clergyman hunted down, ruined, and dead of fever contracted in the jungles, where he had taken refuge; an assistant to the political agent permitted by Government to retire; a hostile message in Calcutta exchanged between a Cherra and a Sylhet official on leave; an assistant surgeon removed by the Commander-in-Chief from his regiment at the former place; a judge by the Bengal Government from his bench at the latter; a magistrate superseded from the same place; enmity, jealousy, feud, hatred, party spirit, litigation and estrangement, which have torn the society into factions and cliques, and ranged those who ought to dwell in friendship and union together in fierce array and mutual defiance and uncharitableness. This is the actual state of society in the Cossyah hills at the moment we write, and will remain as an example to the primitive people who inhabit them, of English unanimity and our social virtues, till evil influences shall be extinguished, and a clear stage and no favour in a political, mercantile, and social sense, thrown open to every one, civilized or savage."

CAPTAIN CLOSE.—The Court of Inquiry, to investigate the conduct of Captain Close, with regard to the trooper of his corps, has closed its proceedings. It is understood that Captain Close has fully refuted all the charges.—Englishman, July 2.

THE LATE MR. C. TUCKER.—During the past week, the community in Calcutta has had to mourn the removal by death of Mr. Charles Tucker, one of the oldest civilians at the presidency, having come out in the year 1806. He has, for many years, been the senior judge of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, where, by his conciliatory demeanour, and his close attention to business, as long as his health permitted, he acquired the esteem and confidence of all parties. He was not possessed of the eminent judicial talents with which Colebrooke, and Harrington, and Stuart, and Courtnay Smith, adorned the bench, but his long acquaintance with the laws and practice of the court, and his invariable amenity of disposition, served in no small degree to prolong the public estimation in which that tribunal had been held. In the private walks of life, he was endeared to a large circle of friends by the warmth of his attachments, and among the public in general, he was chiefly known by his large charities, and his unflinching encouragement of every plan of benevolence, without distinction of sect or denomination. About three years ago, he was constrained to go to the Cape for his health, when he ought at once to have retired to his native land. The great benefit he derived from his residence there tempted him to return to Calcutta, under the impression that there was yet a twelvemonth's work in him. But he soon found his strength fail, and he returned only to die.—Friend of India, June 26.

SHIP-BURNING.—We are informed that a clue has been obtained whereby to trace the incendiaries in the destruction of the Ariel, and that several merchants of the Bazar are concerned in the affair. We give the report as it reaches us, without vouching for its correctness; but our hope goes with it, inasmuch as one good example made will have the effect of teaching all concerned in these nefarious transactions that, however detection may be temporarily escaped, there is no real safety, and the hour of retribution will arrive when, perhaps, it is least expected.—Cal. Morn. Chron.

ON-DITS.—The sub-treasurer of Calcutta, Mr. J. J. Harvey, is likely to be shortly transmogrified into post-master-general of India, on a salary of Rs. 42,000 a year.—The chief magistrate of Calcutta, Mr. Mills, takes a commissionership, and is likely to be succeeded in the office of chief magistrate by Mr. Elliott.—It is in contemplation to abolish the office of marine surgeon, and to place that branch of the service on the same footing as the rest of the service in regard to medical advice; a moiety of the staff salary, however, it is intended to assign over for affording medical aid to those attached to the dockyard at Kidderpore.

A DEPLORABLE ACCIDENT occurred to a party of convicts. Seventy were on their march from Beerbhoom to Hazareebaugh. At Govindpore, while they were in a tent, all chained to one another, the tent caught fire, and the pole fell down upon the prisoners. Twenty-six of these poor wretches were at once burnt to death, and seven more are in a dying state. Nineteen others are scorched, but, under medical treatment, are expected to recover. If the guard placed over them had been on the alert, not a single life perhaps would have been lost. The men who thus neglected their duty will, we hope, meet the punishment they deserve.—Harkaru, July 2.

THE BENGAL MILITARY FUND, we learn from the Calcutta Morning Chronicle, having been audited by two professional accountants, has been declared to be in "a most satisfactory condition."

NORTH-WEST BANK.—The directors of this bank have called a special meeting to consider the following propositions:—1st, To receive and adopt the report of the examiners, as recommended by the directors. 2nd, To decide on the removal of the head office to Calcutta. 3rd, To abolish the board of directors, and place the management under a manager and trustees. 4th, To authorize alterations in the deed to the extent of the above requirements.

AGRA BANK.—The directors and shareholders of the Agra and United Service Bank have advertised their determination to register that institution before the 1st of January next.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Head-Quarters, Simla, June 9, 1851.—As the removal of the chief medical officer of her Majesty's service to Umballa, and the extension of the Bengal presidency, render it impracticable for all officers, who apply for sick leave out of India, to appear before that authority, the Commander-in-Chief in India is pleased to cancel the general order of 11th July, 1826.

Officers applying for sick leave out of India will appear, whenever practicable, before the inspector-general of hospitals at Umballa, or before the annual boards, at which he presides, at Meerut or Ferozepore.

In all cases where this is not practicable, the officer applying for sick leave out of India may appear before a board, to be convened by the officer commanding on the spot.

The medical officer, who attends the sick officer and gives the usual certificate, recommending him for leave out of India, should not be a member, and must not in any case be president of the board of medical officers assembled to examine and report upon the state of the officer's health.

THE CASE OF STREENAVASSA.

In our number for April we adverted to the conversion to Christianity of a Brahmin youth of high caste, a quondam student at the Government seminary at this presidency. An event of this nature invariably brings to the surface sentiments of anger, hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness, which at other times are scarcely apparent in the character of the ignorant and bigotted Hindu population of Madras; but the excitement usually speedily subsides, and attracts little sympathy not only from unprejudiced Englishmen, but even from the small minority of educated and enlightened natives. In the case, however, of Andrew Streenavassa (as the youth under notice has been christened), his reception within the pale of Christianity has been followed up by a proceeding which seems likely to give a sort of permanence to the anti-Christian sensation among the Hindus, and, we think we may venture to add, the propriety whereof is seriously questioned by even the Christian community itself.

with the exception of its extreme missionary section. We refer to the measures that have been adopted to remove the convert's wife from the society of her relatives, in order to enforce her cohabitation with her husband. This was effected through the medium of the Supreme Court; a writ of habeas corpus was obtained on the plea that the girl was kept in duress by her parents; on her appearance, and declaration that her stay with her friends was voluntary, which was of course a sufficient answer to the writ, she was ordered by the presiding judge, Sir W. W. Burton, to be delivered to her husband, upon which decision she was, with the "force and arms" of a constable, given into his hands. We have ever entertained the deepest respect for the liberal views and pious feelings, too often found in painful antagonism, expressed on various occasions by our worthy pious justice, with a warmth that guarantees their sincerity; but we must avow our conviction that his anxiety to protect the Christian husband's rights from sustaining damage through his adoption of a new faith has blinded him to the violation done thereby to the feelings of the heathen wife. Greater regard, in our opinion, was due to the religious principles in which Lutchmee had been educated, to which also she still adhered, and to the requirements of Hindoo law, which on the loss of caste practically abrogates the marriage contract, the outcaste becoming civilitur mortuus. Streenavassa was injudiciously counselled when advised to obtain forcible possession of his wife's person; the violence offered to her conscience became a bitter satire on the boasted liberality of the creed to which he had just vowed adherence; but we chiefly regret that his inconsistent attempt to coerce his unfortunate spouse into a life abhorrent to her religious prejudices received the sanction of a British judge. The acerbity of feeling excited by the affair among the natives will not easily be assuaged.—Athenæum, July 9.

We have rarely seen a case of conscience in India, in which it was so difficult to determine upon which side justice really was to be found. On the one hand, there cannot be the smallest doubt that Sir W. Burton's judgment was legally correct. He had nothing whatever to do with the ultimate result of his decision, and nothing with the consequences to either wife or husband; his duty was simply to decide whether the husband had, by his adoption of Christianity, forfeited those rights over his wife, which he undoubtedly possessed as a Hindoo, three months before. Upon this point there could be no doubt. The justice of the rendition of the wife in this instance is, however, a very different question; and with all possible desire to see full and absolute religious liberty extended to every convert, we must say we think that the liberty claimed for the one party infringed upon the liberty that ought to have been conceded to the other. The question has two sides. It was not merely whether Streenavassa Iyengar had forfeited his rights or not, but also whether Lutchmee Ummal should be compelled by positive force to do violence to her feelings of caste, and thereby not only isolate herself from the only human beings for whom she entertained an affection, but also from what she believed, however groundlessly, to be the only true hope of happiness in a future state. It is true, Sir William Burton endeavoured to provide for this difficulty by an order; but it is perfectly imperative. That the woman's caste will be broken by some of the thousand and one acts which must occur in a compulsory domestication with one of a different creed, there can be no doubt, and she is therefore compelled either to become a Christian, or to remain an outcast, disowned by all parties. To use even the smallest degree of compulsion in making converts is so repugnant to the true spirit of Christianity, that we cannot look upon this prospect with any degree of complacency. On the other hand, the question is still more complicated by the fact that the Hindoos themselves, anxious as they are to remove her from the contamination of her husband's society, will not allow the marriage to be dissolved, so as to enable her to marry again, but intend to condemn her, at fifteen, to perpetual widowhood, with all its temptations, dangers, and degradation. On the whole, we cannot but conclude that while the rights of the Christian husband have been fully preserved, those of the Hindoo wife have been, to some extent, unnecessarily compromised.—Friend of India.

LAW.

INSOLVENT COURT, June 13 and 14.

In Re Cornelius Traveller.—Mr. J. B. Norton appeared for Mr. Traveller, and Mr. Salmon for the opposing creditors, Vencata Rama Gundur and Oochema. Their debt amounted to Rs. 3,000.

Mr. Traveller, examined by Mr. Salmon.—I am editor of the Madras Advertiser; for the last thirteen years I have been editor of various papers in Madras. I came the last time to India as a private individual, in no particular capacity; I came the first time as a missionary, in connection with the London Mission Society; in 1819, ceased to have any connection with the society; in 1824 or 1825, had a class in a school, besides my missionary pay. On leaving the mission, I opened a school, by which I made a respectable sum, sufficient to allow me to return home; returned to Madras in 1838, and again opened a school, having lost my money by building speculations. About six or seven years ago, began dealing in rice. Never had any connection with the courts of law, or the Sudder Court; I am neither a vakeel, nor am I personally known to the present judges of the Sudder Court; I have never had any connection, nor have any influence, or am in any way acquainted, with the mode of proceeding in that court; have drawn petitions, but never presented them officially to the Sudder; generally sent them to the secretary, but never to the court. I have taken petitions to the registrar, and explained the facts of the case; civil and criminal petitions have been drawn by me, but I generally confined myself to criminal cases. Remember Oochema being brought by the dubash in 1847; she came about her son, who was in jail at Arcot; the communications passed through her agent, Vencata Gundur, the dubash acting as interpreter; spoke to her only on the first instance; never uttered the words "don't be afraid. I will procure the release of your son in three months, if you will give me 4,000 rupees;" never said, "I will deliver your son in three months, send 3,000 rupees;" never heard Oochema say, "If my son be not released, you must return the 3,000." The whole transaction was carried on between Vencata and my dubash. The communication made to my dubash was that Oochema's son was in jail at Arcot having been taken with a band of robbers, and sentenced to seven years' transportation; and that they could establish the fact of his innocence; they requested me to represent the case to the authorities; I consented to draw up a statement of the case and send it in, for which Oochema promised, in the event of the liberation of her son, to give me 2,000 rupees. I understand Tamil: we were all in the same room, but everything passed through the dubash,—he spoke in Tamil. I received a statement of the case from the agent, but did not draw out the petition promised till after the dubash had received the 2,000 rupees. I never had any of this 2,000, 1,000 was sent to my son-in-law, Captain Price, for which he gave me a promissory note; had given the dubash orders to borrow 1,000 rupees for my son-in-law. I did not know he got it from these people. I gave an acknowledgment to Govindur for the money. If I succeeded, the 2,000 was to be mine; if unsuccessful, 1,500 was to be returned, including my son-in-law's 1,000. Have often been applied to for the money, when I generally stated that I should be able to do something for them when my goods were sold. Those goods and Captain Price's promissory note I assigned to Mr. Franck, who sold them. Again and again they have been told, they would come in for their share when the proceeds were realized—knew nothing of the Rs. 3,000 until applied to by Mr. Stewart for that amount. At the time I assigned the Tamil note for Rs. 3,000, I was engaged writing; the dubash stated that it was a mere Tamil copy of the Rs. 2,000 note; he said Vencata wished to have it; he did not understand English; it was not read to me, and when I signed I did not know its contents. I did not ask to have the English note returned. Captain Price's note is entered in the schedule as part of my estate. Rungasawmy, the dubash, owes me Rs. 10,000. I have kept no accounts, and have received none from him; I can, however, prove by indirect means that he has received this money. At the time the Rs. 2,000 were paid, I was indebted to the Agra Bank in the sum of Rs. 15,000, my income was 100 pagodas per mensem, out of which Rs. 80 went to the bank; did not have this income at the time of the Rs. 2,000 transaction. I received, as editor of the Athenæum, Rs. 350, Atlas, Rs. 200, and Circulator, Rs. 140, afterwards reduced to Rs. 100; sometimes made Rs. 60 or 70 by writing petitions, memorials, &c.

Examined by Mr. J. B. Norton.—Mr. Stewart, the attorney, was proprietor of the Atlas; it was a losing concern, and died unnaturally, not paying its editor; brought action of libel against Mr. Stewart, who apologised, paid the costs, but not my salary. I do not know whose opposition this is. Vencata told me he has no wish to inconvenience or injure me; that he knows my dubash alone is to blame. Govindur came to me with a view of obtaining intelligence of Rungasawmy; he also asked me to appear as a witness against Rungasawmy, and made the same depositions before the Court as I had made to him. I was subpoenaed on Rungasawmy's insolvency, and related the same then as I have to-day. The whole arrangement with these people was made by the dubash; he said they agreed to give me 2,000 rupees if successful, and if unsuccessful 500 rupees for my trouble. It was Rungasawmy's duty to keep the books relating to the rice dealings; the 10,000 rupees owing by him was from other resources distinct from rice; he never rendered me any accounts. I am a married man with three children all grown up, one is unprovided for. My income from the paper and other sources is only 125 rupees per mensem; if my accounts were all realized, they would more than cover my debts. Rungasawmy has cheated me in every way.

Re-examined by Mr. Salmon.—Mr. Stewart did not pay my salary to Mr. Branson. I know I am not in debt to Mr. Branson for any law proceedings, because he has put Mr. Stewart down as a debtor for 480 rupees. Mr. Branson never threatened me.

Vencata Rama Govindur, examined by Mr. Salmon.—Remember coming to Madras with Oochema in the month of February, 1847; presented two or three petitions to the Sudder Court. In September, 1847, Oochema was sitting under a tree in the Sudder Court compound, bemoaning the incarceration of her son, when Rungasawmy, passing by, asked her what was the matter; he on being told said, "Come to my master; whatever he says, the Court will accede to." We went to Mr. Traveller's; Rungasawmy went in and brought the gentleman out to us. Mr. Traveller said, "Is it your son that is imprisoned?" Oochema replied, "Yes, my only son, who is unjustly transported for seven years; I pray you protect." Mr. Traveller asked for a copy of the petition, which I read, Rungasawmy translating it into English. The gentleman then said, "Your son has become mine; I will cause his liberty and give him to you, if you will give me 4,000 rupees." Oochema then said, "I have not so much," he said, "Give me 3,000," in which she acquiesced, and said, "We will write to our village and get it; I pray you will protect my son." Mr. Traveller then said, "If my labours are fruitless, you must give up 500 rupees." This was not acceded to, and we went away. In a short time Rungasawmy ran after us, and said, "If it is fruitless, give up 200 rupees." I said to the woman, "If you labour and not attain the object, it is only 200 rupees; let it go." This was agreed to, and we promised the money in ten days. I called upon the gentleman a few days after to ask what measures had been taken; he said, "When the money comes, we will take measures." In Dec., myself and Oochema went to Mr. Traveller's house with 1,000 rupees, in exchange for which the gentleman wrote a note of hand for 2,000; at this time only 1,000 was paid. We prayed the gentleman to commence proceedings, but he said he would not till the whole 3,000 rupees were received. Ten days after this, we took 2,000 more to Mr. Traveller's; the time for payment of the hoondie had not expired; we said, "We will get the money and pay it to you; pray begin." He said, "Speak to Rungasawmy; give it (the hoondie) to him; he will get it discounted; let the loss be mine." We gave the money to Rungasawmy by the order of Mr. Traveller. We had the gentleman's note of hand for 2,000 rupees; for the other 1,000 rupees Rungasawmy gave a Tamil note. The first 1,000 was paid into Mr. Traveller's own hands. Mr. Traveller did not procure the release of Oochema's son, for in a month after presentation, the petition was dismissed; he (the son) died in prison on receiving the news that the money was gone. When I asked Mr. Traveller for the money, he said he would pay in three months, but he never did so. Oochema, myself, and one Timucha, went to Mr. Traveller's house; we said, "If you do not pay, we will take you to the police." Mr. Traveller said, "Not so, I will get money somewhere; I will get 2,000, Rungasawmy will get the rest." We agreed to give one month's time, if he (Mr. Traveller) and Rungasawmy would give a bond for the amount; they gave the bond. The gentleman said, "Do not make complaint in any other place." I never said, "I do not wish to inconvenience you; I shall proceed against Rungasawmy only;" Rungasawmy was present, and acted as interpreter at all the interviews.

Examined by Mr. Norton.—I was examined by you when Rungasawmy came before the Insolvent Court. I said the same then as now. I did not accuse Mr. Traveller of having a guilty knowledge of the transaction. Would not have lent the money to Rungasawmy alone; Rs. 1,000 in notes were paid by myself to Mr. Traveller. At Rungasawmy's trial I did not state anything against Mr. Traveller, or about the terms entered into with him, or anything about him, because I was not asked. Mr. Traveller was examined at Rungasawmy's insolvency. I got Mr. Stewart to subpoena him; asked Mr. Traveller to speak the truth; to state what property Rungasawmy had.

Robert Franck, examined by Mr. Salmon.—Mr. Traveller made an assignment of his goods to us; we acted and paid dividends under it to the full extent of the money in hand, by the sale of property only; never paid any dividends to Vencata or Oochema. The name of Oochema was placed in the list of creditors. Her portion was held by us; we gave them notice that it was at their disposal in the month of March, 1849. She never called for it. In April, as desired by Mr. Traveller in writing, we divided the sum pro rata amongst the other creditors.

Oochema, examined by Mr. Salmon.—Remembers coming to Madras about the release of her son, and being taken to Mr. Traveller. (This witness's evidence was precisely similar in effect to Vencata's, except that she stated, that Mr. Traveller tapped her on the head and on the hand at the time he assured her of her son's return in three months. In respect of the bond for Rs. 3,000, she said that Mr. Traveller ordered Rungasawmy to write a Tamil bond, and that when he had done so, Rungasawmy read it out first in Tamil and then in English; Mr. Traveller then read, looked at, and finally put his signature to it.)

Examined by Mr. J. B. Norton.—The first time we went to Mr. Traveller's, Rungasawmy took the petition, read it in Tamil, and explained it to the gentleman in English. Mr. Stewart has not spoken to me since I was in court yesterday. Vencata came to my house at night; he did not say a word about these proceedings. I have not paid any court fees, or anything to Mr. Stewart. Vencata is my younger aunt's son. Mr. Stewart will not call on me for costs; I am liable to Vencata; I have promised to pay.

The three bonds, one for Rs. 2,000, signed by Mr. Traveller; one for Rs. 1,000, signed by Rungasawmy; and one for Rs. 3,000, signed by both of them, were read by the clerk of the court.

Sir W. Burton.—I must say unprejudicially that this is a very painful case which I am to decide. It would be so if I had the honour of addressing a jury. It is doubly so when the duty falls on myself; but I must perform my duty, however painful to myself, by doing so. The matter is, that the insolvent has obtained a large sum of money on the false pretence that the liberation of a person from custody on a criminal charge could be obtained through influence. I am quite free to decide this case on the evidence of to-day. Nothing will be said of the former action. I did not then take into consideration what was not before me to decide, whether Rungasawmy had anything to do with Mr. Traveller. Rungasawmy was then charged with fraud, and I gave Mr. Traveller the credit that he had exonerated himself by his oath. I formed no opinion; it was not that I thought him free from censure, but it was to give him the credit of honesty when he was not accused of committing a fraud. The gentleman who conducted the case on that occasion is too well skilled to put into the examination anything not connected with it. And on the examination of Vencata he exercised a sound and good discretion. The present case I must speak of as one of conspiracy. Rungasawmy has been found guilty on evidence which left no doubt on my mind; and if there was any doubt the present evidence would confirm it: that he has obtained money from these people on false pretences, and whether his employer (for so Mr. Traveller is) is guilty, or not. The charge is one of the vilest, worst sort of pretence that a European can make use of, if it was made use of, that he could obtain the liberation of any criminal whatever. I hope you all will never listen to such a thing. Those who obtained money on such a pretence are guilty of a great crime, and those who pay are fools. Now in this case Mr. Traveller is the first witness, and the account he gives here forms my hinge on which to try the truth of the other witnesses. That Rungasawmy was his agent for several purposes is proved, though not for this especial purpose; but he took them (these people) to Traveller; and on his evidence, it is admitted that he took up their case on the dubash's information, and so admitting his agency for this matter; that he received a large sum from them, is proved by the promissory notes. It is proved, and that in a most natural way, from the evidence of Mr. Traveller himself, that he was acquainted with Tamil, both to read and write; I cannot therefore believe that he was unacquainted with what were the contents of the instrument. The money that was received, according to the evidence of the three persons, was Rs. 3,000; Rs. 1,000 was paid in bank notes to Mr. Traveller, and the Rs. 2,000 to his agent Rungasawmy by his orders. Rungasawmy is the keeper of the accounts for Mr. Traveller, by his (Traveller's) own showing, and that he himself never kept any. What is this sum received for? Would a gentleman who held himself out as a legal practitioner receive such a sum for a like purpose? He would not. Any European gentleman in office who should receive one rupee for such a purpose, would be turned out with disgrace from her Majesty's service. Mr. Traveller denies all that is said about the release of the son. (His lordship here read Mr. Traveller's evidence.) The statement of these people, then, with respect to note "A" in Tamil. Traveller's account of that is, that it purports to be a note for Rs. 3,000, signed by himself and Rungasawmy, and that he signed it without knowing its contents. Now, on the other hand, the statement is quite contradictory. The first witness, Vencata Rama, relates what took place when the first note was given; he represents Traveller as addressing them. The first note is dated 8th December, 1847, for Rs. 2,000, from Traveller alone; the next is dated 18th December, 1847, and from Rungasawmy alone, for Rs. 1,000. It is said this Rs. 1,000 was paid to Rungasawmy, and not to Traveller. Mr. Traveller had given a note for Rs. 2,000, and on the other sum being paid on the 18th of December, Rungasawmy gives another. There is nothing inconsistent in the statement. Whether Traveller or Rungasawmy received the money, does not matter: they are both implicated. Then, on the 18th July, 1848, both of them sign for Rs. 3,000 in Tamil. I have already adverted to Mr. Traveller's account of this. I cannot take his statement, that he did not know its contents, when he understood Tamil; and the other parties were, it seems, in his presence. I am of opinion that the whole Rs. 3,000 was received. The evidence of Oochema is very clear on this point, and the manner of giving it carried with it a conviction, which is not always felt when hearing the statement of a native; she gives the same account about the meeting with Rungasawmy, as Vencata does; both the parties have sworn that the insolvent spoke to Oochema in the Tamil language. I must say, that both the insolvent and Rungasawmy were joined together in this matter; that they did obtain Rs. 3,000, on the expectations held out. I am of opinion that this pretence was false; that Traveller had no power; that it was a sum received for a purpose he was to fulfil, well knowing that he could not do so. All I have to consider is, whether this debt was contracted under these false pretences. I wish I could say to the contrary; it would be far more comfortable to my mind to acquit this gentleman, than to convict him. I rest directly on this, whether Rs. 3,000 was received: that is the contract, that is the debt admitted; he does not set down Rs. 500 as due to him, and therefore I do not trouble myself with the inquiry, but simply confine myself to this, that he was to have Rs. 3,000 for the liberation of Oochema's son. I must therefore punish Mr. Traveller as the Act directs. I have already imprisoned Rungasawmy, and I can make no difference between them. The law makes no difference, and I will make none; if I did, the European would be visited with the heavier penalty; but as they joined in the same transaction, so shall they be joined in punishment. Under the 51st section, I order that the insolvent be discharged from the debts of the other creditors, and that he be so discharged from the debt of this opposing creditor at the expiration of twelve months' imprisonment.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MR. MACLEAN.—It is not often that a member of the civil service is compelled to resort to the Insolvent Court for protection against creditors, and it is, therefore, matter of some interest to observe how the Court deals with a case of such very rare occurrence. It will be remembered that a civilian at Madras, Mr. Alexander Maclean, passed through the Insolvent Court, went to England, and applied for the annuity of 1,000*l.* per annum, to which he was entitled from length of service. This, after some demur (for Mr. Maclean did not get through the Court without some rough handling, and six months' imprisonment), was granted; but he was not permitted to draw the annuity until the Insolvent Court should decide upon the amount to be deducted for the benefit of his creditors. Mr. Maclean's debts amounted to 35,000*l.*, and his assets to 1,000*l.* per annum. The Court was of opinion (p. 417) that 250*l.* a year was a just and proper amount to set aside for the liquidation of his debts. The creditors will receive 250*l.* a year, which is about three-quarters per cent. interest on the sum due to them, while Mr. Maclean will be in the receipt of the very handsome annuity of 750*l.* We had an idea that it was the practice of the Insolvent Court to calculate the amount absolutely necessary for the livelihood of the insolvent, and award the residue to the creditors. If the Court had fixed upon 400*l.* a year as a sufficient sum for the maintenance of Mr. Maclean in England, no one would have thought that gentleman harshly treated, and, considering the large amount of his debts, 600*l.* a year to his creditors would not have been beyond the mark. It appears to us to be an extremely unjust decision, and calculated to form a very bad precedent. The Insolvent Court has been established for the protection of debtors, but that protection should not be carried to an undue extent. The interests of creditors should also be regarded, and in this case the Madras Court has grossly neglected them.—Delhi Gaz.

MURDER OF LIEUT. JOHNSTONE.—The backwardness of the Madras authorities in taking steps to promote the discovery of Lieut. Johnstone's assassin, was noticed in last month's Overland. A notification has since been issued, offering on the part of Government a reward of a thousand rupees for such information as will lead to the conviction of the murderer, and a free pardon to any approver not being the man who actually fired the fatal shot. The sum thus offered, added to the reward promised by the officers of the 3rd Light Cavalry, makes an amount of Rs. 2,000 now held out to induce a disclosure: we trust it may be successful.—Athenæum, July 9.

The Madras Spectator intimates that there is a strong probability that a reduced havildar, named Khader Khan, was the murderer of Lieut. Johnstone at Jaulnah, and that the threatening letters were written by him with the view of disarming suspicion. This havildar was the man first suspected, as there was a belief that he had escaped from confinement at the exact time when the murder was committed. Moreover, a nondescript weapon, between a musket and a pistol, has been found in his possession. The natives of Secundra, to whom the men of the regiment are well known, received intelligence of the affair long before the dawk arrived, and they with one accord declared that the perpetrator of the murder was Khader Khan.

ON DIRS.—If not actually settled, it is highly probable that H.M.'s 51st, K.O.L.I., will be embarked for Aden towards the close of the year, and the destination of the 43rd N.I. is also likely to be changed to the same place. A report is generally prevalent in military circles that the commands of the northern and southern divisions are likely to become shortly vacant, owing to the ill-health of the present incumbents. The adjutant-general of the army, it is believed, will succeed to the command of the Hyderabad subsidiary force, Brigadier James being advanced to the command of the northern division.

THE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH.—Considering the distance in the march of public improvement at which the benighted presidency lags behind, not only Europe, but even the other members of the political family of India, the announcement that steps have been taken for the laying down of an experimental line of electric telegraph at Madras will, we know, cause many eyes to be lifted up in sceptical astonishment. We fancy we can hear the irreverent scoffs which this attempt to follow in the steps of progress within the normal interval of delay, will call forth; from many an infidel lip will fall the ironical sneer,—why the electric telegraph is only yet an infant experiment at Calcutta; a lustrum hence it will have all the flavour of untried novelty at Madras. Incredible as it may appear, it is fact nevertheless; a commencement has been actually made, and before our next number issues from the press, we expect to witness a trial line in full play between the Government house on the Mount Road and Fort St. George. This attempt to introduce the Madras-see to one of the most striking and useful inventions of modern science, is the fruit of a suggestion by Mr. Kenrick, the clever and deservedly popular secretary of our Polytechnic Institution. A large portion of Mr. Kenrick's leisure time having been devoted to the study of electricity and galvanism, he has been led to the conclusion that the insulation of the wires employed in electric telegraphs is unnecessary. It is plain that an immense saving in the expense of laying down these invaluable media of rapid correspondence may be effected, should subsequent investigation on a more extended scale than the resources of a private individual could admit of, confirm the result of Mr. Kenrick's necessarily limited observations; and it is with the view of testing the correctness of that result, that the Madras government have, at the request of Mr. Kenrick, consented to bear the expense of laying down a double set of wires; one set protected in the usual manner and the other naked, between the termini already mentioned. The experiment is regarded with peculiar interest.—Athenæum, July 9.

BOMBAY.

SIR CHARLES NAPIER AND MR. ARRATOON.

In our republication (p. 455) of the official correspondence on the subject of the charges of Sir C. Napier against Lord Dalhousie, in the matter of Mr. Arratoon, the following were omitted:—

[Reply to Mr. Arratoon's letter of the 18th February.]

Foreign Department, Simla, 23rd October, 1850.

SIR,—The Most Noble the Governor-General, having had under consideration your letter of the 18th instant to the address of Mr. Secretary Elliot, now directs me to inform you in reply that he is willing to afford you every facility in procuring timber from the Himalayas, if you will show that you have sufficient means for carrying the project into execution. You should place yourself in communication with the Board of Administration at Lahore, who will be instructed to receive and report upon your proposals.

With respect to Bombay, his lordship leaves you to treat with that Government respecting its own wants.

I have, &c.

(Signed) E. C. BATLEY,
Under Secretary to the Govt. of India, with the Governor General.

Accordingly, on the same day a letter was addressed to the Board of Administration, enclosing to them a copy of the correspondence that had passed, and calling their attention to Mr. Arratoon's project.

His Excellency Sir C. Napier observes that "Government has nothing to do with a man's means. Commerce requires to be nursed like a child." If Mr. Arratoon had simply asked the protection for his trade, which is said to have been denied to him, the Government would have made no mention of his means. But it was not protection only that Mr. Arratoon asked. He asked for privileges—he asked for Rahdaree Perwannas, which it is well known would, if they had been granted, have carried him into the territories of Maharajah Goolab Sing and every other rajah in the Hills, with powers at once over persons and prices. Mr. Arratoon, moreover, asked for contracts—for contracts extending over a series of years. These were the things that Mr. Arratoon asked from the Government of India—not merely protection. The Governor-General apprehends the Governor in Council will be of opinion, that his lordship would have dealt lightly with the public interests if he had granted to this person privileges and powers in our own and other states, without first ascertaining whether he was able to fulfil the ends for which they were to be granted to him. And his lordship apprehends the commercial community of Bombay would have little regarded him as an ordinary man of business if he had involved the Government in contracts without first instituting inquiries as to how far the contractor had the means of performing the large contracts he proposed to undertake.

Subsequent events have shown that the usual and reasonable precautions which his lordship took were not without necessity.

On learning the statements put forth respecting the alleged discouragement of Mr. Arratoon, the Governor-General requested the Board of Administration to inform him what had passed since his proposals had been made known to them. They were further requested to state any facts connected with Mr. Arratoon with which they might be acquainted.

The annexed reply from the board will show that Mr. Arratoon has never communicated with them at all since the letter of the Government was addressed to them while it furnishes some previous particulars regarding him.

To Sir Henry Elliot, K.C.B., Secretary to the Government of India with the Governor-General.

Lahore, 11th March, 1851.

SIR,—I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 669 of the 3rd instant, with its enclosure, and in reply to state that the letter of the 23rd October from Mr. Under-Secretary Bayley, to which you refer in the 20th paragraph, was duly received, but that Mr. Arratoon having made no communication to the board, the letter was simply recorded as having been sent for the board's information, and no order passed upon it.

The president of the board has known Mr. Arratoon for ten or eleven years. Capt (Sir Henry) Lawrence, when in charge of Ferozepore, gave him assistance in carriage to enable him to take supplies to the army in Afghanistan. Mr. Arratoon made large profits by those ventures, but is not believed ever to have had any capital at command, or to have been on a higher footing than that of a small shopkeeper. He is, however, active, enterprising, and very plausible. About 1840-41, he induced Capt. Lawrence to give him a lease of waste lands at Ferozepore, on light clearance terms. Afterwards he promised to set up a sugar-mill—in short, was full of schemes, but carried out none of them. Latterly he seems to have turned his attention to cutting timber on the Sutlej and Beas, and to have traded in a small way on those rivers; but not content with the legitimate profits of a free trader, he appears from his letter to your address of the 18th October to have asked for orders from Government, which, if granted, would have made him virtually master not only of the forests of the Hill chiefs, but of their subjects too. The board remark, that his not having to this day acted on the very liberal orders of the Governor-General of the 23rd October, appears to show that he has not the capital required, and possibly he is afraid of coming into contact with the board, and having his propositions tested.

On the river Chenab, running as it does through Maharajah Goolab Sing's territory, Mr. Arratoon cannot have a single timber. If he has timbers on the Beas, there are no rajahs or chiefs to interfere with him, and even on the Sutlej, if his wood is actually on the river, he no longer requires aid.

The perwannas he asks for are to aid him in getting wood at his own prices, to force labourers into his service in petty states where Government has the utmost difficulty in obtaining the number stipulated by treaty for roads or carriers, and, in short, not only to avoid entering the market, but to command it.

I have, &c., &c.,

(Signed) P. MELVILL,

Secretary to the Board of Administration.

Lahore, 11th March, 1851.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Mozuffer, with the London Mail of June 7, reached Bombay July 2. The Mail of May 24 reached Bombay June 27, per ship Ayrshire.

SIR C. NAPIER AND MR. ARRATOON.—In looking more narrowly into the matter of the Napier and Arratoon question, we find the misstatement wished to be corrected by the Governor-General much more flagrant than it at first sight appears. So far from any refusal of any sort, qualified or unqualified, ever having been given, or any delay having been incurred, the Governor-General replied on the 23rd October to Mr. Arratoon's application of the 18th, that he "is willing to afford him every facility of procuring timber from the Himalayas," and desires him to lay his propositions before the Board of Administration at Lahore, as on them would devolve the responsibility of details; the Board were addressed on the same day on which Mr. Arratoon was replied to, with a despatch in doing business any merchant might admire—a Government official would in most cases regard it as incredible. Mr. Arratoon never once brought the matter before the Board at all, and of course never could have received the refusal he complains of. He seemed to have thought that he had done quite enough in broaching the scheme, that he might make a boast of; and finding himself in all likelihood quite incapable of carrying it out, must convert it into a grievance, and set himself up as a martyr to gubernatorial caprice, and go off to the grand receiver and promulgator-general of grievances, the retiring Commander-in-Chief. The only portion of the Chenab, it seems, on the banks of which timber is to be found, is within the dominions of Goolab Singh, and from this the Lahore Commissioners state, in their explanations, it is impossible for them to have a log: the Jamoo chief has never been greatly addicted to permitting strangers to enter his dominions, or meddle with his property.—Bombay Times.

THE CAVES OF ELEPHANTA.—We regret to learn that the lately-excavated sculptures in the caves of Elephanta are already beginning to be defaced and broken,—the lions brought last season to light being as much injured already as some of the older carvings, which have stood the brunt of 300 years' exposure to the hands of the European destroyer. Nothing can be more execrable than the English habit of defacing everything in the shape of statuary, ornamental or antique, that comes within reach: our folly in this way degrades us in the eyes of civilized nations.—Ibid.

THE RAILWAY EMBANKMENT from Byculla to Sion at present presents a somewhat striking appearance,—there it runs, a long, perfectly uniform, even rib of ground, across the country, flanked on each side by a formal canal, about half its own breadth, of still, translucent water. Just beyond this, the cultivators are all busy at work; ploughs and bullocks to be seen in all direction, and the rice-fields everywhere, not yet stirred by the ryot, begin to look green. The surface of the railway embankment is perfectly sterile, beaten hard down by the rain, and not a green blade is to be seen on it, but it is covered with countless sea-shells, and pieces of kunkur of the most fantastic forms. Here and there, it is full of great holes, from three to six inches across, and running several feet into the soil, from the bottoms of which peep every now and then tremendous frogs. These holes have already occasioned considerable irregularities here and there, and by the next fall will probably cause more. We wonder it did not occur to the contractors to protect the embankment by strewing it over with a little grass-seed; stable-litter, even, in the smallest quantity, would have answered to admiration. It is the first heavy burst of the monsoon that is so injurious to new earthworks, and the protecting influence of loose straw, and afterwards still more of grass-roots, is quite astonishing; they would, besides, have secured a good crop of forage in October, and not been at all in the way. The suggestion may be acted on, and the contractors may rely on it as being worth attending to: we speak from experience.—Ibid.

THE FIRST TRAMWAY IN INDIA.—The first Tramway ever constructed in India for the regular conveyance of goods and merchandise, was opened on the 15th of May, 1851. It is not a very large or a very important undertaking, but it deserves a notice as being the first undertaking in India—with the exception of some temporary lines at Roorkee—in which rails have been laid down to facilitate the transit of heavy goods. The tramway we are alluding to has been constructed at Dholera, a place in Guzerat, to the north-west of the Gulf of Cambay, nearly opposite Broach, and the great depot for Guzerat cotton, under the directions of Captain Fulljames, of the Guzerat Irregular Horse, the funds being supplied by the merchants of the district, apparently rather with the view of improving the transit for their goods, than with any intention of making the line a directly profitable undertaking. The total cost was 45,000 rupees. Its length is only four miles and a half, stretching from the great cotton depot to the head of the creek, from which the cotton is shipped in bales.

ON-DUTY.—There is a probability of a vacancy occurring soon on the general staff of the army, and it is said Brigadier Foster Stalker, C.B., and A.D.C. to her Majesty, at present commanding the Rajpootana field force, will be appointed to fill this important command.

SUTTEE.—The Bombay Telegraph mentions that there has been a case of Suttee in the Dhoolia Talook of that presidency. The woman seems to have been quite determined in her resolve to immolate herself, resisting most obstinately all her husband's importunities before his death. On her determination becoming known, she was regarded in the neighbourhood almost with adoration, and was applied to for illumination as to "coming events." Great consolation appears to have been derived by her dupes from a prediction that the British rule would soon cease, and be succeeded by another raj. It is gratifying to reflect that nine of the Brahmins who were aiding and abetting at the murderous ceremony are expiating their zeal in imprisonment and hard labour.

CEYLON.

The leading topic of the present month is the agitation amongst the coffee-planters in aid of the movement by their friends in London against the adulteration of coffee with chicory, and with other abominable compounds. The first meeting at Kandy has been followed by others in outlying districts. A memorial has been adopted, with numerous signatures attached. The planters ask only for what is reasonable and right. They demand no restriction of fair and free trade; all they ask is, that the law of the land should be permitted to take its course so as to put an end to frauds equally injurious to the growers and consumers of coffee, and to the imperial revenue.

The rat has again made its appearance on the higher estates about Dimboola and Rambodde. The loss from swarms of this creature threatened at one time to be great, but an effectual remedy seems to have been discovered, in the application of coal-tar to the stock of the tree.

The Governor is still in Kandy, but a token has at length appeared of an approaching meeting of the Legislative Council in the shape of a draft of ordinance published in the Gazette. We believe the people of Colombo are beginning to think it high time for the Governor to appear amongst them.

Copious monsoon rains have fallen, accompanied occasionally by high winds. The weather is now hot and close, with the promise of more rain. Cholera has continued to prevail amongst the natives at Jaffna. In other parts of the country there has been no particular degree of sickness.—Colombo Observer, July 11.

SINGAPORE.

The Singapore Free Press, of the 30th May publishes a statement of the receipts and disbursements of that settlement for the year 1850-51, in the three departments of Civil, Military, and Convict establishments, which is much more satisfactory than the last. Six or eight years ago, Singapore was enabled to pay the expense of all its establishments in every department; the receipts subsequently fell behind the expenditure to the extent of nearly Rs. 150,000. This was a very insignificant deficiency for a settlement so invaluable in a commercial point of view; but still it exhibited a state of financial deterioration which it was desirable to correct, and we now find that the receipts and the disbursements are nearly equal: Receipts, Rs. 435,311; Outgoings, 435,460. More than three-fourths of the revenue is derived from the Excise farms; the amount of quit-rent is Rs. 21,198, and the fees from the Court of Judicature, Rs. 20,823. The entire expense of the Government of every kind, civil, political, criminal, fiscal, marine, medical, and ecclesiastical, amounts to Rs. 240,212, and the expenses incurred for the military serving at Singapore, Rs. 195,248. Still, the statement exhibits a net deficit of Co.'s Rs. 57,942.

The same paper contains an account of an exploit of some Chinese pirates, which rivals in daring and success some of the achievements of the buccaneers. The rajah of Sangora, a little state tributary to Siam, and situated near the foot of the Gulf of Siam, died some months ago, and was succeeded by his brother, who proceeded to Bangkok to receive his investiture, leaving his nephew as his representative. About a month since four Chinese junks made their appearance at Sangora, and two of them came within the harbour. From these two a large party of men were landed, who proceeded at once to the rajah's house, and seized his nephew. So well were their measures taken, that they were able to obtain a ransom of fifteen thousand dollars, with which they got clear off. The plans of these pirates are, it appears, most systematically laid, and they invariably sail with regular papers, to be used upon any emergency.

The Sirangong district, near Singapore, is said to be still fearfully infested with tigers. It is reported, according to the Singapore Free Press, that the number of persons killed in that district alone in two months is fifty-five, and two more Chinese sawyers were carried away in the beginning of May.

THE INSURRECTION.—The Tartar Prime Minister Sai-shang-ha, whose departure from the capital for the seat of war, was mentioned in our last monthly summary, has halted on the borders of the Hunan province (the one adjoining Kwangsi), from whence he tells his lord and master, that he finds himself surrounded by rebels to sovereign authority, whom it is necessary to put down before proceeding further. Tah-tung-ha is said to be sick. Of the other commissioner we hear nothing. Wu-lan-tai, lieutenant-general of Tartar troops at Canton, left his garrison about a fortnight ago, with intention of coalescing with the commissioners. The pretender emperor is reported to be at present stopping at Sin-chau, a departmental city in Kwang-si, having a water communication with Canton, from whence it is distant about two hundred miles. In a letter from one of his followers (from which extracts will be found in another place) we find it stated that Teen-teh is himself at the head of the rebel forces, whom he led to victory "in the middle term of the third month of the present year" (about two months ago), "when ten thousand of the Government troops were destroyed, being hemmed in a narrow pathway through a wood in a mountain pass." Having been duly proclaimed Emperor, Teen-teh dates the commencement of his reign from the month of September of last year, and has published an almanack, which his emissaries are busy distributing in various parts of the empire. In Kiang-si, the province between Hunan and Fokien, we hear that great demonstrations are made in his favour. These unmistakable signs of a fast approaching crisis in the affairs of the Celestial Empire induce an inquiry into the tenure of the Tartar dynasty. Aware that they became masters of the country in a manner similar to that by which Saxons obtained a footing in England, we are led to inquire how the dynasty has, for two hundred years, successfully resisted any attempt to displace it. Is its numerical strength so great—its superiority in arms so overwhelming, or its tact at government so effective, that all desire of having a native of the country for a ruler is effectually eradicated from the minds of the great mass of the people? Are the Manchous, the Mongols, and the Chinese so blended by intermarriage that it is difficult to discriminate between the one and the other? We believe the reverse of this to be the case. There has been but little general intermingling of the races. In the course of inquiry into this subject, we have ascertained, with some degree of certainty, that the whole of the Imperial army does not exceed three hundred thousand men of all arms. These are made up of three classes, Mantchou Tartars, Mongols, and Han-keun. The latter, and the largest section of the body, is composed of descendants of Chinese, who deserted from the Ming, to aid in placing the Tartar on the throne. It is true that the country boasts also of a militia, reputed to amount to nearly a million of men; but of this million it is supposed that more than half is made up of common rabble, pressed into active service as occasions require; and upon whom, in a pitched battle, there may not be placed the slightest dependence.—Friend of China, June 23.

ST. HELENA.

The Advocate or St. Helena Weekly News gives an account of some extraordinary occurrences said to have taken place on board the Levenside. The vessel had on board Capt. Vesey, of the Royal Artillery, in command of a detachment of his corps, and Capt. Neill, aide-de-camp to the expected governor, Sir Emerson Tennent. She arrived on the 29th of May, and it appeared that on the 15th of that month, while at sea, Capt. Campbell, the master, ordered the booby-hatch to be closed. This was done, and immediately afterwards Capt. Vesey summoned the troops under his charge to take off the hatch, in defiance of the master's order, which was immediately done. On the 17th, a squabble appears to have taken place between one of the soldiers and the ship's carpenter. Capt. Vesey insisted that the carpenter should be punished, but Capt. Campbell would not punish the man. This led to some sharp words between them, and it is asserted that Capt. Vesey said he had a superior force on board, and should use it when he thought requisite. This language appears to have excited Capt. Campbell. At half-past 8 o'clock at night the captain ordered the booby-hatch to be put on; Capt. Vesey said it should not be done. Capt. Campbell then pulled out a pistol, and told Capt. Vesey that, if he attempted to interfere with him, and prevent any of the crew obeying his orders, he would shoot him through the heart. Upon this qualified threat being uttered, Capt. Vesey called his men to fall in round the hatchway, and ordered the bombardier to go below for arms. This order was instantly obeyed, and as soon as Capt. Campbell saw the arms being handed up the hatchway he went forward, seized hold of one of the muskets, and commanded the soldier to give it up. The soldier refused; whereupon a struggle took place for the gun, when some one called out "Seize him!" on which several soldiers seized the captain, threw him against a boat, and wrenched the pistol out of his hand, as well as the musket he attempted to take from the soldier. Capt. Vesey then ordered his hands to be lashed behind his back, and, it appears, at the instigation of Capt. Neill, he was hurried into the hold, and secured to a stanchion. The next morning he was unlashd from the stanchion, and had strong chains fastened to his wrists by padlocks. In this position he was kept in the hold twelve days and nights, an armed sentinel keeping watch over him. He was not allowed to communicate with the crew, nor was he released, even on the arrival of the vessel in the roads, till the police went on board and caused him to be unchained. Immediately Capt. Campbell was seized and forced into the hold, Capt. Vesey commanded one of the soldiers to turn every one of the crew out of the cabin, and take possession of it, which was done. He then seized the ship's papers, and the vessel was navigated by the mates, by direction of Capt. Vesey; and on its arrival at St. Helena, on the 26th, he went on shore and obtained a warrant against the master on the charge of assault and attempted murder. Capt. Vesey's alleged reason for not allowing the booby-hatch to be closed is, that the weather was hot, and that it would endanger the health of the men, about thirteen in number. After four days' investigation, Capt. Campbell was committed for trial on the charge of assault with intent to murder. Information was then laid by Capt. Campbell against Capt. Vesey and others of his passengers for piracy and illegal seizure of the ship, which information was taken by the magistrates.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The advices from Cape Town, which are to the 4th July, upwards of a month later than the previous intelligence, afford no further prospect of a termination of the Caffre war. Sir H. Smith remained at King William's Town, contemplating, it is said (as was said before), a decisive movement; Sandjili continued on the Amatola mountains; but the Caffres seemed to increase in numbers, and to have lost none of their audacity, whilst the insurrectionary movements of the frontier Hottentots had acquired a more formidable character. The objects of these rebels, it is stated, were the expulsion of the English colonists from that portion of the frontier districts which is situated between the Sunday's, the Baviana's, and the Keiskamma Rivers, and the occupation of that territory by the Hottentots, as an independent nation. These intentions, however, have not been entertained by all the Hottentots in that part of the country. Many of them have remained faithful, in spite of the defection of their comrades and relatives. The Hottentots in other parts of the colony have had no concern in the plot whatever, and have evinced no symptoms of disaffection. "The rebellion, taken in connection with the general hostilities," observes the Cape Town Mail, "cannot be properly termed a war of races. As the Fingoes have been contending against the Caffres, so, in like manner, the Hottentot levies from the western districts have been fighting unhesitatingly against the rebellious Hottentots of the frontier. The insurrection, in fact, is a purely local affair, affecting only a comparatively small and well-defined section of the colony."

The Hottentot levies had determined to return to their homes at the close of their term of enlistment, July 10th. The Governor assembled them at King William's Town, and offered them, for a re-engagement of only six weeks, a bounty of 1*l*. and a full suit of clothes, which offer they declined, persisting in their original determination of returning. An abstraction of so large a portion of the force in the field, and that portion the parties best adapted for bush-fighting and Caffre warfare, must be a serious loss to the Governor.

The Cape Town Mail of July 1st contains a review of the occurrences, which we present in an abridged form:—

In the latter part of May, the marauding bands of Caffres in the frontier districts became more numerous and bold than they had before shown themselves. It was generally reported that the Caffre chiefs had given orders to their people to enter the colony, and subsist in it by plunder during the winter, which had just commenced with unusual severity. This plan had been vigorously pursued by the enemy, with disastrous consequences to the colonists, whose losses of property have been heavy. Many valuable lives have also been lost; three field-cornets and several other respectable inhabitants having been killed in repelling the inroads of the plunderers. Sir Harry Smith has continued to send strong patrolling parties of troops into the enemy's country. The Caffres have thus been kept on the alert, and have been prevented from entering the colony en masse. A few have been killed, some of their huts destroyed, and some hundreds of cattle captured. It does not appear, however, that any injuries have been inflicted upon them at all commensurate with those which the colony has suffered from them. The rebel Hottentots among them, however, are reported to be in a bad plight, from want of provisions, and a few had come in and surrendered. A party of frontier colonists, proceeding with a train of waggons from Cradock to Graham's Town, were attacked by Caffres, several of the waggons plundered, the oxen carried off, and one of the defenders, Mr. G. Dyason, son of the resident magistrate of Bathurst, was killed. Two days before, Mr. Whiting, another traveller, proceeding to Cradock, was attacked in his wagon, and stabbed to death with assegais. The accounts from the north-eastern boundary represent that part of the colony as in a deplorable condition, from the ravages of the Tambookies.

At the last accounts from head-quarters (21st ult.), Sir Harry Smith was preparing for an important movement, said to be a patrol intended to continue for two or three weeks, and to be commanded by his Excellency in person. It is rumoured that Sir Harry entertained the hope of being able by this movement to bring the war to a close.

Gen. Somerset was engaged, during the latter part of May, in attempting to expel the Caffres and rebel Hottentots, who, under the chief Mocomo, had taken possession of the Kat River settlement. The major-general's force, however, proved to be insufficient to accomplish this object. The enemy constantly withdrew as he advanced, and returned upon his traces whenever he retired to his encampment. The most unfortunate event which has occurred during the month,—and, next to the Kat River revolt, the most unfortunate occurrence in this war,—has been the insurrection of the Hottentots of the Theopolis Mission Station, in Lower Albany, near the sea-coast, and about thirty miles south-east of Graham's Town. These Hottentots had been previously joined by some deserters of the Cape Corps, through whose counsel and assistance, it appears, the insurrection was concerted and carried into effect. At daybreak on the morning of the 31st of May, the Hottentots suddenly fell upon several Fingoes who resided at their station, and murdered them. They then loaded their waggons with their families and goods, and moved off towards the Bushman's River, sending, at the same time, to one of the Caffre chiefs to ask for assistance. Theopolis, although considered a station of the London Missionary Society, has been for two years without a resident missionary, being only occasionally visited by the missionary resident at Graham's Town. The number of persons at the station has of late years been about 300, of whom about 70 were grown men. Many of the Kat River settlers originally emigrated from Theopolis, and an intimate connection has consequently always existed between the two places. The news of this insurrection spread with great rapidity, and caused the utmost excitement in Graham's Town, and throughout the neighbouring country. Major-gen. Somerset happened to be at the time in Graham's Town. The 74th regt., which recently arrived in the colony, had reached Graham's Town, on its way to Fort Hare, only three days before. The major-general at once ordered about 300 men of that regiment to proceed towards Lower Albany, in order to intercept the insurgents, he himself preparing to take the command of the force which was to surround and crush them. The Graham's Town Mounted Rangers, however, pushed on before the infantry, and, being joined by some mounted burghers from Lower Albany and Uitenhage, made an attack upon a party of the rebels, about 100 strong. A desperate conflict ensued, but the rebels were at length driven from the field into a neighbouring ravine, leaving their waggons and oxen, and seven of their number killed. Of the colonial force, Field-Cornet Gray, an old and much-respected settler, of Lower Albany, was killed; Capt. W. Stubbs, of the Graham's Town Rangers, and Commandant Woest, of the Uitenhage Burghers, with several others, were wounded. This action took place on the 3rd ult. On the 5th, early in the morning, Major-gen. Somerset, having assembled a force of about 600 men, proceeded to surround the stronghold in which the rebels had taken refuge. This was a covert, enclosed by dense bush, in a bend of the Karega river. The rebels were partially surrounded; but, through some unfortunate mistake or mismanagement, they were allowed to escape at an unguarded outlet. They fled, leaving some waggons and about 600 cattle in the hands of the troops. Immediately afterwards, in obedience to orders from head-quarters, Gen. Somerset and the 74th regiment proceeded to Fort Hare. The rebels, after burning the buildings at Theopolis, retreated into Caffreland.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

Upon a former occasion* we extracted from a notice, by M. Bazin, of the dramatic literature of China under the Yuen dynasty, an analysis of a Chinese comedy. That gentleman continues, in the Journal Asiatique, his able review of this department of Chinese literature, from which we are tempted to borrow another specimen, because it illustrates, not only the genius of the Chinese drama, but the peculiar notions entertained by the moral philosophers of China regarding the soul, or spirit, and its independence of the body,—a subject very ingeniously treated of by a Chinese writer in a dissertation inserted under this head a short time back.†

The piece to which we now refer is a comedy by Ching-tih-hwae, entitled Ts'een-neu-le-hwán, literally, 'Ts'een-neu who lets her soul escape.' M. Bazin thinks it is a satire upon Chinese psychology, as another play in the collection under review is a satire upon the metempsychosis.

"In order to understand this piece," he observes, "some notion must be formed of the philosophical opinions of the Chinese respecting the nature of the soul. Their philosophers, or rather the commentators of the ancient books, teach that there are two principles in the soul,—one, the superior, which they term hwán; the other, the inferior, which they name p'ih. The hwán is a subtle portion of the yang, or first male principle; the p'ih is a subtle part of the yin, or first female principle. The p'ih, which was formed before the hwán, enters in the proportion of seven-tenths into the composition of the human soul; the hwán only three-tenths. According to the Taou-see, the separation of the hwán from the p'ih is not sufficient to produce death; when this severance takes place, the p'ih remains with the body, and the hwán, which then becomes what the Chinese term wei, 'a spirit,' assumes or preserves individually the human form with which it was before clothed."

The fable of the piece is as follows:—A young man, named Wang-s'ung, who had taken his bachelor's degree, and Ts'een-neu, a beautiful and sprightly girl, had been betrothed to each other by their parents. An interview took place between them, and, before knowing that they were destined for each other, like the young couple in Love in a Village, they became mutually attached. Wang-s'ung had lost both his father and his mother, and being in mourning for them, Mrs. Le, the mother of the young lady, judged it proper to postpone their marriage, partly on this account, and partly that her future son-in-law might attend a grand meeting of doctors, and obtain, if possible, a higher degree. Wang-s'ung, yielding unwillingly to the injunctions of Mrs. Le, took leave of Ts'een-neu, and set off for the capital.

The departure of her lover and the tenderness of his parting adieux produced such an effect upon the young lady that she became seriously ill. She took to her bed, and was seized with a species of frenzy which the Chinese call Seang-sze-ping, 'the malady of love.' In this state the spiritual part of her soul (hwán) escaped from her, assumed the charming form of the body it had tenanted, followed Wang-s'ung, whom it reached on the road to Chang-gan, and made the astonished bachelor believe that his mistress had clandestinely quitted her mother's house in order to follow him. The two lovers agreed to make the journey to the capital together.

From this moment the action of the piece (like the principal personage) is divided into two parts, the scene being alternately in the capital, and in the house of Mrs. Le, where Ts'een-neu,—that is, her body and sensitive soul (p'ih),—remains tormented with her amorous malady. In vain does her mother lavish upon her caresses and marks of maternal tenderness; the name of Wang-s'ung is incessantly upon her lips, amidst sobs and cries of anguish.

At length, a messenger from the capital knocks at the door, bringing a letter from his master, Wang-s'ung, and announcing his elevation to a mandarinship of the first order. The female attendant conducts him to the chamber of her young mistress. The messenger, who is struck with the extraordinary resemblance between the young lady and his master's wife, delivers the letter, which is addressed to Mrs. Le, and though described as "a confidential missive," Ts'een-neu makes no scruple at opening it and reading the contents, which are to this effect:— "Wang, your son-in-law, first laureat, prostrates himself humbly at your feet. He has the honour to inform you that, having ascended the steps of the imperial palace, he was suddenly placed in the first rank of the doctors, and having obtained the eminent post of Chwang-yuen, only awaits the official notification to return with his bride to your noble dwelling. He begs ten thousand pardons."

The effect of this epistle upon Ts'een-neu may be readily surmised. "What!" she exclaimed; "has he married another? O, I shall die with rage and vexation!" She faints. The attendant, not knowing what to make of this, and concluding the messenger is somehow or other in fault, rates him and boxes his ears. The poor fellow, though he did not relish the cuffs, feels that the young lady had reason to complain, and that his master was to blame on his account as well as the young lady. "He has married another wife, then," he soliloquizes; "that is not much, perhaps; but to send me upon this errand, when I thought I was merely to deliver a complimentary letter, and to get me a drubbing, this is too bad;—master's wrong, master's wrong."

The rest of this act is made up of pieces of lyrical poetry, for which the author enjoys a high reputation, and some of them, according to M. Bazin, are of "great beauty."

In the next act we approach the dénouement. Wang-s'ung returns to his native place, accompanied by the being whom he has supposed to be Ts'een-neu. He visits his mother-in-law and, acknowledging with contrition the fault he had committed, asks pardon upon his knees. "Pardon!" replies the old lady, who seems to have been kept in ignorance of the letter; "I know not what you mean. What fault have you committed?" "Ah, madam!" rejoins the young mandarin; "I ought not to have allowed your noble daughter to accompany me without your permission." "My daughter!" says the astonished Mrs. Le; "why, my daughter has been ill and has kept her bed ever since you left us." "How! ill?" returned Wang-s'ung; "why, here she is," introducing his companion. Mrs. Le, in terror, shrieks out "A spirit! a spirit!"

A scene of explanation ensues. The spirit of Ts'een-neu was conducted into that young lady's bed-chamber, and perceiving its corporeal tenement, re-enters it with precipitation, the beautiful form it had assumed vanishing at the same moment.—through a trap-door, it is presumed. Every obstacle being removed, nothing opposes the wishes of the two lovers, and the piece concludes with the nuptial festival of Wang-s'ung and the beautiful Ts'een-neu.

The Council of the Asiatic Society of Paris has adopted a project submitted by M. Mohl for the publication of a collection of Oriental Classics, upon the following plan. The text of the author will be given, accompanied by a French translation, without commentary, but with very ample tables. The works of the most celebrated authors will be selected, and those which interest the greatest number of scholars. Works hitherto unpublished will be preferred, rare exceptions being made in favour of such very important ones as have been incompletely published, or are difficult to be met with. The editors of the works will receive an indemnity fixed by the Council per volume uniformly for the whole collection, which will be printed in the most economical form, and sold at the lowest possible price.

Letters, dated 28th of February, have been received from Mr. Richardson's expedition, which is accompanied by the Prussian savans, Drs. Barth and Overweg. The party had broken up from Abir, where Dr. Barth made an excursion to Aghades, and entered Nigritia, the country or different states that lie around Lake Tshad, the borders of which are so very little explored, that it is likely the travellers will be kept in that neighbourhood a good while. A little after Christmas they arrived at a place called Damerou, and proceeded to Zinder, where the three travellers parted, each taking a separate route, with his followers: Mr. Richardson direct to Kauka, not far from the shores of Lake Tshad, the capital of the empire of Bornu; Dr. Overweg to the west, into the country of Adar, with the view of making a geological expedition; while Dr. Barth went by Tsasana and Katschua to Kanu, the place from where his letters are dated. At Kauka all three hoped to meet again very soon afterwards. The travellers are in high spirits, and do not complain about the hardships of the journey or ill-health. Their means, however, are almost at an end, as a new supply, which was forwarded last summer, had not reached them. The goods, with which they support themselves, are unfortunately very unprofitably selected, so that they fetch only half the price they paid for them at Tripoli and Murzuk. Besides, passing from the protection of one chief to that of another has cost them a great deal, as they are obliged to pay very high for every person and camel. They hope, however, to find at Kauka the long-promised supply, and letters from Europe, for which they have been waiting since June of last year. They still adhere to their plan to approach the Upper Nile as soon as they have explored the vicinity of Lake Tshad, provided that the British and Prussian Governments will help them on. The interest of the scientific public will be excited by a very extensive report, which has been received from Dr. Barth, of his excursion from Teentellust to Aghades, where he witnessed the investiture of the new Sultan, Abd-el-Kader, and collected a quantity of materials for the history, topography, and ethnography of a hitherto almost unknown spot south of the Sahara. The report, to which a complete glossary of the Hausa and Enghedese languages, some itineraries, and maps, are annexed, is in the hands of Lord Palmerston, and there is every reason to hope that it will soon be published.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

TUESDAY, August 19, 1851.

THE second report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons upon steam communication with India,—which is given in another page,—presents a very clear view of the existing system, and offers some valuable suggestions for improving and extending our intercourse by steam navigation with India and China.

The Committee explain, in the first place, the arrangements under which steam communication with India is at present conducted. On the 7th of every month, a mail is despatched from the Post-office for India via France; from Marseilles passengers and mails are conveyed in Queen's vessels to Alexandria, whence they are transmitted to Suez; vessels of the Indian Navy take them on to Bombay, and thence the mails are forwarded to their destinations by dak. A second monthly communication with India, extending to China, is conducted by the Peninsular and Oriental Company, whose vessels start from Southampton on the 20th of each month, and are overtaken at Malta by the express which leaves London on the 24th; they then proceed to Alexandria, whence, as in the former case, passengers and mails are taken to Suez. These vessels of the Peninsular and Oriental Company are ready to proceed to Point de Galle (Ceylon), Madras, and Calcutta, stopping at Aden, where steamers of the Indian Navy keep up the communication with Bombay, conveying the mails for Western India, and letters meant to be forwarded by express from Bombay to Madras and Calcutta. This extension of the bi-monthly communication to Bombay, which was gratuitously adopted by the Indian Government, was not intended to convey passengers, who are, however, permitted to proceed in the vessels as far as the accommodation will permit, which, it appears, is not sufficient to prevent complaints. The homeward service is carried on under similar arrangements.

The more legitimate complaints alleged before the Committee relate to irregularity in the arrival of the mails at Calcutta by the bi-monthly line; the rate of fares charged by the Steam Company and cost of freight; the difficulties encountered by passengers in taking advantage of the different European lines at Alexandria, and the crowded state of the vessels at certain periods of the year.

The arrangement for the bi-monthly service expires with the year 1852; that for the communication via Marseilles may be revised in January, 1853.

The Committee, having explained the nature of the existing arrangements, and the costs incurred, proceed to suggest improvements.

Premising that, although they consider the postal question paramount, yet when a contract is given for postal service, which necessarily interferes with competition, it is impossible to exclude commercial considerations, they express an opinion that, in future tenders, a considerably greater speed should be insisted upon. They also think it to be established by evidence, that a full communication every fortnight is required between England and the different presidencies of India and China, which, with a moderate assistance for postal service, would be remunerative.

With respect to the projected communication between England, India, and China, by the Eastern Steam Navigation Company, the express portion of the mails being carried by the Trieste route, in conjunction with the Austrian Lloyd's Company, the Committee recognize the political advantage of having two lines open across Europe; but they urge that stringent rules should be laid down in any new engagement between the Government and private companies, and that rates of speed and fares should be fixed. The only mode, they observe, in which the full advantage of the communication can be secured to the public is by a wholesome competition; and they finally recommend "that a communication twice in the month between England and the different presidencies of India should be established, and that such communication should be separated into two distinct services, and put out to separate tender."

The Committee say that, "with respect to the service now performed by vessels of the Indian Navy, it has been stated in evidence that, in point of economy, the comfort of the passenger, and the requirements of trade, this service would be performed to greater advantage by a private company." This paragraph in the report was the subject of controversy in the Committee. Sir James Hogg, supported by two other members, proposed a paragraph acknowledging the superior efficiency of private agency in the abstract, but stating that the communication between Suez and Bombay was committed to the East-India Company from important political considerations, who had incurred heavy expenses of a permanent character to give efficiency to this service, including the acquisition and fortification of Aden. This proposition was, however, negatived; but the Committee admit that, in any new arrangements, the heavy charges borne by the Indian Government require to be fairly adjusted. The political reasons for continuing this communication in the hands of the East-India Company they decline to enter into, as not within the scope of their inquiry.

In concluding their report, the Committee state their conviction, "that any arrangement which might tend to promote an exclusive traffic on the Indian lines in the hands of one company, is open to serious objection; and in the recommendations which they have suggested for the consideration of the Government, they wish to lay down the principle, that the only security to the public for the full advantage of these communications must consist in open and fair competition."

From the tenor of this report, and from the tone of the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the debate, on the 25th July, 1849, upon the subject of steam communication with Australia, there is little reason to doubt that, when the existing arrangements terminate by effluxion of time, there will be an entire change in the machinery; that the principle of free competition will be carried out; all parties will be allowed to enter the field, and contend in the race of economy and speed, the political considerations which have hitherto kept portions of the communication in the hands of the East-India Company giving way to objects of more immediate importance.

BESIDES the positive and direct advantages resulting from the interposition of a body like the East-India Company between the executive Government of India and the Crown, there are indirect and incidental ones which are not to be despised. Amongst these may be reckoned the convenience of having such a butt as this body offers when a superabundance of explosive matter has been generated in relation to any Indian subject which requires to be discharged, and it is difficult or disagreeable to select the proper object. The East-India Company, not to speak of gender and number, may be treated either as an abstraction, as an essence not circumscribed by space,—the uncertainty of its locality cost Mr. Prinsep his seat,—or as a living substance without vital parts, wanting even that faint trace of sensation possessed by the lowest class of invertebrate animals.

It is to this impassive property of the East-India Company,—who may be likened to "that sort of persons" in Copperfield, whose feelings are never hurt, even when they suffer,—that, we presume, must be attributed the attacks which have been made upon them, at different times, both in and out of Parliament, in reference to the Turton defalcations, with which the Company had as little to do as with the Frimley robbery. Sir Thomas Turton was no servant of theirs; he was not appointed by them, nor responsible to them in any way, nor could their functionaries have exercised any check upon his actions. He was an officer of the Supreme Court, nominated by the Queen's judges, whose duty it was to watch his doings, and, if they had properly enforced their own rules, his frauds would have been prevented. The sufferers by this man's villany were defeated in all their suits for redress in those quarters to which they very naturally resorted. Turton declared himself insolvent; his sureties alleged they were unable to pay; the judges appear never to have recollected or been reminded of their moral liability; and as to the Home Government, although the President of the Board of Control, upon ordinary occasions, stiffly answers all objectors,—like the man of Tyrconnel's regiment,—“I am the Government of India,” upon this occasion he was in the background. To think of touching the Consolidated Fund for such a purpose would have been the death of Messrs. Hume and Williams,—and how could the country bear their loss? The sufferers became importunate. What was to be done? “Why, there is the East-India Company,” said one; “hit them, they have no friends, or, what is better, no feeling.”

Now the Company had already been hit in this way before. Registrar Ricketts coolly made away with about 40,000*l.*, and the Company—that is, the revenues of India,—were saddled with the loss. The territorial debt of the Company is 40,000*l.* greater than it would have been but for this unjust diversion of so much revenue from its legitimate purposes. To add 60,000*l.* more to this debt would be, therefore, only following precedent; it would, moreover, make even decimal money,—exactly 100,000*l.*, or the tenth of a million; or ten lakhs of rupees, the tenth of a crore! So, a Parliamentary Committee being appointed, a resolution was put before them, by which the East-India Company would have been expected immediately to replace out of the territorial revenues of India the money plundered by an officer of the Queen's Court, whose judges had neglected to take sufficient security, and to enforce the rules for the protection of funds placed compulsorily in his hands. A director of the East-India Company (Sir James Hogg) happened to be a member of the Committee; his honest statement of the facts seems to have inspired some of his fellow-members with a sense of shame; the chairman's proposal was negatived, and what is termed “a middle course” was adopted,—but which is only a circuitous mode of doing the same thing,—that of paying the losses out of the proceeds of unclaimed estates in the hands of the Indian Government, for which that Government is responsible, and which it must pay whenever claimed.

This, however, was merely a resolution of the Committee, not a law. The East-India Company and their Indian Government might refuse to act upon this resolution; if they consented to act, a local legislative sanction was necessary. The following is an account of their proceedings, as stated by Sir James Hogg, in a letter to the Times :—

“The Select Committee of the House of Commons, appointed to inquire into the circumstances attending the defalcation in the accounts of Sir Thomas Turton, made their report on the 11th of June, 1850, which was then ordered to be printed. On the 3rd of July following, the Court of Directors of the East-India Company forwarded a copy of the Committee's report to the Government of India, with a despatch which contained the following instruction :—‘We desire that, immediately upon the receipt of this despatch, you will proceed in your legislative capacity to give effect to the suggestions of the Committee.’ The despatch concluding as follows :—‘You will immediately place yourselves in communication with the judges of the Supreme Court, for the purpose of framing such legislative enactment as may be best calculated to afford the proposed relief to the sufferers, with the least practicable delay and expense.’ The draught of an Act was accordingly prepared and read in Council on the 27th of December, and ordered to be further considered at the first meeting of Council after the 27th of February, in conformity with the practice of allowing an interval of two months for receiving suggestions; the draught, after its first reading, being published in the Gazette for that purpose. After proceeding through the usual stages, and having received important amendments, the Act finally passed on the 6th of June, from which date all persons whose claims were established were entitled to receive payment. On the 11th of that month (June) it was promulgated in the Gazette for general information; and on the 30th of July last (fifteen days ago), it appeared at length in a London newspaper, Allen's Indian Mail."

Besides this, the Court of Directors have ordered that all sums due to parties in this country should be remitted hither, and have appointed an officer of their own (Mr. F. Clark) to be agent in England for the administrator-general in India.

Throughout the whole transaction, not a shadow of blame can be cast upon the East-India Company. They may, perhaps, have offered too little resistance to the misapplication of a trust fund of which they are the guardians; but this is not the ground of accusation against them, which is, that they made any resistance at all;—that they did not anticipate all difficulties upon the subject of reimbursing the sufferers by at once saying, "Don't disturb yourselves; we have a large sum of money in our hands; it is not our own, and we have no right to give it you; but it belongs to poor people, who do not know it is their property, or may forget to claim it, so you shall have it."

STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH INDIA AND CHINA.

The Select Committee appointed by the House of Commons to inquire into the existing steam communications with India and China, and into the practicability of effecting any improvement therein; and also into the best mode of establishing steam communications between England, India, China, Australia, New Zealand, or any of them, have made a second report, of which the following is an abridgment:—

"Your Committee having investigated the urgent claims of the colonies of Australia to a participation in the advantages of steam communication, which have been so beneficially extended to most other British settlements, and having laid before the House a special report upon the subject, have since carefully considered the improvements of which the steam communication with India is susceptible.

"In the investigation of this part of their inquiry, your Committee have not thought themselves justified in excluding its commercial bearings. Although they consider the postal question paramount, and the one to which their attention should be most directly pointed, yet they feel that, when a contract is given for postal service, which necessarily interferes to prevent the operation of completion, it is impossible to exclude these considerations, as they materially affect the cost at which such service can be obtained.

"The three heads under which this subject may be most clearly considered seem to be the following:—1. The arrangement under which the service is at present conducted; 2. The cost at which it is carried on, and the proportion which this bears to the speed obtained, and the facilities afforded; 3. The improvements required in future arrangements, and the best mode of securing them to the public.

"The arrangements under which the service is at present conducted are as follows:—On the 7th of every month, a mail is despatched from the Post-office for India, 'via France.' From Marseilles, passengers and mails are conveyed in vessels in her Majesty's service to Alexandria. At Alexandria, arrangements have been made with the Egyptian Government for their transmission across the Isthmus of Suez, where vessels of the Indian Navy are in readiness to start for Bombay; from Bombay, mails are despatched by dak runners to their different destinations in India.

"The existing pecuniary arrangements for this service between the Home Government and the Government of India may be revised in January, 1853.

"The second monthly communication with India, and the only one with China, is conducted by the Peninsular and Oriental Company. Their vessels start from Southampton on the 20th of every month, and are overtaken at Malta by the express, which leaves London four days later; they then proceed to Alexandria, whence, under similar arrangements to those alluded to in the case of other service, they are conveyed across the Isthmus of Suez. Vessels of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company are in readiness to proceed from Suez to Point de Galle, Madras, and Calcutta, stopping in their route at Aden, the communication between which place and Bombay is effected by vessels of the Indian Navy, which convey the mails for Western India, and also such letters for Madras and Calcutta as are intended to be forwarded by express from Bombay.

"The arrangement by which this service is conducted expires with the year 1852.

"2. It appears that the sum paid from the revenues of England for the mail service performed by the East-India Company between Suez and Bombay amounts to 50,000*l.* annually. There is also the cost of communication between Alexandria and the Post-office in London, the amount of which your Committee have not the means of estimating. The expense of the transit of all the mails from Suez to Alexandria is borne exclusively by the East-India Company. For the service between Suez and Bombay there are three steam-vessels, provided by the Government of India, inferior in no respects to any steamers plying in the Indian seas; other vessels have, however, at times been employed inadequate to the service. The average speed required by the contract with the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company seems to have been maintained on this line.

"Complaints have been made that the comfort and convenience of the passengers have not been sufficiently considered in the arrangements. These complaints refer chiefly to the vessels engaged in the bi-monthly communication between Bombay and Aden; the vessels employed in which, as before observed, are not designed for passengers. It has further been stated, as respects the vessels of the Indian Navy generally, that inconvenience is experienced by the mercantile community from the high rate of freight of bullion, and from their not carrying merchandise.

"The Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company receive for the mail service between England and Alexandria 23,000*l.*; for that between Suez and Calcutta, 115,000*l.*; and for that between Ceylon and Hongkong, 45,000*l.*; and of the amount paid for the two latter services, the East-India Company contribute seven-sixteenths, namely, 70,000*l.*

"Although the vessels on this line were considered of the first class when originally constructed, yet the rapid improvement which has taken place in machinery renders them now below the standard which has been reached on the North-American lines.

"Witnesses have stated that there has been some irregularity in the arrival of the mails at Calcutta by this line, and statements have been made to the same effect by the commercial bodies at Calcutta. The rate of fares charged by the company; the cost for the carriage of freight; the difficulties thrown in the way of passengers taking advantage of the different European lines, which might be made available for pleasure and for comfort from Alexandria, and the crowded state of the vessels at certain periods of the year, have all been matters of complaint. On the other hand, evidence has been brought forward to the attention the passengers have received on board the vessels belonging to the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company.

"While your Committee think that it is but fair to acknowledge the enterprising spirit which has been displayed by the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company in the general management of the communication which they have now conducted for some years, they are of opinion that the English and the Indian public have at times experienced considerable inconvenience; and it is certain, also, that until the agitation of the question connected with the renewal of the contract brought the matter more prominently before the public, the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company had done little towards introducing into their line those great and important improvements, as regards speed, which have of late years taken place in ocean steam navigation. Of late, however, some of these vessels have undergone considerable improvement, and have been rendered competent to maintain a speed much in excess of the contract rate.

"3. Your Committee are of opinion that in all future tenders a considerably greater speed should be insisted upon than that required by the present contract. In regard to the extension of the main line to any other points than those with which communication at present exists, it does not appear that, with the exception of a line from Hongkong to Shanghai, any further extension is required to which a Government would be justified in contributing, in the shape of a separate contract for postal service; all intermediate lines, such as those lately opened between Bombay and Point de Galle, and Calcutta and Hongkong, by the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company, unless facilitating any general arrangements, should be left to private enterprise for their development.

"From the evidence of persons connected with the trade of India, your Committee are led to believe that there has been, since the establishment of steam communication, a rapid increase in the commercial and passenger intercourse of England, India, and China, although it does not appear that within the last three years the number of passengers taking advantage of the overland communication has greatly increased. Your Committee have had in evidence that the more valuable articles of merchandize (opium, silks, and spices) will, if the freight be moderate, amply repay the cost of rapid communication between England, India, and China, and there is every reason to believe that, on the completion of a railroad across the Isthmus, which, from the evidence before your Committee, they trust may be shortly commenced, this important traffic will be largely developed.

"The evidence shows strongly that a full communication every fortnight is required between England and the different presidencies in India, and that such communication, with a moderate assistance for postal service, would be remunerative. Similar evidence has been given with regard to China, but not to the same extent.

"Your Committee, knowing the effect of steam communication in developing trade, and the tendency which it always has largely to increase the amount of traffic on any line, in proportion to the frequency of the opportunities afforded, and having before them an offer made for the performance of a similar service to the one conducted by the Peninsular and Oriental Company for nearly half the amount now paid by the Government for that line; having, likewise, the admission of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company that the present extent of the traffic is such as to induce them to build large screw-steamers for an additional communication, are induced to believe that a full mail service twice in the month to the different presidencies of India, and to China, might be established without any material increase of charge on the public revenue.

"Certain proposals appear to have been made by the Eastern Steam Navigation Company to carry out a communication between England, India, and China, the express portion of the mails to be conveyed 'via the Trieste route,' in conjunction with the Austrian Lloyd's Company; the political advantages of having two lines open across Europe your Committee consider of some importance; and it appears from the evidence that the Governments interested in the Trieste line are prepared to enter into negotiation, and to give every facility for the transmission of the mails.

"It has been suggested that, in order to secure to the public the advantages of these communications, stringent rules should be laid down in any new engagement that may be entered into between the Government and companies undertaking the service, and that rates of speed and fares should be fixed. Your Committee concur in these suggestions, so far as regards the size of the vessels and the speed required, and they are of opinion that the penalties for failure in speed should be such as might be rigidly enforced when such failure cannot be satisfactorily accounted for; but they do not believe that there is any mode by which the full advantage of the communication can be secured to the passengers and traffic of India by the interference of Government in the internal arrangement and management of the affairs of a private company. The only mode in which this can be secured to the public is by the establishment of a wholesome competition.

"Upon a full consideration of the question, your Committee recommend that a communication twice in the month between England and the different presidencies in India should be established, and that such communication should be separated into two distinct services, and put out to separate tenders.

"Your Committee have already stated that the existing contract with the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company is terminable in December, 1852; and, as it appears from the evidence that any new parties competing will require at least eighteen months after their offer is accepted to prepare for the due performance of their engagements, it is the opinion of your Committee that no time should be lost by her Majesty's Government in taking all the preliminary steps which the fair encouragement of an open competition so obviously demands; and they therefore recommend that tenders may be called for, contemplating the arrangements already alluded to. Ample time will thus be given to enable her Majesty's Government to decide from the tenders which may be sent in whether a bi-monthly communication can be established on the plan proposed, without any probable increase of expense to the revenue of this country.

"With respect to the service now performed by vessels of the Indian Navy, it has been stated in evidence that, in point of economy, the comfort of the passenger, and the requirements of trade, this service would be performed to greater advantage by a private company. On the other hand, there are heavy charges borne by the Indian Government in connection with the expensive arrangements entered into at the period when the question of steam communication was fully considered by her Majesty's Government in 1844, which in any new arrangements would require to be fairly adjusted. Your Committee have likewise been informed that there are political reasons which render it important that this communication should remain in the hands of the India Company. Your Committee have not entered into this point, but they consider that it is a question for investigation by those committees which they understand will be shortly appointed to consider the future arrangements for the government of India; should the service continue to be performed by the Indian Government, your Committee are of opinion that it should be maintained at no greater cost to the public than would be required by a private company, and that the same attention should be bestowed on the comforts of the passengers and the wants of trade as in vessels conducted by private enterprise. Your Committee think it right to add, that this principle has been fully admitted by the witnesses who have appeared before them on behalf of the Indian Government.

"Your Committee have had under their consideration certain proposals to connect the Cape of Good Hope with Calcutta 'via Mauritius.' They are fully alive to the possible importance of a line to India, independent of foreign countries; but, looking at the principle upon which grants for postal service are allowed, they cannot recommend any grant to this line beyond what may be fair for the actual postal service performed; and they believe the growing wants of India are such, that ere long private capitalists will be found ready to embark in the undertaking.

"In the course of a protracted inquiry, much evidence has been taken before your Committee tending to show the decided advantage of iron over wood in the construction of vessels fitted for the packet service, more especially in those to which the screw propeller is applied, and they are of opinion that the postal service would suffer materially, both as regards speed and cost, if the contracting companies were compelled to employ steam-ships built of wood, and not of iron. And your Committee feel it their duty to call the attention of the Government to the evidence which has been received upon this subject from the many eminent practical and scientific men who have appeared before them.

"Your Committee cannot close this report without stating their conviction that any arrangement which might tend to promote an exclusive traffic on the Indian lines in the hands of one company is open to serious objection, and, in the recommendations which they have suggested for the consideration of the Government, they wish to lay down the principle that the only security to the public for the full advantage of these communications must consist in open and fair competition.

"On the Government must rest the responsibility of carrying out that principle with honesty and fairness to the public, and it can only be effected by ample notice, and full particulars of the terms and conditions required being given, so as to enable all parties to enter the field who may be desirous of tendering for the service.

"July 29, 1851."

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE EASTERN ARCHIPELAGO COMPANY held its third annual meeting on the 9th inst., when the report and accounts were unanimously adopted. From these it appeared that the expenditure up to the 30th of June last, for wages, buildings, road-work, and other operations in connection with the establishment of the colliery at Labuan, has been 10,819*l.*, and the quantity of coal already raised is 3,829 tons, the receipts being 2,286*l.*, leaving 1,500 tons in store. A lease of the surface land of the coal-field has been granted to the Company by the Government, which will prevent the difficulties common to joint occupancies. The Peninsular and Oriental Company have certified to the excellence of the coal for steam purposes, and have contracted for 400 tons per month at 30*s.* 9*d.*, deliverable at Singapore. With regard to quantity, the Company's agent states the seams to be upwards of 11 feet thick, while the line of crop extends two miles and a half, and the principal vein runs nearly across the island. Some of the natives from the neighbouring coast, hitherto in the worst repute, have been employed as labourers at the mines with very satisfactory results. Negotiations are in progress regarding supplies of the coal for the general use of the foreign ships in the eastern seas, and a depot is to be established at Singapore. At the close of the meeting, Mr. H. H. Lindsay was re-elected chairman for the ensuing year.

EAST-INDIAN RAILWAY.—The half-yearly report of the directors, to be submitted to the shareholders on the 19th inst., states that it has been arranged with the authorities to adopt a gauge of 5 ft. 6 in. Reports from Calcutta show that the works under contract were being proceeded with rapidly, and considerable progress had been made with the embankments, excavations, brick-making, &c. The Board of Directors have entered into contracts for a large portion of the permanent-way material, some of which has already been delivered in Calcutta, the remainder being in course of manufacture and shipment. During the construction of the line, the reports of the Board will necessarily be brief; but, should any matter of interest arise, the Board will not fail to communicate it to the shareholders.

RAILROAD BETWEEN ALEXANDRIA AND CAIRO.—All the arrangements have been completed for this work, which, it is expected, will be commenced in October. Mr. Stephenson has received the first instalment from the Pasha, who has resisted all the endeavours of the Sultan to stop the undertaking.

Tax Ship Earl of Hardwick has been engaged for the conveyance of troops, and the Carnatic for the freight of stores, to Bombay.

BOOKS.

A Treatise on the Screw Propeller. By JOHN BOURNE, C.E.
To be completed in Twelve Parts. Part I. Longman and Co.

"The attitude now assumed by the screw propeller in connection with steam navigation, and the probability that, at no very distant period, screw vessels will not merely supersede paddle steamers, but also sailing ships in many important lines of packet communication, render it desirable that sound and practical information touching this new instrument of propulsion should be more widely accessible, and that such facts in connection with the performance of screw vessels should be accumulated and recorded, as will suffice to illustrate, not merely the present state of the question, but its future tendencies." With this view, Mr. Bourne proposes to produce a work upon the screw propeller, which, deriving its doctrines, not from theoretical speculations, but from the results of numerous experiments carefully performed, and from the experience afforded by screw vessels in the ordinary routine of commercial operation, shall, if failing to illustrate the whole subject, at least communicate as much as is at present known respecting it.

In the first chapter, Mr. Bourne recapitulates the various projects made for propelling vessels by means of a screw, tracing the early history of this contrivance, and inquires to whom the practical realization of the idea of screw propulsion is properly attributable.

In the elaborate tables of the dimensions and performance of the screw steam-vessels of the navy, given in this number, several facts are exhibited of great practical importance. One is, that, with certain proportions of the propeller, screw vessels are driven through the water by the steam alone at higher velocity than if the screw worked in a solid, like an auger in a piece of wood, or a bolt in a nut. In all paddle vessels, the vessel moves less rapidly than the circumference of the paddle wheel, and, in most screw vessels, the vessel moves less rapidly than if the screw worked in a solid; and the difference between the advance of the screw, or paddle, and the advance of the vessel, is what is termed slip, since the propelling surface slips backward to some extent, from the recession of the water, in the same manner as the wheels of a locomotive sometimes slip upon the rails. In some screw vessels, however, there is not only no positive slip, but the slip is the other way, to the extent, sometimes, of 17 per cent., and where this negative slip appears the vessel is propelled swifter than the screw.

Another result given in the tables shows the great importance of a fine form of the stern in screw vessels.

The value of the scheme of the penny postage is felt in every household throughout the kingdom, but its extent will be well shown by the extraction of some figures from a return just made to the House of Commons. The first general reduction of postage took place on the 5th of December, 1839—a fourpenny rate being interposed for a short time before the universal charge of a penny. At this time, the number of letters delivered annually in the United Kingdom was about 75 millions, the actual estimate for 1839 being 75,907,572. The gross amount of the tax levied upon this delivery was 2,339,737*l.*, of which, as the cost of management was only 657,000*l.*, there were 1,652,421*l.* carried to the account of profit. Last year, the number of letters delivered in the United Kingdom was estimated at upwards of three hundred and forty-seven millions, while the penny tax upon the same amounted to no more than 2,264,684*l.*; so that, while our payments to the Exchequer have been actually lessened, the service rendered to the public has been multiplied fivefold—in other words, we pay less for five letters than we formerly paid for one.—Times.

The late Miss Cook gave at different times sums (including her testamentary bequest) towards the conversion of the Jews amounting to about 60,000*l.*

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NOTICE TO MARINERS.

THE COURT of DIRECTORS of the EAST-INDIA COMPANY have lately received from the Government of Bengal the following Notification, which is published for general information.

NEW PILOT STATION FOR THE S.W. MONSOON—DISTINCTION OF LIGHTS.

Notice is hereby given, that from and after the 15th of March, 1852, the Pilot Station for the South-West Monsoon will be changed to the position described in the following Sailing Directions of the Master Attendant of this Port; and that from and after the date specified, the Eastern Channel Light Vessel will show a bright red light instead of a plain one, as at present, to distinguish it from the Gaspar Channel Light, which bears from it about N.N.W., distant 22 miles.

By order of the Superintendent of Marine,

JAMES SUTHERLAND, Secretary.

Fort William, 6th May, 1851.

SAILING DIRECTIONS FOR VESSELS REQUIRING PILOTS DURING THE SOUTH-WEST MONSOON AT THE NEW STATION, ON THE NORTH-EAST PART OF THE PILOT'S RIDGE.

False Point Light House is in latitude $26^{\circ} 19' N.$ and longitude $86^{\circ} 47' E.$, and a buoy is placed in 21 fathoms on the Pilot's Ridge, in latitude $26^{\circ} 49' N.$ and longitude $87^{\circ} 42' E.$; the buoy therefore bears from False Point Light House N. $59^{\circ} 49' E.$ true, and distant 59 miles.

A vessel, therefore, after making the Light House at False Point (in passing which she ought not to go into less than 10 fathoms) should bring it to bear about W.S.W. 10 or 15 miles distant, when she will be in 11 or 12 fathoms, then steer East North Eastward, when the soundings will gradually increase to 23 fathoms on the eastern edge of the Pilot's Ridge. She should then regulate her course so as to keep between the Ridge and 27 fathoms, when, by attention to the lead and nature of the soundings, course and distance run from the Light House, it is almost impossible to avoid making the Pilot Vessels, as their cruising ground is immediately to the North-East of the Light Vessel stationed during the South-west Monsoon in close proximity to the buoy on the Ridge.

The soundings to seaward of the Pilot's Ridge are in general a greenish or olive-coloured mud, with occasionally a few bits of broken shells mixed with it; whilst those on the Ridge are of a shelly sand, or minute gravel, of a reddish or rusty-brown colour.

Vessels approaching the Station are earnestly warned to be careful in avoiding collision when communicating with either the Light, or supplying Pilot Vessel; and on making the former at night, they are strongly recommended to heave to, at a proper distance, till daylight; by which measure they will avoid the probability of passing the supplying Pilot Vessel in the darkness of the night.

The Eastern Channel Light Vessel is in latitude $21^{\circ} 04' N.$ and longitude $88^{\circ} 14' E.$, and therefore bears from the buoy on the Pilot's Ridge, N. $63^{\circ} 26' E.$ true; and distant 32 miles.

The Eastern Channel Light Vessel burns a blue light every hour during the night, commencing at 7 p.m., and a maroon (or torch) at the intermediate half-hours, and her standing Light will, from the date above specified, be a bright red colour.

The Pilot's Ridge Light Vessel shows one plain standing Light, and burns a blue light every hour, and a maroon at the intermediate half-hours, and also fires a Gun on sighting any vessel.

During the North-east Monsoon, the cruising ground where Ships will have to seek for Pilots will be, as heretofore, in the Eastern Channel.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 14th of May, 1851, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.
20	On or before 14th of May, 1846.	£1,000	£19 6 8	£10 12 8

* * * The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assurers to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

All holders of Policies in India on the Profit scale, who may have paid five annual premiums, will be entitled, at the expiration of the fifth year, to a year's profit, calculated on the average of the preceding five years; such profit to be paid in cash, or to go in diminution of the future premiums payable, or to be added to the sum assured by the policy, at the option of the holder, after the calculation of the profits shall have been made in London.

After the expiration of 1851, the profits will be declared annually, and the payers of five complete annual premiums be regularly entitled to a participation therein, with a like option as to the mode of application.

Parties assured in India for Life shall, on their return to England for a permanency, and on the first half-yearly premium becoming due, be entitled to come upon the English rates of premium, and be placed under the rules and conditions of the Society there obtaining.

All parties assured for Life, or for terms other than for Life, whatever the number of payments, or the permanency or otherwise of their residence in Europe, shall, after completing a full year from the date of their quitting India, and on the first half-yearly premium thereafter becoming due, be entitled to a reduction of their premium to the English rates, such reduced rates being continued during their further residence in Europe.

Notices of Assignments of Policies will be duly registered at the Office of the Secretaries.

"If condensation and definiteness, if due distinction between the provinces of a grammarian and lexicographer, if to avoid faults, to reject things of a doubtful utility, to supply deficiencies, and to do all this with a determination that typography, paper, and price shall be unexceptionable; if these in combination be a recommendation to an author and his work, then Dr. Forbes's Dictionary is fully worthy of the patronage of the patrons and students of Hindustani literature."—FRIEND OF INDIA, published at Serampore, Oct. 18, 1848.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE accelerated speed of our steam intercourse with the East is attested by the arrival of this mail in less than two days from Marseilles. Although a brief interval of eight days has elapsed since our last issue, we are in possession of intelligence thirteen days later from Calcutta, and twenty-one from Bombay. Our supply of matter is, therefore, not scanty.

Of political news there is, as usual, but little to record. The Hyderabad question appropinquates to an unexpected end. The Bombay Telegraph, of July 25, publishes a communication received from the Nizam's capital on the preceding day, which contains the latest information upon this subject. The writer states that an arrangement had been made for payment of the large debt due to the Indian Government, and that the cession of the districts would not take place. The regular payment of the contingent force is to be provided for by the appropriation of the revenues of certain districts to that object, with which, though administered by native functionaries, the Nizam had pledged himself not to interfere. This account is corroborated by another letter from Hyderabad, dated the 19th July, the writer of which states:

I hear that Capt. Davidson, the assistant resident, says forty lacs of rupees have been already paid by the Nizam, and the balance will certainly be paid by the end of October. The money is to come partly from the contribution of the Nizam's wealthy ameer and subjects, and partly from his own coffers. General Fraser seems now to be quite happy. The country for a time is saved, and its future salvation depends on the degree of proper interference hereafter, tying up the Nizam's hands and insisting upon extensive retrenchment, including the Contingent, to which British policy and patronage are greatly opposed.

This result is doubtless to be attributed to the decisive tone of the Governor-General's missive, which was communicated to the Nizam on the 21st June. "The propositions it contained," says the Englishman's correspondent, "as I hear from the best Durbar authorities, are, that the Nizam shall give up, to the management of the Resident, territory yielding a revenue of thirty-six lakhs a year, to be held by him till the debt of the Government of India, now amounting to somewhat more than eighty lakhs, be discharged: that the Nizam will be required to arrange, in a manner satisfactory to the Resident, the future regular payment of the Contingent; and that he shall appoint a competent minister. The language of the letter, as described to me, is extremely severe, although it does not announce an impending danger, and I believe it to be correctly quoted,—'You do not understand the power of the British Government; it can destroy you in a moment, and leave not a vestige of you. (Nabood-o-be-nishan.)'"

DATES OF ADVICES.

Bombay July 26.

The rumoured disturbances in Cashmere, noticed in our last Summary, turn out, as we anticipated, to be a fiction. The only foundation, and it is a flimsy one, for these rumours is the fact, that an officer did give some slight cause of offence in the direction indicated, but of so unimportant a nature, that Golab Singh bestowed not the smallest attention on the complaint made to him. No fewer than forty officers, who went up to Cashmere from Wuzerabad and Seealkote, have just returned from their month's excursion, and are full of praises of the Maharaja for his most persevering attentions to them. It appears, however, that the Maharaja was preparing for an expedition against his hill subjects in the north, who had beaten his troops. The expedition was to leave the Valley about the 24th or 25th June, under the command of Dewan Huree Chund.

The report, to which we have referred, of the murder of four British officers, with another unfounded rumour of the assassination of Golab Singh, had, it seems, affected the price of Government securities at Calcutta. This fact shows how much importance is attached to the continuance of the Maharaja's influence in the affairs of the Punjab. The Englishman thinks that the death of Golab, whether from natural causes or by the hand of an assassin, must almost necessarily embroil us in another war; and that such war will be far more protracted, if not more severe, than any which has yet been seen in India.

The Khalsa was not extinguished at Goozerat. The main body of Sikhs who fought there survive; and whenever a man with money springs up, ready to employ them, it will be found they have still sharp swords, and strong right arms to wield them. The country, too, will offer to an advancing army considerable opposition. We have now done with fighting on the plains of India. We have conquered province after province till we have arrived at the foot of the hills, and if Sir Charles Napier's retreat from Kohat was significant of anything, there is reason to conclude that, in case of another war, the obstacles to surmount will be far greater than what we have hitherto encountered.

Another report, which had been authoritatively asserted at a post near the frontier, has met with no confirmation: we allude to the death of Dost Mahomed.

From Lucknow we learn merely that the kingdom of Oude remains in its ordinary unquiet state. The minister continues in his post.

The Governor-General was still at Simla; but it is confidently affirmed that he proposes to quit the hills so soon as the state of the weather will permit, and proceed to Calcutta, where he will continue during the remainder of his stay in India. He came out in October, 1847, and his term of five years' service, the ordinary period, will expire in October, 1852; it is generally believed that he will retire earlier. Complaints are uttered in some of the journals of the injury which the public interests suffer by the protracted residence of the head of the Government so far from its seat. "It is impossible," observes the Bombay Telegraph, "to ignore the fact, that the most important transactions are effected by the subordinate local authorities, without having been sanctioned by, or even submitted to, the master-mind that animates, or is supposed to animate, the corpus of the Governor-General; or, on the other hand, measures of the highest importance, as parts of the executive business of the minor Presidencies, must await an indefinite period before they can be carried into effect, and consequently the whole object which they were expressly calculated to achieve may be marred and lost by the delay."

It would appear that our Indian government has so few criminals of its own to look after, that it has consented to become gaoler to the Nepaulese. Our acquaintance, Jung Bahadur, had requested the Indian authorities to take charge of the conspirators whose design upon him was defeated some months ago. These men had been transmitted from Katmandoo, the capital of Nepal, to the nearest British station within the Bengal territory, and were to be permanently located at Allahabad.

The Englishman hears, on good authority, that the relief of troops, this year, throughout the Bengal army, will be very limited, and that, with the exception of the corps on half-batta, and those which come in their room, very few changes will take place.

The local intelligence of the Presidencies, though by no means scanty, comprises few incidents calling for prominent notice.

At Calcutta, the committee on ship-burning was still sitting, and had not yet proclaimed its discoveries, if it has made any. It was stated that the lascar of the Ariel, under sentence of transportation for setting fire to that vessel, had made disclosures which implicate native merchants and other persons not before suspected. The refusal of the underwriters to insure vessels manned by lascars has led to a large demand for European seamen, who consequently obtain a very high rate of wages.

From Bombay we learn that an inundation had occurred in Kattywar, by which many villages on the borders of the Runn of Cutch had been swept away, and much life destroyed; no less than nineteen inches of rain are said to have fallen in the neighbourhood in twenty-four hours. Two natives had been convicted before the criminal sessions of stealing notes under their charge from the Oriental Bank, with the addition of forgery on the part of one prisoner. Orders had been received from the Governor-General for the immediate establishment of a small cause court at Bombay. The monsoon at that presidency, so far as it had gone, had been most favourable: above sixty inches of rain had fallen; and accounts from other quarters were all most gratifying. The last fortnight had been fatal to not a few of the best-known members of the Bombay society. On the 6th July, Lieut.-col. Macan was cut off at the presidency by apoplexy. On the 16th, Maj. Lewis Brown, distinguished for his heroic defence of Kalun in 1840, died at Baroda. On the 18th, Mr. H. Cormack and Mr. W. C. Le Geyt, both of the house of Leckie and Co., were cut off, the former at Poona, the latter at the presidency: both healthy men, in the very prime of life, and both much esteemed.

A great variety of intelligence from various parts of the farther East will be found under their appropriate heads.

REVENUE ADMINISTRATION OF THE NORTH-WEST PROVINCES.

We have to thank the local government for a copy of the Report of the Sudder Board of Revenue on the Revenue Administration of the North-West Provinces for 1848-49. This report shows the successful working of the "settlement" of these provinces, and forms a triumphant reply to those who assert that the rent or tax on the land is too high. The effect of the shortcoming of the rains in particular seasons is likewise shown, the scantiness of the rains in 1848-49 having caused a proportionate increase of balance of revenue at the close of account.

The districts bordering on the Jumna, from Hurriana to Hummerpoor, are those which suffer most from the want of rain, and which happen to be the countries most dependent on rain. The strata along this line is much impregnated with various salts, and the water is nearly useless for irrigation, particularly on the south bank of the river. The balances which accrue in the countries bordering on that line, are, therefore, not attributable to heavy assessment, but to the nature of the seasons. This portion of the country being also peculiarly liable to droughts. Thus, in the Bhutte district, Delhi division, the Government demand is, Rs. 1,34,081, and the collections of 1848-49, Rs. 41,854, showing a balance of Rs. 96,227. In Hurriana district, Delhi division, the Government demand is, Rs. 4,51,446, and the collections of 1848-49, Rs. 2,64,319, leaving a balance of Rs. 1,90,127. Whilst in Meerut, close by, the best irrigated district in the North-West, the returns are—Government demands, Rs. 17,71,765, collections of 1848-49, Rs. 17,70,824, balance, Rs. 941. In Allypurr, which is well irrigated, the balance on a demand for Rs. 19,83,121, is only Rs. 472. Agra, again, a portion of which is on the south bank of the Jumna, on a demand of Rs. 16,18,860, falls in balance Rs. 97,982; and the greater portion of these heavy balances are declared irrecoverable, whilst in the more favoured districts they are merely accidental, and collected after the closing of accounts.

The sales of estates for revenue balances are trifling until we come to Banda, where fifty-one estates, paying a revenue of Rs. 62,358 have been sold, and in the Allahabad district sixteen estates, paying a revenue of Rs. 6,000; whilst in all the other thirty-one districts there are only fifteen estates sold, altogether paying a revenue of Rs. 2,000.

Banda has been very unfortunate, and looking to the returns of the other districts, perhaps milder measures than selling out would have been better. As the Government has resolved on making its settlements with the ryot, the actual cultivator, giving long leases, it must be prepared to grant large remissions when the seasons fail. The cultivator cannot save from one year to another; his small surplus at any time is too small to save for an emergency. Government has moderated the rents very much, in order to carry out its policy of treating with the cultivator; still, when the evil day comes, we do not think selling out should be resorted to as a matter of course. A judicious remission would be far more just to the small farmer. The settlement officer may make safe averages at the time he fixes the amount to be paid, but averages do not give a just result in the case of the cultivator on a small scale; with an average of 60, there might be a fluctuation from 20 to 120, and the means of the ryot to provide his revenue are dependent on the fluctuations, not on averages.

We also observe in this report, that the mutations of property by decrees of court or private transfer are very few indeed, all tending to show a state of prosperity as well as ability to meet the demands upon the zemindars, both public and private. In Meerut, for decrees of court, 148 acres are sold, at an average of Rs. 11.29 per acre, the Government rent being Rs. 2.72 per acre. By private sale, 318 acres have changed hands, at an average of Rs. 9.03 per acre, paying Government revenue Rs. 1.93 per acre. In Allypurr, 4,120 acres are sold on account of decrees of court, at an average of Rs. 4.59 per acre, paying revenue Rs. 1.63 per acre. By private sale, 1,966 acres are sold, at Rs. 13.78 per acre, paying revenue Rs. 2.05. For arrears of revenue, none. In Hurriana, 2,628 acres are sold, at Rs. .44 per acre, paying Government Rs. .18 per acre. In Banda, for arrears of revenue, 71,229 acres are sold, at Rs. .33 per acre, paying Government Rs. .87 per acre. For decrees of court, 9,433 acres are sold at Rs. .70 per acre, Government revenue, Rs. 1 per acre. By private sale 34,973 acres are sold at Rs. .55 per acre, paying revenue Rs. .97 per acre.

These figures show how much Banda has suffered for want of rain; whilst in all other districts land sells at four times the Government annual demand, and above it, property is sold in Banda at a figure considerably less than the annual rent paid to Government. Banda was the district chosen for the great experiments in cotton with American superintendents; a district more subject to fluctuations of seasons than any other, where although the soil is stated to be generally superior, the rent of land charged by Government does not exceed 12 annas an acre, whereas there are few districts which do not pay an average of 1 R. 12 annas, and in the well irrigated ones, 2-4 per acre. The irregularity of the seasons evidently depressing the value of land in Banda, it strikes us as strange that such a district should have been the one chosen for the cotton-growing experiment.—Delhi Gazette, June 25.

MOVEMENT IN THE HINDOO COMMUNITY AGAINST THE LIBERTY OF CONSCIENCE ACT.

The committee appointed by the Hindoo inhabitants of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, for the purpose of obtaining the repeal of the Convert Inheritance Act, met on the 26th instant, at the house of their chairman, Rajah Radhacant Deb, and settled the preliminaries for sending the Hindoo memorial to England. It has also been determined to forward to Mr. Leith a copy of the report of the case of Lutchemee Ummall, recently decided by Sir W. W. Burton at Madras, with instructions to bring it to the notice of the Court, as the first fruit of the operation of that obnoxious enactment. It is gratifying to observe that the petition contains upwards of five thousand signatures. When Mr. Macaulay put forth his draft of the lex loci Act, in 1845, the number of our countrymen in Bengal who remonstrated against the enactment of the proposed measure, was limited to only thirty names; but in the course of the last five years, the natives of this country have so much advanced in intelligence, that five thousand individuals are now capable of discussing the merits of a public measure and judging for themselves. This is surely an auspicious sign of the times.—Hindoo Intelligencer, June 30.

The Hindoo Intelligencer informs us, that the memorial of the Hindoos against the Act for establishing Liberty of Conscience is ready to be transmitted to England. The memorial is said to have five thousand signatures attached to it; yet a memorial representing the grievances of the Madras native community obtained more than a hundred thousand signatures, in half the time which has been found necessary for obtaining the names of one twentieth the number, in a town with double the population. Nothing could, we believe, have been easier than to have obtained fifty thousand signatures to this petition, or to any other which the Baboos of Calcutta chose to encourage, in the shortest space of time. Such a memorial, therefore, for the removal of a grievance which was said "so nearly, so closely, so vitally to affect the most sacred and most valued rights of the Hindoos," with only five thousand signatures to it, from the metropolis of British India, can be considered in no other light than as a miserable failure.

Since this memorial was originally drawn up, events have occurred in the Hindoo community from whom it emanates, which cannot fail to influence the minds of those to whom it is addressed in England. The measure against which it is directed,—that of allowing a convert to inherit his ancestral property—is said to be totally repugnant to the principles of Hindooism, and to the practice which has been in vogue from time immemorial. It is said to strike at the root of one of the most important religious institutions of the country. But, if there be any one institution of the Hindoo creed, more ancient, more sacred, and more vital than another, it is that of caste. It has always been considered as the great bulwark of Hindooism, and the strength of the whole system has been supposed to consist in the rule, by which he who once forfeited his caste could never, under any circumstances, be restored to its honours and privileges, but became an outcast for life. It was the impossibility of an "apostate's" return to the bosom of Hindoo society, when he had once crossed the rubicon, which retained so many under the standard of the national creed. But a meeting has been held in Calcutta within the last few days, at which the same native gentleman, who is the chairman of the committee appointed to obtain the repeal of the law, himself proposed to break down this great bulwark of the Hindoo religion, and to re-admit to the distinctions of caste all those who had forfeited it by a profession of Christianity, on the performance of a slight penance. This proposal, coming from such a quarter, and brought forward under the auspices of so large a number of the most influential natives in Calcutta, must seriously damage the memorial. If the Hindoos themselves are prepared, for their own convenience, to dispense with the safeguards which have hitherto protected the national creed, surely the British Government must be at liberty to remove one of them, when it is found to be utterly incompatible with the rights of conscience, and the principles of religious liberty.—Friend of India, July 10.

AGRA AND UNITED SERVICE BANK.

Proceedings of a Special General Meeting of Shareholders of the Agra and United Service Bank, held at the Bank-house, on Tuesday, the 17th June, 1850, for the purpose of resolving that the company shall be registered under Act XLIII. of 1850.

A copy of the Government Gazette of the 8th March, and a Calcutta newspaper of the 24th February last, containing the advertisement calling the meeting, as required by Clause 4 of the Act, were laid upon the table, and the said advertisement having been read by the secretary—

At the request of the meeting, W. H. Tyler, Esq., takes the Chair.

The secretary then stated that in reply to the directors' circular of the 14th January, on the subject of registration of the company, votes had been received from 214 shareholders; of these, 207, representing 7,992 shares, were in favour of, and 7, representing 99 shares, were against the bank being registered. In consequence of an opinion adverse to the registration having been given by the Advocate-general of Madras, the directors had obtained the best legal advice in Calcutta, and both the eminent counsel they had consulted agreed in opinion, that the bank could be registered; that it was not required by the Act that all the branches should be separately registered, but merely the head office, in Calcutta, and that on this being done, it would bring the company at the other presidencies within the operation of the Act.

It is acknowledged that the Act is not expressly applicable to the requirements of a company such as this, and in its practical working, difficulties may possibly have to be encountered: these objections, however, in the opinion of the Directors, are insufficient to outweigh the advantages conferred by the Act on joint-stock companies, and the additional security it affords to shareholders, and they therefore recommend that the bank be registered under its provisions.

The following resolutions were then proposed and passed:—

Moved by F. H. Robinson, Esq., seconded by J. Middleton, Esq.

1. That the bank be registered under Act XLIII. of 1850.

Moved by E. H. Longden, Esq., seconded by G. Snell, Esq.

2. That it be left to the Directors for the time being to carry out the measure as may best consist with the interest and convenience of the bank, it being understood that, as far as depends upon them, the registration must be effected by the 1st January next.

W. H. TYLER, Chairman.

The meeting separated after a vote of thanks to the chairman.

FRANCIS R. NEILSON, Secretary.

NORTH-WEST BANK.

At a meeting of the Calcutta shareholders of the North-Western Bank of India, holden at the Bank-house, on Tuesday, the 1st July.

Present—Mr. Orde, Capt. Bazely, Mr. C. Gubbins, Mr. Wood, Mr. Theobald, Baboo Sibchurn Sein, Mr. Green, and Mr. Mounttain. Mr. Theobald in the chair.

Mr. Theobald stated that the meeting was convened for the purpose of considering the three several plans about to be submitted at a general meeting, viz. that of the directors, that of the Calcutta committee, and that of the Benares shareholders, and he thought the proper course on this occasion would be to read those plans, serialim, and pass resolutions upon them.

Read the first proposition of the directors, viz. for the adoption of the report of the auditors.

Resolved—that the shareholders present disapprove several of the recommendations of the report, and that they will give a negative vote to the proposition.

Read the second proposition of the directors.

Resolved—that the shareholders present disapprove of this proposition in connection with the next and third proposition, and that they will give a negative vote to this proposition.

Read the third proposition, viz. to abolish the board of directors, and place the management under a manager and trustees. Negatived.

Read the fourth proposition, to alter the deed to the extent of the above requirements. Negatived.

Resolved—that this meeting strongly advise the other shareholders in Calcutta, and the shareholders generally, to vote against all the above propositions. The proposals of the Benares shareholders were then discussed.

The Chairman said the Benares shareholders declared their intention to apply to the Supreme Court if they could not get the bank wound up by general consent; and therefore the shortest course would be at once to consider whether the bank could be compulsorily wound up. He read the 86th clause of the Deed of Settlement, by which it is provided "that in case the company shall at any time happen to lose one-third of its capital, the business of the company shall immediately on such event cease." In his (the chairman's) opinion, this event had happened, and therefore the directors ought not further to risk the capital of the shareholders.

Resolved—That the Calcutta shareholders take the same view of the present condition of the bank as the Benares shareholders, and that they concur in the proposal to wind up.

Resolved—That this meeting recommend that the bank be accordingly wound up at Calcutta by the Calcutta agent (one of the oldest servants of the bank, and best acquainted with its constituents generally), under the superintendence and control of a committee.

Resolved—That this meeting is of opinion that winding up the bank will involve no increase of loss unless it be done with unnecessary haste, or the debtors be unnecessarily pressed beyond their usual and established means.

Resolved—That the capital be repaid by instalments as collected.

These resolutions were passed unanimously.

The Chairman said it was a satisfaction to him that this course had originated with an independent body of shareholders; the plan of the Calcutta committee was to have obtained the authority of a general meeting to carry on the business at Calcutta temporarily, and until a better system could be prepared, but it fell to the ground by the resolution to wind up.

Resolved—That the thanks of the meeting be given to the Chairman.—Englishman.

THE CALCUTTA GALLERY OF ART.

WE published last week a letter signed "A. B. C." containing an announcement of a gallery of art which it was intended to open in Calcutta in the month of October next. The Hurkaru, in noticing the project, allows that such an undertaking would be of the highest value, but entertains no hope of its success. We desire to assure him that the project is not started by some poor artist anxious to increase the facilities for the study of his art in Calcutta, but by gentlemen who possess full means for carrying out their design, and that unless some unforeseen event should occur, the gallery will positively be opened at the time specified. Neither can we think, that when the project is once known to be really in a fair way of accomplishment, the projectors will be left to their own unassisted efforts. Although the peculiar circumstances of Anglo-Indian society, and the supposed injurious effect of the climate upon pictures, have proved exceedingly unfavourable to the collection of works of real merit, there are still a few scattered over the country, while a rather numerous band of brothers of the brush will, we have no doubt, be happy to lend the aid of their pencils to the undertaking. It would perhaps be invidious to name them, as there must be many with whom we are unacquainted; but a gallery might well hope for efficient support from such enthusiasts as the authors of the "Hog hunt," of the beautiful sketches of the meeting between the Governor-General and the Maharajah of Cashmere, which appeared in the Illustrated London News, and from the caricaturist of Meerut, who is, we believe, equally eminent in the use of the brush and the graver. A gallery upon a similar principle has already been opened at the Cape, with the greatest success; and although society in that colony is not so fluctuating as in India, it possesses perhaps even fewer advantages than those which are within our reach in Calcutta. The gallery is to be one of sculpture as well as painting, but we have not, that we are aware of, any English sculptures in India, and very few houses boast of the possession of anything of the kind, beyond a few more or less indifferent plaster casts. It is evident, however, from the really remarkable ability already displayed by natives in the art of modelling, that they only require a fair degree of encouragement, and the contemplation of really good examples, to take another step forward, and produce figures in stone with the same accuracy and beauty which they have already displayed in clay. We think even in the sister art much may be obtained from native sources, though the only branch of it in which native painters have hitherto shown any real power has been portrait-painting.

The projectors of the undertaking, with a perfect appreciation of the taste of the City of Palaces, have not confined themselves to the exhibition of inanimate objects, however beautiful, but intend to add other attractions in the shape of three concerts a week, after the plan of Jullien's concerts, and thus combine almost every description of intellectual amusements. A concert is almost the only public amusement which will induce a resident of the City of Palaces to abandon his drive or his dinner, and the proposal before us promises an unusual gratification for those blessed with musical tastes. We are promised a more detailed prospectus in a short time, and we shall not, therefore, enter into the pecuniary branch of the project, which will, we think, be hereafter modified, but at once recommend the scheme to the hearty support of such of our readers as desire to increase the knowledge of art in India, or to gratify their taste and amuse their evenings.—Friend of India, July 3.

FEROZEPORE MEETING OF SUBSCRIBERS TO THE MILITARY FUND.

Proceedings of a meeting of the subscribers to the Bengal Military Fund, held at Ferozepore on the 18th of June, 1851, by permission of Brigadier Gowan, C. B., and A. D. C., commanding the division and station, for the purpose of taking into consideration a proposition now in circulation from the directors of the fund, that assistant-chaplains be permitted to subscribe to the fund as majors after nine years' service.

Present:—Col. Mackenzie, 22nd Regt. N.I.; Major Shuldham, 52nd N.I.; Major Gray, 18th N.I.; Major Cautley, 8th Cavalry; Major Sherwill, M.B., 2nd Europeans; Captains Bagshawe, Cantonment Joint-magistrate, 7th N.I.; Norgate, 18th N.I.; Hall, 52nd N.I.; Austin, 18th N.I.; Hunt, 22nd N.I.; and Campbell, C.O. Artillery; Lieuts. Sherwill, Ex. Officer 39th N.I.; Hathorne, 18th N.I.; Moxon, 52nd N.I.; Comber, 18th N.I.; Best, 8th Lt. Cavalry; Drummonde, 8th Lt. Cavalry; and Baird, 18th N.I.; Ensign Barton, 52nd N.I.; Surgeon Macrae; Assist.-surgs. Mawe and Hodgson; Veterinary-surgeon McDermott.

Colonel Mackenzie is unanimously voted into the chair. The original proposition now in circulation and dated 13th May, 1851, being laid before and read to the meeting, the president begs to call the attention of subscribers to Act 39 of the fund regulations, which enjoins that all propositions shall be published twice a week in each of the Calcutta daily newspapers for a whole month before circulation to the army for their votes, to ensure previous publicity and discussion of their merits and demerits at the expense of the appellant. This the meeting will observe has not been done in the present instance, as until the arrival of the circular at this station, a few days ago, it had not appeared in any of the newspapers, thus affording no opportunity for the discussion of the matter. The propositions, moreover, has not been laid clearly before the army by the directors, inasmuch that the opinion given by Major Hannington only tends to mislead the subscribers, and proves nothing; real merits of the case being entirely omitted. On calculation it will be seen that an assistant chaplain will, if permitted by the present proposition to subscribe as a major, have paid considerably less to the fund than the military officer after twenty-two years' service.

Proposed by Capt. Bagshawe, seconded by Dr. Macrae—That the directors be called upon to account for the proposition having been circulated in this unsatisfactory manner, and also to explain why Act 39 has not been acted up to.—Carried unanimously.

Proposed by Major Cautley, seconded by Captain Campbell—That assistant-chaplains be allowed to subscribe to the fund as majors at the expiration of nine years' service, but that they be called upon to pay the difference of subscriptions and donations with compound interest at eight per cent. per annum. The sum calculated by the fund actuary.

Amendment proposed by Captain Hall, seconded by Dr. Mawe—That the advantages accruing to the ecclesiastical establishment (under Act 7 and 8 Fund Rules) of subscribing as major, on promotion to a chaplaincy as lieutenant-colonel after 15 years' service, and colonel after 20 years' service remain unaltered and strictly adhered to.—Amendment carried by a majority.

Proposed by Capt. Norgate, and seconded by Lieut. Moxon—That as members in the Upper Provinces see chiefly the Mofussil papers, all propositions shall be published in the Mofussil as well as Calcutta newspapers once a week for a whole month before circulation to the army for votes, at the expense of appellants in a private reference, or of the fund in a general one, to insure previous publicity and discussion of their merits and demerits.—Carried unanimously.

Proposed by Major Gray, seconded by Major Shuldham—That under the above circumstances, i.e. want of information, the canvassing of this proposition regarding the subscriptions of assistant-chaplains to the fund as majors, by circular No. 5, dated 13th May, 1851, be null and void, and that the directors be called upon to re-circulate the proposition, and furnishing the correspondence which took place with them and Major Hannington, and other requisite information, as it is known that many persons have voted for the measure under a wrong impression.—Carried unanimously.

Proposed by Lieut. Sherwill, seconded by Dr. Hodgson—

That in future all propositions of the above nature, when being submitted to the army, be accompanied by the opinion of the fund actuary, as to their being detrimental, or otherwise, to the interests of the fund.—Carried unanimously.

Proposed by Major Gray, seconded by Lieut. Drummond—That these proceedings be sent to the newspapers for general publication, and this meeting earnestly requests the subscribers of the fund at other stations to convene similar meetings for the reconsideration of the subject.—Carried unanimously.

Proposed by Major Gray, seconded by Major Sherwill—That the thanks of the meeting be given to the present chairman for his able conduct in the chair.—Carried unanimously.

22nd Regt. N.I., Chairman.

LAW.

COURT OF NIZAMUT ADALUT, JUNE 12.

Gour Chunder Gope v. Radhanath Gope.—The prisoner was charged, on the first count, with the wilful murder of Luckheena-rain Gope, for the sake of his ornaments; 2nd count, with theft of ornaments from his person. Offence perpetrated on the 9th April. Tried by Mr. C. T. Davidson, officiating Session Judge of Furreedpore, and the Law Officer, on the 30th April.

The prosecutor stated, that his family residence was at Mulgoorah, in the district of Furreedpore, but that he lived and carried on trade at Gobindpore Nulchittee, Zillah Backergunge: that his son Luckheena-rain Gope (deceased), who was seven years of age, was staying with his (prosecutor's) brother-in-law, Tarachand Gope; that on the 2nd Bysauk, he received a letter from Tarachand, conveying intelligence that his son was dangerously ill, and begging him to come and see him; that he immediately set out for his brother-in-law's house, and arrived on the 4th, when he heard from the police, who were investigating the case, that the prisoner had murdered his son, and robbed him of his ornaments.

The prisoner, on being called on to plead to the charge, was inclined to make admissions; but on the charge being explained to him, and on his being desired to confine himself to the simple plea of "guilty" or "not guilty," he pleaded "not guilty."

There were no eye-witnesses in this case to the commission of the crime. The prosecutor's brother-in-law, Tarachand Gope, with whom his son was residing, stated that, on the 9th of April, he went to Geereeschunder's house, at the village of Ulgee, and returned in the afternoon, when he found that prosecutor's son was missing; on inquiry, he learned from Gopal Koond and his wife, that they had seen the boy in company with the prisoner, Radhanath Gope, who, however, on being questioned on the subject by this witness, denied the circumstance. This denial induced witness to suspect something wrong, and he immediately made him over to the village chowkeedar, and they took him to the Thannah.

It was shown, by the evidence of the witnesses Ramkanye, Gopal Koond, and Tarachund Dutt, that the prosecutor's son was in company with the prisoner on the day he was missed. The identity of a skull and bones found in the jungle to the west of the witness Gopal Koond's house might, under other circumstances, have been wanting in positiveness; but taking into consideration the evidence of Gopal Koond, and to their having been found near the spot where the prisoner in his confessions stated that he left the body, no reasonable doubt, the session judge thought, existed as to the skull and bones found being part of the remains of the prosecutor's son Luckheena-rain Gope. The confessions of the prisoner before the police and joint magistrate, which were full and unqualified, had been duly attested before the sessions court. The recovery of the boy's ornaments, part from the spot where the prisoner had buried them, as pointed out by him, and part from the podars to whom he had sold them, had been proved by the evidence of witnesses.

The prisoner, in his defence, stated that all his neighbours were his enemies; that they forced him into his confession before the police, and persuaded him that it would lead to his release. He called no witnesses.

The fuwah of the law officer convicted the prisoner of culpable homicide, and declared him liable to akoobut. From this finding the session judge dissented, and would convict the prisoner of the crime charged; and, considering the aggravating circumstances of the case, especially his relationship to the murdered boy, recommended a capital sentence.

Minute by Mr. J. Dunbar, judge.—The deceased was last seen alive in company with the prisoner. He had his ornaments on at the time. Being missed, suspicion naturally fell on the prisoner, who was arrested, and made full confession of his guilt both in the mofussil and before the magistrate. He acknowledged that he had taken the boy to a jungle a short distance from the village, and there strangled him; that he had then gone home and eaten his dinner, and had subsequently proceeded to a neighbouring bazaar, where he had disposed of a part of the ornaments taken from the person of the murdered boy, for Rs. 4.4½. He then purchased two new dhoties, came home, and hid the remaining ornaments under ground.

This statement was confirmed by the testimony of the persons to whom part of the ornaments had been sold, and by the finding of the rest underground in a spot indicated by the prisoner. On the day succeeding the murder a human skull was found in the jungle, and on the day following, a considerable quantity of human bones. The skull was pronounced by the uncle of the boy to be that of his nephew. He said he recognised it from the decayed condition of some of the teeth. This no doubt was but an imperfect identification; but the speedy disappearance of all those features whereby identity might at once have been established, is readily accounted for. The jungle in which the body was left by the prisoner after the murder is said to abound with jackals. It is no matter for wonder, then, that, after twenty-four hours, nothing was left but the skull and some bones. Looking to the confessions of the prisoner, however, which have been fully attested, and to the circumstantial evidence, there can be no doubt that the murder was committed by the prisoner, and no reasonable doubt can, I think, exist that the skull and bones found were really those of the murdered boy. The murder of children for the sake of their ornaments is a crime of so frequent occurrence in this country, that it seems extraordinary that parents and guardians should permit children to leave home at all, when they have their ornaments on. It must be allowed, however, that it would be almost impossible to guard against the treachery of near relatives. It must always be in their power to entice children away, and therefore is it the more necessary to make a severe example, when, as in the present instance, it is clearly proved that the power has been used for the purpose of murder. In his confession before the magistrate, the prisoner said the idea of murdering the child had presented itself to him suddenly. This constitutes no extenuation of his guilt, and is not reconcileable with the fact of his having taken the child to a thick jungle outside of the village, or with the cool way in which he proceeded to turn the murder to account by the sale of part of the ornaments.

I concur in the view of the case taken by the session judge and would sentence the prisoner to suffer death.

Mr. A. Dick, judge, concurred, adding "The magistrate should be directed, through the sessions judge, to call the attention of his police to the circular order of the Nizamut, warning parents not to put ornaments on their children. The warning should be repeatedly published once or twice a year, and especially when such an awful opportunity occurs for impressing the caution on the minds of the reckless people."

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE TURTON ROBBERY.—The Calcutta Gazette announces that the sons of the late Dwarkanath Tagore have memorialized the Government to relieve the family estate from the responsibility which he incurred by standing security for Sir Thomas Turton; adding, "we hope the prayer of the memorialists will be granted."—The Calcutta Morning Chronicle mentions a rumour that, on the expiration of Sir Thomas Turton's imprisonment, which will be in October, he is likely to be readmitted to practise as a member of the Calcutta bar.

CAPT. IMPEY.—It is mentioned that the Court of Ava has ordered the Governor of Martaban to forward Capt. Impey to the capital at the public expense. The report, which appeared the other day in the Madras papers, that he is to have the command of the Burmese army, may therefore have some foundation. Englishman, July 1.

EMBARKATION OF COOLIES.—Among the few draft Acts issued by the Legislative Council lately, is one for extending the season during which Indian labourers may be embarked at Calcutta for the West Indies. Hitherto the legalised period of embarkation has been from the 1st October to the last day of February; but it is proposed to extend it by permitting the embarkation at Calcutta from the 1st September annually. — Ibid.

THE LAHORE LIBRARY.—The Lahore Chronicle notices, that the collection of books found in the treasury of Lahore, and known by the name of the Durbar Library, have been presented by the board of administration, with the consent of the Government of India, to the new College of Umritsur.

CONVERSION.—We understand that Baboo Gyanendranath Tagore, the only son of Baboo Pro-onocoomar Tagore, and nephew of the late Dwarkanath, was baptized at the old church last evening by his countryman, the Rev. Krishna Mohun Banerjee. — Hurkaru, July 11.

COLONEL STEINBACH.—A correspondent at Sealkote alludes to a report, which prevailed at his station, that Colonel Steinbach had applied to resign the service of Maharajah Goolab Sing. The report is correct. Col. Steinbach thought it proper to take this step in consequence of Dewan Hurree Chund being sent in command of a force towards Gilgit, of which the Colonel's two regiments were to form a part. His resignation was immediately accepted. — Lahore Chronicle.

MISSION IN THE PROVINCE OF KUMAON.—It is now thirty-five years since this province came under the direct control of the British government, and much has been done during this period for the physical improvement of the people, but little or nothing for their moral and religious instruction. Recently, however, some of the Christian residents in it made a proposal to the Rev. J. H. Budden, connected with the London Missionary Society, to raise funds for his support, if he could obtain the consent of the Society to direct his labours to the province. A favourable reply was received, and a meeting was held at Almorah on the 25th of August last year, when the Kumaon mission was formally commenced; a committee was formed, and it was determined that the arrangements should take effect from the 1st of January in the present year. An overture had at the same time been made by a private party, on his own responsibility, to Mr. W. Rebsch, who formerly had charge of the station school at Meerut, which was accepted, and he arrived in Almorah in March, a few weeks previous to Mr. Budden. The mission which has thus been established in this very interesting province is intended to be independent of the mother country for its support. The mission has been so recently established, that Mr. Budden cannot have much progress to report. A commencement has been made; convenient premises have been engaged in Almorah adjoining the bazar, and one of the houses has been fitted up as a chapel. The school numbered at the beginning of the year 87 boys, of whom 21 are reckoned in the English department, 32 in the Persian, and 34 in the Sungskrit. It appears singular, that in this remote province, so large a number of boys should prefer the study of that abstruse language. Some opposition was made when the school commenced the introduction of Geography, and Scripture reading, which were new and strange to both pupils and parents. To counteract this feeling, prizes were offered for those who gave their hearty attention to them. In addition to this school, an attempt has been made, though not with success, to open an infant school, and to give religious instruction to the people; but it is considered more advisable to concentrate the efforts of the mission on the establishment and consolidation of the school, before entering on more public and direct missionary operations. — Friend of India.

ABSURD CEREMONY.—The following paragraph from a native paper describes the performance of a ceremony performed by a Hindoo wife in honour of her husband: "The ceremony of the Shabithree Broto (which is observed by a Hindoo wife in honour of her husband) was recently performed by the Ranees of Burdwan, lady of Maharajah Mahatabchand Bahadur, with the usual pomp and pageantry attendant on such occasions. The husband was first seated on a throne of gold, and hundreds of feminine hands kept fanning him with chamurs (cow-tails) of first rate beauty and elegance. The reason why so many hands were engaged to fan the Maharajah, was lest the intense heat of the weather should be any inconvenience for remaining stationary at one and the same place till the whole of the ceremony was over. The Ranees next worshipped his Highness's feet, and then all those little observances enjoined by the Shastras were punctually attended to; after which she gave orders for feeding the Brahmins, who had accumulated there on purpose, and whose number did not fall short of 2,000. The Bhoj or entertainment was as it should be, and every man did justice to it, to the fullest extent of his appetite. In the meantime the Kanglees, or street mendicants, were heard bursting forth in quite an exulting tone, "Sreemotee Maraneer joy ho-ook," i. e. "Success attend the great Ranees." This somewhat flattering outburst being soon overheard by the lady, orders were immediately given to admit the whole mob (which counted full 5,000 paupers) into the house, and regale them with all the dainties that her bhandar could boast of. The gates were forthwith flung open, and the Mahatab Munjeel, Del Avam, and the Surus suttee yard were shortly after filled up; they were next seated in rows, and fed to their heart's content. A present of a rupee each (in the shape of dukhina) was then ordered by the Ranees, which drew forth loud shouts of joy and blessings from the crowd. Presents were awarded to the Brahmins and Pundits the next day, so that nothing but warm plaudits of the Maharanees were to be heard for a time in the streets of Burdwan. Considering her tender age, such pious acts reflect no common credit on her; may she live to be the mother of a son of her character."

MESS COMMITTEES.—The following is an extract of a letter, dated Simlah, 3rd July:—"The mess committee has hitherto only met once. The returns necessary for its guidance come in very slowly, and the business is consequently retarded. Those who express opinions on the subject seem to think the officers chosen for the regulation committee peculiarly fitted for the work."

THE BANK OF BENGLA has declared a dividend of 12 per cent. per annum, or Rs. 249 per share, for the half year ending 30th June.

THE UNION BANK.—The virtue of the Indian Legislative Act for legalizing the Assessment Scheme, under which the affairs of the late Union Bank are being wound up, is likely to be put to the test of judicial arbitrement here. Mr. D. Wilson, a shareholder who has paid his assessment of Rs. 50,000, has been called upon to show cause why execution should not issue against him for an almost equal sum, on behalf of a creditor who obtained a verdict against the bank, represented by its secretary. —Hurkaru, July 12.

THE BUNDLECUND AND NERBUDDA DISTRICTS.—We have reason to believe that Government contemplate making a new settlement of the Bundlecund and Nerbudda districts, out of which three or four new zillahs are to be formed. The present military-civil officials will be continued, but as vacancies occur, they will be filled up strictly from the service, and the district will become a regulation province. Mr. Bushby is to be the commissioner of the whole. This will give a great lift to the civil service in the north-west, and we recommend the unemployed in college to eschew Bengal for the next two years. —Englishman, July 7.

SHIP BURNING.—One of the men convicted of having set fire to the clipper Ariel has confessed that he and his brother incendiaries had been paid by a native merchant of Calcutta for burning the ship; the ship Belvidera, destroyed some eight years since at Singapore, was proved to have been set fire to by her commander. The Calcutta Morning Chronicle, July 7, says:—"We have received further information, on which we can rely, in confirmation of what we stated last week regarding the confessions made by Kurreembux, the lascar of the Ariel, under sentence of transportation for life. As the publication of all that has reached us would be premature at present, and calculated probably to defeat the inquiry in progress, we shall merely state that the executive police is diligently following up the information communicated by Kurreembux; and parties least likely to be suspected may ere long be put on their defence as the instigators of the destruction of the ill-fated vessel."

OR DITS.—We have heard a rumour to the effect, that there are to be six additional assistant commissioners in the Punjab, and that the appointments will be almost immediately filled up.—We understand that the 7th regiment N.I., now stationed at Loodiana, will march for Meerut at the close of the present year, in accordance with the requisition of Major-General Sir Joseph Thackwell, for another native regiment.—It is said that the company of sappers at Loodiana will be removed to Meerut at the same time, and that this with the departure of the 8th N.I., on escort duty with the camp of his excellency the Commander-in-Chief, during his cold weather tour, will do much towards the long-talked-of "breaking up" of the former station.—The troop of horse artillery will, it is said, go to Jullundur, and all the force left will be one regiment of irregular cavalry, the 17th and the 46th regiments of N.I.—We understand that the station of Loodiana is to be abandoned at the close of the present rainy season; Capt. Turner's troop, it is said, will go to Hoshiarpore, and the 8th regiment N.I. to Meerut.—We learn that H.M.'s 98th and 61st will positively relieve H.M.'s 60th Rifles and 22nd at Kussowlee and Dugshia next season. —Delhi Gazette.

CONNECTION OF PUBLIC SERVANTS WITH BANKS.—It is now generally known, though not officially, that the order for the discontinuance of the connection of public servants with public banks is in the pocket of the Governor-General. Its announcement will be hailed with general satisfaction. For as it is felt that while that connection has done little to credit a section of the military body who have been thus engaged, as regards the military position; so also the profit accruing to these "institutions" (as they have been charitably termed) from the direction of mere gold-seeking amateurs, destitute of mercantile education, banking experience or business-judgment, has been less than naught. The North-Western Bank is convulsive in a dying struggle, through its directors and secretary, to avoid the winding-up, which its shareholders desire; but the effort promises to be unavailing; while a gradual and careful decline from business would appear to offer, if not the most prosperous, at least the less ruinous result. —Delhi Gazette, July 13.

THE MORMON PROPHECY.—The Englishman reports that the Mormon prophet, or elder, or whatever he is, who lately made his appearance in Calcutta, has been more successful than was anticipated. He has already secured twenty-three converts, among whom are the reader of the sailors' home, and eleven women.

AN INTERESTING EXPERIMENT is about to be tried in the Agra district. The Baptist missionaries have a small village settlement at Nistarpore, near Chitoura, and most of the members of their little community are weavers. The minister who resides amongst them has observed for a long time past, with regret, the extra labour and delay which their rude and imperfect loom entails upon them. He has at length procured two pattern looms from England, and these have been put in order for him by a soldier of the Fusilier regiment, who has himself in earlier life been a Manchester weaver. It is now proposed to raise a sum of money for the construction of a number of looms after the English pattern, and should universal use of them be introduced into this Christian village, it is hoped that some curiosity will be excited amongst the weavers in general about a machine which they will soon see requires less labour and produces more profit.

THE LATE SIR W. MCNAGHTEN.—A long and elaborate article has appeared in the Friend of India, completely clearing the character of the late Sir W. McNaghten from the charges brought against him by the Calcutta Review, in reference to his sanction of the arrangements in contemplation for the assassination of certain of the Afghan chiefs.

THE NEPAULESE have introduced into their country the punishment of transportation, and Allahabad is their convict station, whither, with the consent of the Earl of Dalhousie, the ringleaders of the late attempted rebellion at Katmandoo are now in transit for a period of five years. Their names are Mylala Sahib Jee, the Nepaulese King's brother; General Budree Sing, Jung Behadur's own brother; General Jy Behadur, Jung's cousin. They were marched off from the Nepal head-quarters on the 25th June.

MOOLTAN.—"There is a well at a place called 'Mukdoom Durgah,' about twenty miles from hence, the water of which is said to possess highly medicinal qualities. Natives from all parts crowd to it, not only Punjabees, but Hindustanees. The water to the taste and smell is very nauseous, and I am informed, by a medical man, that it is precisely similar to the Harrowgate springs. Be this as it may, natives have great faith in its efficacy, and relate many wonderful cures." —Correspondent of Delhi Gaz.

ASSISTANT SURGEON H. M. CANNON, M. B., is, we understand, likely to be permanently appointed to Simlah, taking half the medical duties of the military sanatorium there, the civil medical duties and the superintendence of the vaccine department. This arrangement will deprive young medical officers of one of those biennial hill tours of duty, which were, a few years ago, established for them by Lord Ellenborough, so that "each might have his turn" and enjoy the benefits of a residence in the hills. It is only a year ago that the civil medical arrangements at Simlah underwent some alteration, and now we have another change, the latter calculated to deprive the medical service, in its military branch, of one of its much coveted hill appointments, and we understand that for the two expected to be vacated in December next, there are already no less than four or five applications, and some from officers of eight or nine years' standing in the service. —Delhi Gazette.

JUNCTION OF THE DELHI AND SIMLAH BANKS.—We have heard that a new proposition is on foot for the junction of the Delhi and Simlah Banks. We do not know what the prospects of success are, but there must be some strong attraction, some magnetic or biological affection between the two, which draws them so frequently into this sort of flirtation. In unity there is strength, and perhaps profit; the field occupied by the North-west Bank is now open, yet if the capital of the Simlah is employed in the hills, and the Delhi in the plains, we do not quite understand the object of junction. If the Simlah will cut its London branch, reduce its establishment and bring capital to the united bank in the plains, we have no doubt the advantages of the concentration to both will be great, to the Simlah certainly the greater. We have as yet only heard of the proposition; when the plan is made public, we shall be able to discuss it. —Delhi Gazette.

ACCIDENT TO THE HON. MR. THOMASON.—A letter from Simla says:—"An accident, which might have been attended with very serious consequences, occurred on the evening of Saturday the 12th to the Hon. Mr. Thomason. It appears that his Honour, attended by Captain Minchin, A.D.C., was taking his usual ride; when in the neighbourhood of Elysium Hill, at a portion of the road where there are no rails, the horses commenced fighting, and during the plunging and kicking, the Lieutenant-Governor was thrown, and fell over the khud down a precipice to a distance of about two hundred feet. Fortunately the descent, was not very steep, and his Honour escaped with only a few bruises and some severe cuts about his face. Dr. G. Craigie happened to be passing at the time, and rendered all assistance.

AGRA—The following extracts are made from a private letter, dated Agra, 7th instant:—

"I am heartily grieved to have to state that Lieutenant Blair, of the 2nd European fusiliers at this station (a son of Colonel Blair, of the cavalry), cut his throat yesterday evening, in a state of desperation produced partly by his pecuniary embarrassments, but far more by the apprehension under which he laboured, that his debts and his frequent appearance as a defendant before a Court of Requests would ere long entail his arraignment before a court-martial.

"I know that his mind was pervaded by this apprehension,—for 'it was only the day before yesterday that, in a brief conversation which he had with me on the subject of Captain Thompson's court-martial, he remarked, 'that, as he was himself not only in debt, but totally unable to prevent himself from being hauled up to the Court of Requests month after month, he supposed his turn would come next,' ['for being tried by a court-martial,' being words implied, but not expressed.]

"He first of all attempted to shoot himself, but was prevented by some of his servants. He is not the only man I know, poor fellow, whose spirit (bowed down by these late orders) 'would rejoice exceedingly and be glad, if it could find the grave.'"

"I am sorry to hear that Dr. McLeod, our superintending surgeon, is lying dangerously ill of fever."—Bombay Telegraph and Courier.

ENS. WILLIAMSON.—We regret to hear that Ens. Williamson, of the 28th N. I. died very suddenly at Peshawur on the 6th inst.

CAPT. THOMPSON, 2ND FUSILIERS.—A general court-martial assembled at Agra, on the 30th June, for the trial of Capt. Thompson, 2nd Fusiliers, as previously announced. Lieut.-col. Caley, 64th regt. N. I. is president. Capt. John Plunkett, offg. depy. judge advocate-gen. conducted the proceedings. Lieut.-col. Spens, comdg. 2nd B. Fusiliers, prosecuted. We were misinformed as to the nature of the charges; they are three in number, and accuse Capt. Thompson of conduct discreditable to an officer and a gentleman, and also of a contempt of superior authority. 1st, in failing to pay a debt owing since 1845, and making various excuses of a frivolous nature for not paying; 2nd, for appearing, within the 5th April, 1850, and 5th April, 1851, as a defendant before the Court of Requests in seventeen cases, when awards were given against him in most of the cases, to the amount of some 2,000 and odd rupees; and thirdly, for having written, in answer to a letter from the brigade-major at Agra and the adjutant-general of the army, a highly disrespectful letter, to the effect that he had not constituted Sir Charles Napier his agent, and disputing the right of his military superior to interfere with his private pecuniary affairs. This is the substance of the charges, which our readers will remark involve a new and most important principle. Is it a military crime appearing as a defendant before a legally constituted tribunal for the recovery of debt? We look with considerable interest and anxiety to the verdict of the court, and so we are sure will the Indian army in general. We understand that the prosecution closed on the same day, and that the prisoner was given two days to prepare his defence. The court was to sit again on the 3rd of July.—Lahore Chronicle.

DINAPORE.—We hear sad accounts of Dinapore and Patna. In the former place, and at the penitentiary at Deegah, cholera is raging in full power; it is stated that two or three soldiers of H.M.'s 80th regt., and from five to ten prisoners are its daily victims. In the city of Patna small-pox has recommenced its ravages, and deaths from it, although not so numerous as when the disease is in its season, yet the mortality is extraordinary, sufficient to cause a panic among the residents of the place. At the civil station (Bankeepoor) and its environs small-pox is prevalent among the native community, several deaths have been reported, and among the European residents influenza, colds, and fevers are the order of the day, almost every house is more or less a hospital. The sickly state of the country is attributed to the paucity of rain, which has fallen during the month of June, only 7½ inches, while in the corresponding month of past years it very much exceeded that quantity. As the rains, the "Burra Bursat," as it is denominated in the higher country, cannot be much longer delayed, we hope shortly to hear better accounts from our friends at Dinapore and its neighbourhood.—Englishman.

EUROPEAN SAILORS.—Our police reports yesterday supplied some illustrations of one of the results produced indirectly by the ship-burning mania among the lascars. As our readers know, the insurance offices have refused to insure any vessel manned by a native crew. European sailors are consequently in great demand for the navigation of country ships, and the number available being limited, high wages are given to men of this class. Seamen who have come out from England, under articles, at 2l. 10s. a month, can here readily obtain as much as £4. 10s. Jack is, by the articles aforesaid, lawfully bound to his ship till her return to England; but of course he is not insensible to the advantages of almost double pay, or disposed to forego them without an effort to secure them to himself. The mode in which this desirable object is usually sought is the following. Jack deserts his ship, is taken before the magistrate, has offered to him the option of going on board or to the House of Correction, and prefers the latter alternative—his preference being ruled, as he says, by serious objections to the ship, its commander, or his officers. He is sent to break stones for a month, and cheerfully goes to work, in the hope, generally realized, that before he is liberated his ship will have sailed, and he be thus left free to form another engagement on the terms which have tempted him to break his former contract. Lately the House of Correction has been over-crowded by these self-devoted captives, and unless the extended term of imprisonment, which we believe has been lately awarded, puts a stop to the system, there is no saying to what extent it may be carried. But the dodge does not always prove so certainly and readily effectual as has been generally the case. On Wednesday, as mentioned in the police reports, to which we have referred above, a seaman was brought up for refusing to proceed to sea in his ship. He had just been liberated after a month's imprisonment for a former refusal, and fancied that his captivity had purchased his entire freedom and left him at liberty to do as he pleased. In this he was mistaken, as he was soon given to understand; and there was no chance of escaping except in another imprisonment. Jack probably had had enough of it, and did not relish the thoughts of more; but it will be seen that his consent to go on board was purchased only by the concession of almost humiliating terms on the part of the commander. Another man, having also had his month, was brought before the magistrate for similar recusancy, and he declared that he would rather stay in prison twelve months than go in his ship. He was told that the chief mate, "to whom he had so much aversion," had been discharged; but he was not to be so easily deprived of his justifying grievance,—"the captain," he said, "was as bad, if not worse than the mate!" He had "never had better living in his life than when in the House of Correction;" and to this luxurious abode he has returned—as we learn from the report published to-day—till his ship is ready to go to sea, when he is to be put on board her volens volens.—Hurkaru.

IMPROVEMENTS IN THE MANUFACTURE OF PAPER.

Dr. Hunter has published in the Athenæum a letter on the subject of paper-making at Madras, in which he says:—"Some years ago attempts were made to improve the quality of the paper manufactured in the jails at Cuddapah and Chingleput, and a good deal of trouble was taken to ascertain how far the native mode of manufacturing paper could be improved. Experiments were also made with the fibres of the plantain, melon, aloe, and common paddy-straw. At first the results of these were by no means satisfactory, but this arose from the adoption of the ordinary mode of steeping and rotting the pulp away from the fibre. After a time it was discovered that a great many plants, when quickly and carefully cleaned, would produce beautiful white or yellowish fibres, well suited both for the manufactures of cordage and paper. A great many varieties of white and fancy-coloured papers, of several delicate shades, were manufactured by the prisoners in the jail at Chingleput. The materials which were found to yield the strongest paper were mixtures of plantain fibre and gunny bags, or old fishing nets. The plantain fibre alone was found to yield a tough light paper of a yellowish or buff colour, well suited for envelopes, or for common writing or drawing-paper. If the pulp was allowed to remain long in a damp state before being made up, the colour of the paper became dark greenish grey, and in the first experiments where the plants had been cleaned by rotting the paper, was of a dark brown or slaty colour, harsh, brittle, and nearly useless except for common packing purposes. On coming to Madras and comparing the paper which I had brought with me from Cuddapah and Chingleput, I found it so superior in quality, strength, and colour to any of the papers made in or about Madras, that I thought it advisable to attempt to introduce amongst the native manufacturers, such improvements as could be economically applied. With this view I visited several of the native paper-manufacturers' establishments in and about Madras, showing the samples which I had been able to get produced by native workmen, and offering to take paper for the use of the pupils in the School of Arts, if it could be supplied at moderate prices. The reply received from the paper-makers was that they were not wealthy enough to make any experiments of this kind, but that if I would defray the expenses of the experiments, they were willing to conduct them for me. Some good native paper-makers were accordingly engaged, and experiments were commenced which were soon followed by beneficial results. The most important points that were ascertained were, that the native mode of making paper is good so far as economy is concerned, but that the contract system of taking the paper from the cheapest manufacturer, had led the natives to adopt various means for cheapening their paper. One of these, which acted very materially upon the quality of it, was the making it almost entirely of the cuttings and refuse of English white and blue papers, which are sold annually in large quantities in Madras. A very fine thin strong paper was made from pure plantain fibres. This was submitted to the Military Board, who tested its durability by sending it long distances by bangy, with other qualities of paper used in the same way as envelopes for official letters, which were ordered to be turned re-addressed and sent back to Madras. On comparing the different kinds of paper that had been used, that from the plantain fibres was found to have sustained the least injury and to be quite free from cracks or tear. Some good qualities of paper were next made from different mixtures of plantain and gunny, the produce of a species of native hemp. When these experiments were first commenced, a good many natives were stirred up to exert themselves, and it was found that much better paper could be made if a remunerative price was offered, or if the money was paid directly into the hands of the manufacturers, who unfortunately make very little, if any, profit out of the contracts."

MISCELLANEOUS.

MR. FORSYTH.—The poisoning case in Malabar, which so nearly cost the life of a judicial officer, has been brought before Mr. Cooke, the subordinate judge at Calicut, and the three prisoners, viz., the nazir of the Tellicherry court, his peon, and Mr. Forsyth's garden lad, have been acquitted; the case being dismissed for want of evidence. The circumstances elicited on the trial present very peculiar features, reviving in many respects a picture of the dark conspiracies and superstitious ignorance of the middle ages. One of the witnesses deposes, that the accused parties held a secret meeting with a sorcerer, and that a waxen effigy of their intended victim was formed, and stuck full of thorns, at this interview. Two astrologers also are produced, who appear to have been consulted respecting the auspicious hour for administering a drug. It has occasioned some surprise that the case has been disposed of in the inferior court, as the actual criminal made a full confession before the magistrate, admitting that he had thrown some unknown substance into the soup, under promise of a recompense from the nazir, who was supposed to be the instigator of this crime. Many other facts concurred to cast great suspicion on this person, who is said to be a man of bad character. He appears to have had motives of revenge against Mr. Forsyth, and he has frequently expressed his resentment in violent language, venturing even to indulge in malignant threats, in the house of the principal sudder ameen, according to the deposition of that functionary, who has brought himself into trouble by concealing the occurrence. As the circumstantial evidence is represented to have been all but conclusive, it is matter of regret that the prosecution should have failed in establishing direct proof of guilt; but we hope that the narrow escape of the prisoners on this occasion will prove a salutary warning against such abominable attempts for the future.—Spectator, June 23.

HINDOO MATRIMONIAL LAW.—The Madras Crescent is of opinion that there are certain cases in which the Hindoo law permits a wife not only to abandon her husband, but also to be remarried. He produces the following sentence in support of his assertion:—"CLII. Decala. Whether such a husband be alive or dead, his wife may take another lord, for the sake of obtaining progeny, not through female independence."

NATIVE MEDICAL REMEDIES.—Dr. Maxwell, garrison surgeon of Trichinopoly, has sent a long letter to the Madras Spectator, containing a notice of the effects produced by certain native and European remedies in different diseases. One of these is remarkable, though we are not possessed of sufficient medical knowledge to test its accuracy. Dr. Maxwell has made experiments with Margosa or Neeim oil (melia azadirachta), and finds it a specific in scrofula, and nearly equal to cod liver oil in the treatment of consumption.

STRANGE ANIMAL.—We have seen several natives with deep indentations on various parts of the body, particularly about the face and hands, who complained that they were bitten by some animal, whose appearance they were unable to describe. Some said that it resembled a jackal, with an enormous brush, and length of body twice the natural size, while others declared that it possessed no sort of shape whatever, and was totally invisible. To-day we hear of it on the Mount road, to-morrow at John Pereira's; now gambolling with some little child and taking summary vengeance on its nurse or mother, should either attempt to interfere with it; again, attacking some honest wayfarer, who is made sensible of its presence by finding himself minus his nose or upper lip. Several of the bitten people have been admitted into the hospitals for treatment, but none are able to say how they came to be attacked. They were seized, and bitten, and left alone, and that was all they knew of the matter. One old woman, it appears, picked up a coco-nut in the street, which she placed in a basket she carried. The coco-nut opened a mouth of prodigious size, distended a pair of enormous jaws, and inflicting a severe bite on her face, vanished, and was never again seen! These circumstances have been brought to the knowledge of the police, and we hear that a reward of Rs. 25 is offered for the head of the offending animal. Of course, speculation is rife on the subject, and various are the surmises afloat in respect to the character of the mysterious visitant. Some say that the animal is a human being, now the victim of vindictive necromancy; others again are of opinion that it is Old Nick in disguise, sportively inclined to have a rise out of the good people of Madras. However this may be, true it is that, although a suspected "puss" has been slaughtered, and a large tom cat sent to the land of spirits, an old lady and a number of dogs were almost worried to death no later than yesterday morning.—Spectator, July 2.

LIEUT. JOHNSTONE.—The murderer of this officer had not been discovered: Lieut.-Col. Fenning, the commandant of the regiment, had joined, and it was hoped that his popularity amongst the men would have induced the parties privy to the murder to disclose the facts. But this hope has failed, as also have the rewards offered.

MR. P. THOMPSON.—The Madras United Service Gazette states that it is pretty generally rumoured in society that Mr. Pen-ton Thompson, second Puisne Judge of the Court of Sudder and Foujdaree Udhwlut, is about to proceed to England, with the intention of taking the annuity, as soon as it shall come to his turn. Furthermore that the Honourable Daniel Elliott will resign his seat in council upon the occurrence of this vacancy, in order to make sure of a seat upon the Sudder bench, as an appointment worth upwards of Rs. 4,000 a month is not always to be found vacant when required! This arrangement will, of course, make an opening for Sir Vansittart Stonhouse, whose succession to a seat in council will cause very general satisfaction.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

OFF-RECKONINGS.

Fort St. George, July 8, 1851.—In consequence of the demise of Col. (Major-general) John Thomas Gibson, of the infantry, the following addition to the list of officers entitled to off-reckonings is authorized.

Col. Westrop Watkins—to half share from the Off-Reckoning Fund from the 1st July, 1851.

COURT-MARTIAL.

ENSIGN SAMUEL SEXTON, H.M.'s 94th REGT.

Head-Quarters, Madras, June 5, 1851.—At a general court-martial holden at Bangalore, on Thursday, April 24, 1851, and continued by adjournment to Thursday, May 22, following.—

Ens. S. Sexton, H.M.'s 94th regt., was arraigned on the following charge:—

Charge.—For conduct highly unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman in the following instances:—

First Instance.—In having at Cannanore, between Sept. 17, 1849, and April 15, 1850, wilfully, maliciously, and calumniously originated and circulated a false report, highly to the prejudice of the character of Lieut. R. W. N. Vaughan, of H.M.'s 94th regt., to the effect that, in a conversation he, Ens. S. Sexton, had with the said Lieut. R. W. N. Vaughan, the latter gave him to understand that he had been employed by Brig. H. R. Milner, commanding Malabar and Canara, to procure for him for illicit purposes a woman then at the public bungalow at Cannanore, and moreover that he, Lieut. R. W. N. Vaughan, had read to him, Ens. S. Sexton, a note purporting to be from Brig. H. R. Milner, to himself, containing a request that he would assist him, Brig. H. R. Milner, in compassing his purposes with the woman in question, such report so originated and circulated by him, Ens. S. Sexton, being altogether false and unfounded; no such conversation ever having taken place, and no such note ever having had existence.

Second Instance.—In having at Cannanore, on April 29, 1850, when waited on by Lieuts. G. Mahon and D. H. Blair, both of H.M.'s 94th regt., and told by those officers that the report set forth in the first instance of the charge had become generally known in the cantonment of Cannanore, and that it had been stated that he, Ens. S. Sexton, was the originator of it, at first denied that such report had been originated by him, but subsequently acknowledged that he had originated the report in question, falsely stating at the same time that Lieut. R. W. N. Vaughan had read to him, Ens. S. Sexton, the note alluded to in the first instance of the charge, and further that he, Ens. S. Sexton, had seen the signature at the bottom of the note, which he was prepared to swear was Brigadier H. R. Milner's.

The above being in breach of the Articles of War.

(Signed) R. W. VAUGHAN, Lieut.
H.M.'s 94th regt.

Cannanore, 16th July, 1850.

Upon which charge, the Court came to the following decision:—

Finding.—Not guilty; and doth therefore acquit him.

Approved and confirmed.

(Signed) G. H. BERKELEY, Lieut. gen.

Head-quarters, Madras, 4th June, 1851.

Ensign Samuel Sexton is to be released from arrest, and directed to rejoin his regiment.

This order is to be entered in the general order-book and read at the head of every regiment in H.M.'s service on the establishment of Fort St. George.

By order of his Exc. Lieut. general Sir G. H. F. Berkeley, K.C.B.

THE COMMERCIAL BANK.

PROCEEDINGS OF A HALF-YEARLY GENERAL MEETING OF THE COMMERCIAL BANK OF INDIA, 19TH JULY, 1851.

PRESENT—D. McCulloch, Esq. in the chair;

Cowasjee Nanabhoj, Esq.; Ardaseer Hormusjee, Esq.; Cowasjee Jehanghier, Esq.; Framjee Nasserwanjee, Esq.; R. Duins, Esq.; J. Geddes, Esq.; W. De Blaquiere, Esq.; Suntookjee Nanabhoj, Esq.; J. F. Hutchinson, Esq.; A. Lyon, Esq.; Manockjee Nasserwanjee, Esq.; Framjee Nanabhoj, Esq.; Luckmida's Dharsey, Esq., &c. &c.

The Chairman having read the advertisement convening the meeting, stated, that the directors had very little to report to the shareholders beyond what had already appeared in the auditor's report; but that he would make one or two remarks on the accounts. First, he was happy to state to the proprietors that during the past six months not a single bad debt had been made. Secondly, he begged to point out to their notice that the Government paper is valued in the accounts at par, whereas the 5 per cent. paper above 3 lacs of rupees is now saleable at 5 per cent. premium, and the directors hope to be able to realize it at a considerably higher rate.

Mr. Geddes asked the Chairman if he considered the debt of Messrs. D. and M. Pestonjee secure?

The Chairman stated to the meeting the various properties held by the bank as security for this debt, and that two of them had been sold—one at the original value set upon them by the directors, and the other had sold for 18,000 Rs.—the value put upon it by the directors having been 20,000 Rs.—and that he had stated at the last meeting that he did not think the bank would lose anything, and he still was inclined to the same opinion.

Mr. De Blaquiere begged to know what the directors proposed doing with the Ceylon debt?

The Chairman stated that an offer had been previously made of 500l. for the Cocoa-nut Estate, but the directors hoped to realize more than that sum: in the mean time they considered that the account should stand as it is.

Moved by W. De Blaquiere, Esq.; seconded by Capt. Duins:—"That the directors' report be adopted."—Carried unanimously.

Moved by W. De Blaquiere, Esq.; seconded by A. Lyon, Esq.:—

"That the thanks of this meeting be given to the chairman and directors for their able services during the past half-year."—Carried unanimously.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Mahi, with the London Mail of June 24, reached Bombay July 24.

MR. ARATHOON is a small shopkeeper, who, some dozen of years ago, had forwarded some supplies to the Bengal officers in Afghanistan, which, unlike similar adventures on the part of some of our Parsee shopkeepers, proved eminently profitable. In 1849 or 1841, he induced Captain (now Sir Henry) Lawrence to grant him a lease of some waste lands around Ferozepore, on light clearance terms; and he afterwards undertook to set up a sugar manufactory, but never seems to have carried out either project. He was without capital, but at all times full of schemes, and had lately been employed in a small way in trading on the Sutlej and Beas. He next turned his attention to the felling of timber on the banks of these rivers; but not content with the powers or profits of an ordinary trader, he in October last applied to Government for powers which would, if granted, have virtually made him master of the forests of the hill chiefs, and secured for him the compulsory labour of their subjects whenever he might fancy that he required it.—Bombay Times.

RITCHIE, STUART, and Co. are determined on extending their cotton plantations in Candeish, and upwards of 11,000 pounds of American seed have just been transmitted to Mr. Constable, their superintendent at Dhurrungaum. With good management there seems no reason to doubt that Candeish can be made to supply cotton of the best quality in any quantity that may be desired. Were a few more of the wealthy houses of Bombay to follow the example set by Ritchie, Stuart, and Co., the effect sure to be produced on the quality of the staple sent to market would be almost magical.—Ibid.

THE PLAGUE OF FROGS.—It is close on a century since Dr. Ives expressed his astonishment at the amount of frogs and fish with which the whole island of Bombay seemed to swarm within ten days or a fortnight of the setting in of the monsoon. "Betwixt the 10th and 15th of June," says he, "you see the people angling in every pool and puddle all over the island;" and a little later in the season he describes the land as covered with frogs. The lapse of a hundred years has made no change in these respects, and at the present moment may be seen what the worthy traveller described a century ago in the first published account we possess of the meteorology of Bombay. The marvel is where they all come from: the fish are all littoral, and are to be met with in the sea along our shores all the year round: how they manage to get or to live on shore, on the tops of our highest eminences, is more than we can explain. The mystery of the frogs is still greater than that of the fish. In the last week of May scarcely one is anywhere to be seen—they have even deserted our wells and tanks, or if a few are still to be met with, they are of the most insignificant dimensions in comparison to those which presently make their appearance. This season, nearly all our wells and tanks were dry. No sooner have we had rain sufficient to moisten the ground and afford a few pools of water, than "croak, croak, croak," we have them in thousands everywhere. At first they are dark brown, and rough in their exterior, but all immediately change their colour to an intensely yellow gamboge tint, and may, when seen at the edge of our larger pools, be readily mistaken for gigantic water-flowers. At present they may on an average weigh from 1½ to 2 lbs. avoirdupois, and when swimming measure full a foot from the snout to the tip of the extended hind feet—the feet spread out are nearly ten inches apart. They sometimes leap a distance of two or three yards at a spring. By the middle of July they fall off to about half their present size, and change their hue to a yellowish brown, with beautiful green bars from the sides of the mouth back towards the shoulders. Scarcely anything appears to have been written about them by naturalists, and all we can find in our books of reference are a few general anatomical characters which convey no information worth possessing. The tree frog is the only reptile, perhaps the only wild creature, in existence, that of its own accord seems to seek the society of man. The feet of this beautiful little creature are provided with an apparatus by which it can not only climb trees and walls, but support itself on a plate of glass, however much inclined. They not only climb up the outside of our doors and windows, as if observing the proceedings within, but will sometimes select the top of a mirror or book-case, or outside of a glass globe, for the season. To whatever part of the house they may be carried, even when removed on purpose some hundred yards away, they return to their favourite haunts, their great pleasure appearing to be human society. Though they do not like to be handled, they seem to experience no alarm at being approached, however nearly.—Bombay Times, June 17.

ROMAN CATHOLIC DIFFERENCES.—A case of very rare occurrence in India was brought up before the Supreme Court of Bombay, on the 13th June. The Roman Catholic inhabitants of Mahim have for years been divided into two parties, one side supporting the jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Goa, and the other side a Carmelite bishop of their own. The Court of Directors, according to the terms of the treaty by which Bombay and Mahim were handed over to the English crown, appear to retain a kind of jurisdiction in matters ecclesiastical. This jurisdiction they have invariably employed according to the wishes of the people, and after several changes, have allowed the parishioners of one of the churches of the island, named Nossa Senhora de Salvacao, to choose their own vicar, though under the jurisdiction of the Carmelite bishop. The latter now wishes to obtain the appointment of the vicar, and has endeavoured to interfere with the church property. The parishioners accordingly brought an action against him, to which he demurred on the ground of want of equity; and the demurrer has been allowed.

SHARP PRACTICE.—The Bombay Times gives a laughable anecdote of a "bit of sharp practice" upon the part of a medical practitioner in that presidency. Dr. Fogerty, the practitioner in question, had attended the police-office to prefer a complaint against a servant, when a little boy was brought in with a severe cut on the forehead, said to have been given by the staff of a police peon. Dr. Fogerty was casually asked by the magistrate whether he thought it had been given by such an instrument, upon which he expressed his opinion in the affirmative. A few minutes after the following note was presented to the magistrate:—

" — SPENS, Esq.

" Magistrate of Police, Bombay, &c.

" To DR. FOGERTY.

" To opinion on oath in a case of concised wound of the scalp situate on the Os frontis—this day in your Court—Fifteen Rupees.

" WILLIAM KEYS FOGERTY, M.R.C.S.

" London and Edinburgh."

SIR JAMSETJEE JEEJEEBHoy—Having involved himself in a dispute with another Parsee merchant, about the custody of an hospital for the maintenance of dumb animals, Sir Jamsetjee, in the course of the discussion, published a pamphlet in Guzeratee, containing imputations upon his opponent's character for integrity. An action for libel was immediately commenced, and the damages laid at Rs. 20,000. A demurrer was put into court by Sir Jamsetjee's counsel, but it was disallowed, and Sir Jamsetjee instructed either to plead guilty, or a justification.

THE COMMERCIAL BANK OF INDIA has declared a dividend at the rate of seven per cent. per annum for the half-year ending 30th ultimo. The net profit for the half-year is Rs. 1,37,974-7-6, of which Rs. 15,789-7-6 has been set apart to the credit of undivided profits and reserve fund accounts.

MAJOR LEWIS BROWN, 5th regiment N.L.I., died at Baroda on the 16th July. The lamented officer had received a kick from his horse a few days previously, by which the bone of his leg had been broken just above the ankle joint; this brought on lock-jaw, and death ensued. Major Brown was well known for his gallant defence of Kalun in the Murree Hills in 1840. For this he was made an aide-de-camp to the Governor-General and political superintendent of Pahlunpore, and two years ago he was promoted to the Rewa Caunta agency. He had been twenty-five years in the service.

COL. MACAN.—It is with much regret we have to announce the demise of Lieut.-Col. Macan, commanding the 6th regiment Bombay N.I. which took place 7th July, at the presidency. The deceased officer was attacked with apoplexy on Thursday last, and his case was almost from the first considered hopeless.—Bombay Telegraph, July 25.

SIR WALTER GILBERT is engaged in a commission to inspect and report upon the studs of the Hon. Company. His coadjutors are Col. Bradford, of the 1st light cavalry, and Major Dickson, of the stud department.

ROBBERY OF THE ORIENTAL BANK.—The principal domestic occurrence at Bombay has been the trial of the prisoners committed to gaol on the charge of robbing the Oriental Bank, and of uttering a forged cheque for twenty thousand rupees. After a lengthened but most impartial trial, both the prisoners were found guilty: the Parsee was sentenced to fourteen years' transportation, the other to seven years; an attempt to stand out for a verdict of not guilty was made by a Parsee professing to have had an English education, but the reasonings of the presiding judge, and the arguments of his fellow-jurymen, speedily convinced the man that he had no chance of succeeding in his design. It now appears that there were at least no fewer than thirty-three forgeries paid at the counter of the Oriental Bank during the time that Doraljee was in office, involving an enormous loss, and exhibiting a degree of wanton and most cruel negligence on the part of those whose duty it was to protect the interests of those who intrusted them with the charge of superintending their affairs.—Bombay Telegraph, July 25.

The Command of the H. C. steamer Nemesis having become vacant by the transfer of Capt. T. Wallace to the Enterprise, Capt. G. J. Niblett, of the steamer Phlegethon, we understand, has been promoted by order of Government to the command of the Nemesis, and Mr. H. Goodwin, at present in temporary charge of the Nemesis, has been appointed to the Phlegethon. The former will, we learn, draw Rs. 500, and the latter Rs. 400 per month.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Applications from officers so circumstanced, for leave beyond the limits of the presidency, must be preferred, and disposed of in the military department; but in the latter case, the officer is bound to obtain in the first instance, through the civil department, permission to prefer his application in the military department, except in cases of certified illness, when, to obviate the consequences of delay, the latter condition may, if necessary, be dispensed with, the officer on the day of his making application to the military department merely notifying to the head of the civil department in which he may be serving, that he has so done. In this case the head of the department will immediately make to Government, through the proper channel, the same remarks in support of, or against the application, that he would have made had it been preferred through him.

By order of the Right Hon. the Gov. in Council,

J. G. LUMSDEN, Sec. to Govt.

CHINA.

The troubles caused by the outlaws in the southern provinces of China increase, and by a late report from Canton we learn that one of the leaders in Kwang-Si has not only taken to himself the title of a sovereign, but has gone so far as to name this the first year of Tien Teh, the Virtue of Heaven, which he would have to be the style of his reign—coining copper cash bearing these characters, and issuing invitations to the able of the land to come forward and take office. Whether he has united under him those chiefs who have before written themselves Wang, "kings," the outlaws of Kwang-Si alone, or all those of Hu Nan and Kwang-Tung, who have spread even to the borders of Kiang-Si, we are not informed. The death of Commissioner Li Sing-yuen, on the 12th of May, is believed at Canton, and that of the General Hiang-Yung, who was to have done so much, has been some time reported. Our authority for stating that the mischief has reached Kiang-Si is a memorial published at Peking on the 29-30th of March, reporting the repulse of "certain outlaws of the Ying-teh and other districts, who had fired a guard station at Ting-Nan in Kiang-Si about the 24th of January, and of a body of the same, 700 or 800 strong, in the adjoining district of Lung-nan, the following day." These are at no great distance from the Kwang-Tung district of Ung-yuen, which has been many months overrun.

We have hitherto hesitated to designate these outlaws by the name of rebels; apprehensive lest this term applied to them should induce a belief that their outrages, as banditti, are incidental to the development of a preconcerted scheme to subvert the Manchu dynasty; an aspect under which some were disposed to view their first opposition to Government. We have no grounds for assuming more than that these desperadoes, of whose rise and progress in different parts of the south we have had several notices since the inundations and consequent famine of 1818-9, have been encouraged to make the most of a predatory life, to which their necessities had driven them, by the disgraceful apathy of the provincial officers, who, especially in Kwang-Si, have laboured with success to keep the court comparatively in the dark until a few months ago. In a decree, issued between the 30th of April and the 5th of May, the emperor states, that "though efforts have been made for the last half-year to exterminate the outlaws they are not yet put down." His majesty seems at length to be seriously alarmed, if we may judge from some papers alluded to below; but before proceeding to these it will not be out of place at the present stage to review briefly the history of the downfall of the Mongolian Yuen, between the circumstances attending which, and those of the insurrection alleged to threaten the security of the Ta Tsing, there is, however, no small dissimilarity.

In 1351 extraordinary taxes were imposed by Shun Ti, the last monarch of the Yuen, to enable him to form a new channel for the Yellow River. This dissatisfied many, and an ex-minister, who declared himself the descendant of the 8th emperor of the Sung, assumed command of the malcontents of Shang-Tung, Ho-Nan, and Kiang-Nan; he was joined by another at the head of 100,000 men; meanwhile a famous pirate harassed the coast of Kiang-Nan and Choh-Kiang. In the 10th moon another rebel in Hu-Kwang declared himself emperor, but in 1355 the colleague of the first proclaimed his, the ex-minister's son, emperor in Honan. In 1356 a young priest, who had been actively employed since 1352 in promoting a revolt against the Yuen, beat the Mongols at Nankin; in 1358 took possession of the capital of Hu-Kwang; and in 1364 overthrew a Chinese who had usurped the soi-disant empire of the Hu-Kwang claimant. The priest eventually established himself as emperor at Nankin in 1368; and, the last of the Yuen having fled in terror against the advice of his ministers, reigned for thirty-one years as Hung-Wu, the founder of the Ming. (See De Mailla, vol. x.)

The Yuen owed their downfall, which it took seventeen years to effect, to an overt act of tyranny producing immediate revolt. The only definite complaint against the Manchu family is that it usurped the empire 200 years ago, a cry not, of course, without its interest in China, but certainly not connected a twelvemonth since with the disturbances in the Two Kwang by the Chinese to whom we have ordinary access at Canton. It would be singular were the violence of the impracticable river known as "China's sorrow," once more to lead, though less directly than before, to the expulsion of the foreign usurpers of the throne.

A number of decrees issued between the 30th of April and the 5th of May were received in Canton about the middle of June. Seven of them relate to the outlaws. The first, which is to be promulgated especially among the inhabitants of the "rocky districts," sc. Kwang-Si, notices with satisfaction two partial victories obtained by the imperial troops, and the capture of some chiefs of the "rebels." 3,800 veterans are on their way from Hu-Nan and Kwai-Chau, and 1,000 picked men from An-Hwui. Commissioner Li and the rest have orders to make such use of their ground, "that if the outlaws advance they shall not dare to resist; if they attempt to fly no retreat shall be left open to them." Those constrained to act with them are to be pardoned if they come over, and rewards are to be given to any who deliver up the chiefs bound, &c.

The next document, which is also to have general circulation, states that 200 banner-men, and a reserve of 40, will leave Peking immediately for the borders of Hu-Nan and Kwang-Si. Saishangah has orders to leave the city after these; to minimise the suites of the officers accompanying him, and to keep the soldiery from extortion, and from smuggling merchandise for traders, for which on marches they employ the people supposed to carry their baggage at the expense of the state, and occupy much room to which they are not entitled when they halt. He is to leave the offending on the march, and to denounce all authorities, whose avarice of popularity may be found to have interfered with the efficiency of the military or police of their districts.

The third, above adverted to, deploras the ill success of the last half-year's efforts, and commiserates the condition of the lower orders. The premier, Saishangah, Patsingteh, a captain-general of banner-men, and Tahungah, of Formosan notoriety, are sent to the frontiers of Hu-Nan and Kwang-Tung; Li Sing-yuen, Chau Tienstsioh, and Hian Yung are desired not to relax their efforts because of this arrangement, and are promised that they shall be "steeped" in extraordinary favour, if they are able to announce a victory before the arrival of the last-mentioned officers. It is mentioned in a previous decree that Saishangah is used to being sent on special missions, and will be able in consequence to keep the troops in order. This one closes with an affectionate assurance of his majesty's desire to put an end to the long suffering of the people, and an order for its general circulation.

The fourth states that in addition to 800,000 taels already granted to Li Sing-heun for the war expenses, the board of revenue have orders to remit 1,000,090 more to Kwang-Si, and the private treasury of the crown; in the court of the household, 1,000,090 more, to testify his majesty's affectionate regard for his southern states, his anxiety concerning which ceases not night or day, &c.

The fifth gives Chau Tien-tsioh the control of the military operations in Kwang si, appointing Lau Tsung-kwang governor of the province; and the remaining two are devoted to the reward and punishment of merit and delinquency in the engagements noticed above, which were reported as victories. As is usual, the slaughter of "ten and more," and the capture of "some tens," are made matters of self-gratulation.

The following memorial of Su Ting-kwei contains a remarkable evidence of the importance now attached by the Government to this insurrection:—"Su Ting-kwei, corresponding secretary of the cabinet for the board of war, addressed the emperor on an ancient text, importing that where the good man begins well he will succeed in the end. He would have rejoiced to see the re-establishment of the daily readings, before recommended by a vice-president of the board of ceremonies, but negatived by the board in council; as these cannot be, he beseeches his majesty to keep two matters constantly in remembrance—first, that the banditti in the Two-Kwang are not yet put down; secondly, that the English barbarians are constantly on the look out for a cause of quarrel with him." The memorial is a tolerably long homily on self-government, both for the sake of the advantage to be conferred on others by example, and of the attainment of the knowledge which secures a right judgment in the selection of fit persons to serve the state.—China Mail.

COREA.

The North China Herald, May 31st, publishes a narrative of the loss of the French whaler Narwal, on one of the islands of the Amherst group, on the S.W. coast of Corea, and of the rescue of the crew.

The Narwal having been out twelve months without fish, her master (Rivalan) determined to cruise in the seas of Corea and Japan until the season allowed him to proceed to Behring's Straits. He entered the Yellow Sea in March, and after sighting the Shantung promontory, crossed over to the coast of Corea, turned southwards, and, proceeding through the archipelago, reached the last group, the Amherst Islands, when, on the 2nd April, the vessel struck on a sand-bank, a few miles north-west of the island, called Fei-kin-taou, N. lat. 34° 11'. They succeeded in getting off the ship, which was brought to anchor. During the following night a hard gale suddenly sprung up from the north-west, which, aided by a strong ebb tide, caused the vessel to drag her anchors, and in the morning of the 3rd she struck on the rocky and precipitous coast of that island. In a few minutes after striking, the decks burst up with a loud report, and the ship was literally crushed to pieces. Meanwhile, the captain and chief portion of the crew had pushed off in the whale-boats, while the others sprang upon a projecting ledge of rock, and with the exception of one man, who was drowned, they succeeded in climbing up the precipice. The boats kept off until daylight, when they entered a small cove to the north, and the men, landing, joined their companions already on shore. The whole coast was strewn with the wreck, and collecting empty casks, spars, &c., they set to work to establish a camp. So sudden was the disaster that little else had been saved beyond the clothes on their persons, and a small quantity of biscuit. Fortunately, the natives of the island, although they showed a propensity to pilfer, seemed otherwise well disposed, and the head men of the nearest village brought supplies of rice to the shipwrecked crew. Thus they remained for a week, on good terms with the natives, when the chief officer, M. Arnaud, and eight of the men, having come to the resolution to attempt to reach the coast of China, secretly prepared one of the three whale-boats, with a small supply of biscuit and water, and under cover of night took their departure from the island. After considerable suffering from cold and wet, and from want of room, being unable to lie down to rest, after a five days' passage, they sighted the Chusan islands, and were shown the way to the harbour of Lookong by a Chinese fishing-boat. Seldom, perhaps never, had so small a bark crossed the Yellow Sea in safety.

On the arrival of M. Arnaud and his companions at Shanghai, on the 19th April, M. de Montigny, the French consul, accompanied by M. Arnaud and four of his men, took the resolution to proceed himself to the rescue of his countrymen. They engaged a Macao lorch, a stout-built but roughly-finished craft of about twenty-one feet beam, drawing with the rudder down about eight feet water, having one large and two smaller masts, with mat sails. The armament consisted of five guns, with abundance of small arms. The crew was composed of Portuguese and Canton Chinese. The former were the officers; the latter the working seamen. The captain was a native of Macao, and all spoke Chinese.

They left the river on the 20th April, and on the 25th arrived at the western point of Quelpart Island, in lat. 33° 19'. Throughout its coast Quelpart possesses "but one safe anchorage," according to Sir E. Belcher, at the eastern or opposite end of the island. No houses were visible except one beyond the hill, but they soon observed people collecting on the beach above their anchorage, to gaze at the unusual visitor; and a catamaran, sculled by one man, passed over from the rocky islet to the shore. They proceeded on shore, with the European sailors, all well armed, landing on rocks at a point where a small stream found its way through a very rocky channel into the sea. In the mouth of this rivulet were about a dozen catamarans aground on the rocks, it being low water. They were formed by ten or twelve pine logs of about fourteen feet in length, securely lashed together, with a top-work of a few uprights and cross bars of wood, and are well adapted for such a rocky coast. The people on the beach were of the lowest class, clad in the usual wide quilted jacket and trousers of unbleached coarse hempen cloth, yet their appearance did not seem to indicate less cleanliness or comfort than that of the same order of Chinese. Their complexions were similar to Chinese of a corresponding latitude, yet their tout ensemble was very different, arising chiefly from the head not being shaved, as in China, the men wearing the hair tied up in a knot on the crown of the head, and the boys having it long and hanging over the back. They were good humoured, cheerfully collecting shells, sponges, &c., for them, in the hope of being rewarded with a cigar. Presently the whole party having landed, at the top of the beach an officer appeared, talking in a loud key, and gesticulating with some vehemence. He had just arrived on a little rough pony, and as they approached he beckoned to them to return on board. They replied by handing him a slip of paper, with a line in Chinese, intimating that they intended to have a parley with him at his house. This he read off in a loud and interrogative tone; then talked on for some minutes in a vociferous voice, as before, and, as they showed no intention of returning, he suddenly mounted his little horse and trotted off. The day was wet, and the country dreary; but they trudged on by a narrow road, confined within stone dykes on either hand, and at the time little better than a watercourse. Around the foot of the hill were small fields of young wheat; farther down, on the other hand, the land was marshy. They soon descried the walls of a fort. One of the Coreans accompanying them beckoned them to follow him into the fort; but, the gate being shut, they turned off, and entered the first cottage in the adjacent hamlet. It was that of a poor husbandman, having three small apartments nearly filled with agricultural implements, &c., walls not six feet high, and thatched roof; a rough stone dyke of about six feet high enclosing the premises. The yard in front was soon thronged by the Coreans, most of whom could read and write Chinese; accordingly they addressed one of the principal men, inquiring regarding the officer and the fort. The former they were told was a "Great-Frontier-Protecting-General." The following dialogue in writing ensued:—"Tell the Great-Frontier-Protecting-General that we, guests, are waiting to be received." "The General has no time for idle conversation." "Not very polite." "Our country is distinguished for propriety of manners and rectitude of principle." "How many men and guns are there in that fort?" "The laws of our country are very severe, and forbid communication with you, so I cannot tell you." The scribe, moving away, drew his hand across his throat.

Finding nothing could be learned thus, they advanced to the fort. The gate was still shut, but one of the European sailors climbed over the wall to open it from the inside, while the Canton braves, each armed with a pair of the double short swords, put on a fierce look, as if in expectation of a desperate sortie from the garrison. Great was the amusement, therefore, to perceive, on the gate being opened, that the interior contained nothing but a field of young wheat, with several small huts and two ponies at the further end. The wall of the fort was built of rough stone, about twenty feet in height, having numerous embrasures on the parapet and of a quadrangular form, with a projecting bastion at each of the four corners, and a covered gateway. It was about 200 yards long and about 100 broad.

Advancing up the path they perceived the general bustling about, who received them courteously in a small square cottage. Mats were spread on the floors, chairs not being in use in this part of Corea, but finding the posture not very convenient, the general did his best to procure substitutes for chairs.

Shortly after, conversation commenced in Chinese writing; the people collected around, began to express their interest in the proceedings with more noise than was agreeable, intimation of which being given, the general gave a loud order, and a man was instantly seized in the crowd. Making no resistance, he quietly submitted to be thrown on the ground with his face downwards; his clothes were then drawn down bare from the waist to the knees, and the instrument of flagellation was about being applied to the hams of his legs, when we interfered. The instrument resembled in size and shape the blade of a wherry's oar, having a round handle of about two feet, and would seem to be in much more diligent use than even the bamboo in China for the same purpose. It is a cruel and severe punishment, tearing the flesh and making the blood spurt after a few strokes are given.

FORMOSA.

The American barque Antelope, on her passage to Shanghai, was lying, on the night of the 1st June, newly becalmed off the south point of Formosa, when a boat was observed coming from the shore, and as several others were also near her, an attack from pirates being apprehended, Capt. Rounchy had his carromades loaded, and small arms prepared, and then fired a shot over the heads of the people in the boat. Shortly afterwards those in the Antelope heard the voices of Englishmen requesting that they might be taken on board. Capt. Rounchy accordingly hove to, and received three men—Alexander Beris, able seaman; William Blake, joiner; and James Hill, a lad of nineteen years of age, the sole survivors of the crew of the barque Larpet, of Liverpool.

It appears that the Larpet left Liverpool on the 18th of May last, on a voyage to Shanghai; the crew, including Mr. Bland (brother of Mr. Bland, of the firm of Shaw, Bland, & Co., of Shanghai), a passenger, acting as third mate, numbering thirty-one. On the 12th of September she passed Botel Tobago Xima, a lofty island, three or four miles in extent, bearing E. half N. from the South Cape, Formosa, from which it is distant thirteen leagues. At 9.30 p.m. all hands were alarmed at the ship suddenly striking on a rock. By backing the head sails, however, the ship came off almost immediately, but, on sounding the pumps, seven feet of water were found in the hold. The following day, as there was no prospect of gaining on the leak, Capt. Gilson ordered the quarter-boats to be lowered, and the launch to be hoisted out. In the hurry the jolly-bout stove and became useless. The captain, mate, and six men then got into the starboard quarter-boat, the remaining members of the crew taking to the launch, in which some provisions had been placed.

On the weather clearing up a little at daylight, they found themselves close to the shore, somewhere in the vicinity of the place designated on the map of Formosa, Mat-lar. Here they landed for the purpose of getting fresh water, and with the intention, also, of caulking the long boat. But in these purposes they were prevented by the natives coming down in great numbers, and plundering them of every moveable. Captain Gilson determined on putting to sea again to endeavor to reach Hong-Kong, a distance of four hundred miles. Both boats started together, but the launch, still leaking considerably, was unable to keep up with the lighter boat, and, parting company, she was never more seen; although it was afterwards heard that Capt. Gilson had landed near South Cape.

At daylight on the 14th the launch having rounded the extreme point, the crew landed on a shelving beach, surrounded by bushes. About 8 a.m., almost without any previous warning, they found themselves in the midst of a deadly fire of matchlocks. Young Mr. Bland was observed to spring a great height into the air and fall flat on his face, dead; those who could swim immediately took to the water, from whence the savages were seen, with long knives, stabbing those who were wounded, and immediately cutting off their heads, which, to the number of nineteen, were then thrown into a terrible heap. Blake, the joiner, says that, although wounded by a shot when in the water, he swam for several miles across a broad bight, and had landed under a huge sugar-loaf rock, thoroughly exhausted, thinking that he was the only one saved, when, turning his eyes seaward, he observed the boy Hill, pursued by an enormous shark. The lad appeared nearly exhausted, and was about to sink; but cheered by his voice, he gave a few more strokes and grounded in shoal water, from whence he dragged himself over the coral to the place where Blake was sitting. Here they had not remained long when two natives with matchlocks were seen traversing a beach at some distance, apparently in pursuit of them. But they succeeded in hiding themselves for the time, and afterwards escaped to the mountains, where they remained until the 19th. Exhausted nature could hold out no longer, and, at a time when Blake says the feelings of a cannibal had arisen in his breast, and he insanely thought of partaking of his comrade's blood, rather than remain longer without food, they wandered into a field where some villagers were at work. From them they obtained a meal of rice, and shelter, and were afterwards made to work with the village labourers from daylight till dark; sometimes in boats diving for large shell-fish, at others with hoes about the paddy-ground.

The man Beris and another had landed at a different place, from whence they tried to reach a junk, in which one of them, Harrison, succeeded, but was almost immediately shot and decapitated in sight of his comrade. Beris appears to have subsequently joined Blake and Hill, the latter of whom, being unable to do so much work as the others, was subjected to very severe treatment. At the expiration of five months the villagers sold them to some neighbours for six dollars apiece; the purchasers proving to be of a more friendly disposition than the original holders.

The shipwrecked men tell of having seen on the beach, near where they landed, an anchor of about 1,900 cwt.—chain cable—cat and top blocks—iron knees, a bronze figure-head, four feet long, and other ship gear, the possession of which might be a clue to the fate of several vessels of which we are still in ignorance. They also heard of two white men being in captivity, but could not ascertain where.

We are informed that H.M.S. Cleopatra will proceed to Formosa, for what purpose, however, we are not advised. The extermination of every member of the bloodthirsty clan inhabiting the southern promontory of Formosa would be but an act of justifiable vengeance; but, in face of the sickening feeling of false humanity pervading a great number of our senators at home, there is no prospect of any action of this kind.

ADEN.

Another outrage has been committed by the Arabs in the neighbourhood of this place, evincing their deadly hatred towards British subjects. The Sons of Commerce, laden with coals, grounded upon the coast on the 11th July, in very boisterous weather. Next day, the captain and crew took to the cutter and launch, bringing away what was most valuable in the ship, intending to row to Aden. There was a heavy sea running directly against them, and in a short time the first mate, who commanded the launch, made known to the captain his determination to land, alleging that, unless he did so, a sick man, named Murphy, who was in the boat with him, would die. To this the captain was opposed, but, perceiving that the mate had already grounded the launch, he also abandoned his original idea of making Aden by sea, and landed with the rest of the crew. A temporary shed was erected, and the captain, taking four of the men with him, marched off towards the town, in order to seek assistance. The only weapons they carried were a harpoon, two axes, and a bar of iron. They had not proceeded far when they were met by four armed Arabs, mounted on camels, who made as though they would attack them. The sailors, however, showed front, and the Arabs passed them a short distance, dismounted, and then turned to pursue them. They escaped unhurt, and succeeded in reaching the "Wall," quite exhausted. Not long after the departure of the captain and his party, a number of Arabs approached the shed with hostile demonstrations. The mate, fancying that plunder was their object, held out his watch to them; whereupon he received two gunshot wounds from the Arabs, one of whom then plunged a dagger into his back, and a third ripped up his belly with a similar weapon. This was a signal for the rest to flee, leaving the sick man, Murphy, under the shed. Several shots were fired at them by their pursuers, one of which grazed the arm and another the hair of the fugitives. They reached Aden, partly that night and partly the following day, when the frigate Elphinstone was despatched, under instructions from the local political authorities, with 50 Highlanders and 70 men of the 3rd Madras N.I., under Capt. Lockhart, and accompanied by Mr. Cruttenden, the assistant political, who marched beyond the "Wall," and succeeded in picking up a couple of the crew. There were still three men missing, viz. the chief mate, who had been murdered; Murphy, the invalid; and the carpenter. It being made known to the Highlanders by a Somali fisherman that an European was lying on the beach not far from their barracks, about 50 of their number went out in search of him. They found him well nigh senseless from fatigue and thirst, and both officers and men vied in their efforts to restore him. The poor fellow turned out to be the carpenter. On nearing the wreck, many Arabs were seen making their escape from her to the shore. A party was then despatched by Lieut. Batt, under Lieut. Lithgow, to examine the vessel. As many as twelve shots were fired upon the boat's crew by the Arabs, who were assembled on the beach to the number of 400. The morning following, another survey was made of the wreck, but finding that she was beyond rescue, and that to attempt to dismantle her in a position so dangerous, and while the sea was so boisterous, would endanger the lives of his crew, Lieut. Batt again set sail for Aden.

AUSTRALASIA.

An Anti-Transportation League, intended to embrace all the Australian colonies, has been formed at Melbourne, and large sums readily subscribed by the inhabitants of Victoria to defray its expenses. In April, delegates from Victoria and Van Diemen's Land went to Sydney to invite the inhabitants of New South Wales to join the League. The delegates were received with enthusiasm; they were entertained at a banquet; and a public meeting resolved, without one dissentient voice, to dissolve the Anti-Convict Association at Sydney, and join the League. Liberal subscriptions to the funds of the League were announced at the meeting. Eager, inveterate, uncompromising, the public feeling throughout Australia (with the exception, perhaps, of the poverty-stricken and isolated Western Australia) is now as irresistibly bent upon the abolition of convict transportation, as the public feeling in North America was in 1776 upon the assertion of independence, and the public feeling in Great Britain in 1832 upon the carrying of the Reform Bill. So intent are its members on the accomplishment of their end, that they are ready to adopt any means that promise to promote it. Already, independence of imperial control is freely canvassed as one of these means. And it is not the abolition of convict transportation to one or other province of Australia that is aimed at. The Australians know right well that convicts, if admitted into any one province, naturally and necessarily overflow into its neighbours; and they loudly and peremptorily declare that convict transportation to the whole of Australia must be put an end to. Concurrently with convict transportation, another topic of not less vital importance agitates the Australian mind. In all the provinces, except New South Wales, the elections under the Australian Colonies Government Act were in active progress at the dates of the latest despatches. The colonists were bent upon making the most of that measure. In New South Wales the Legislative Council had been summoned to pass the bills required to give full effect to the Act. The Council, in its reply to the speech with which the Governor opened the session, declined to express any opinion of the Act, but notice had been given by Mr. Wentworth of a motion to address a remonstrance against it to the Crown. A strong opposition was organising, both in the council and out of doors, against the Governor's electoral bills. The province of New South Wales gives the tone in a great measure to most of the neighbouring settlements; and there can be little doubt that the first use made of the new Australian constitutions will be to commence a struggle with the home government for greater concessions.—Daily News.

SIAM.

The Singapore papers announce the death of the King of Siam on the 3rd of April—an event for some months anticipated, and which, it was feared, would be followed by the disturbances of a contested succession. This, however, has not been the case, and the throne is now occupied by two of the brothers of the late monarch, the eldest being head and the other second king. This division of authority (not without precedent in Siam) has taken place in the present instance in accordance with a legal nomination, made at the wish of the people by his late Majesty shortly before his death. The elder of the two new rulers reads and writes English with ease, and is well known to be favourable to a more extended intercourse.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

In a paper on "Some uncertain legends upon coins of the Indo-Scythian Princes of Cabul," by Mr. H. Torrens, late secretary of the Asiatic Society of Bengal (published in the last number of its journal), that able Oriental scholar has investigated this somewhat abstruse subject, and has arrived at results different from Professor Wilson, some of whose opinions he controverts with all due reverence to one to whom Indo-Bactrian numismatics owe much.

"The time," he observes, "appears now propitious for resuming the study of the history of Ancient Bactria, not simply as regards herself, but in her connection with India; and more particularly as respects later dynasties of Barbaric princes, the Indo-Parthians, the Indo-Scythians, and Sassanian monarchs, satraps, or prefects, who held sway, independently, or as tributaries to a greater power, in portions of the dismembered kingdom of the Bactrian Greeks. Provinces, some of which constituted component parts of these principalities, are now the frontier of the British Empire in the east; tranquillity and good government have succeeded the anarchy which so lately dislocated their whole system; amid the arts of peace, the local history of those lands through which successive races of mankind have from the remotest ages of the world poured themselves into the Indian peninsula, should most certainly be diligently investigated. The study should not simply be encouraged; it should be enjoined, and public measures taken, such as would be adopted by any other European Government placed in India as is that of England, to facilitate and promote inquiry as upon a question of science. It is not enough that from the little we do know something should have been deduced, and systematically put on record. The next step is to have a deduction critically examined, and tested by local investigation: if it still then hold good, we may either accept it as material for history, or at any rate allow it to pass current pending the appearance of further light.

"Much interest was excited by the appearance, on certain of the coins of Arian dynasties subsequent to the Greeks, of pure Greek words, and sometimes of Greek barbarized even to unintelligibility, in conjunction with the title of a Parthian or a Scythian prince. The immediate query in the mind of a philologist was, does this indicate the existence of a Græco-Barbaric vernacular language? Aristophanes introduces in The Birds a specimen of such a dialect, which no doubt, like the Carthaginian of Plautus's slaves, amused a classic audience as much as Pat or Sawney does an English one. The few words the barbarian of Aristophanes utters are chiefly bad Greek, which, if the conclusion be worth anything based on so small a fact, would lead one to infer that Greek in these dialects was predominant; and that, putting the case we come across an instance of one, the more Greek we can detect in it, the greater the likelihood that it constituted, not a sort of royal or medal language, but the actual vernacular of the particular people who made use of it. The thoughts involuntarily wander to the mountains of Kafiristan, that mysterious country, the Opprobrium Geographicæ Anglicæ, with its peculiar inhabitants, the self-declared descendants of Alexander's soldiers, who speak, say all informants, a peculiar and unintelligible language. This race of men, be they what they may, have certainly taken refuge from the overflowing tide of immigration in inaccessible haunts, where to this hour they exist, rarely, if ever, quitting their own limits. The Parthian, the Scythian and Sassanian, the endless tribes whom the Hindoos and Persians term Saka and the Greeks Σκύθαι (v. Wilson, Ar. Ant. C. III. p. 132, 4to ed.) have swept from the more accessible tracts of the lands they each in their turn sojourned in upon their way to India, the language and the race of their predecessors, after a partial adoption of the one, and an imperfect subjection of the other. It remains yet to be seen whether, safely removed from the high-way of nations, the descendants of those who were for a time tinctured with the tastes of the most civilized people of antiquity, may not be found extant, still perhaps retaining traces of the European stock they came of.

"It will perhaps not be uninteresting, before I proceed to a further identification of the Greek language than has yet been attempted, as the adopted tongue of barbaric princes dominant in Bactria, to make as it were a vocabulary of the Greek words in use upon their coins. These, it will be seen, are partly imitations, and adoptions of titles and attributive epithets in use with their predecessors, the Greek Bactrian monarchs;—and partly, which is very curious, verbal applications of their own, sometimes in pure Greek; occasionally, as I shall show, in words misused and mis-spelled; and sometimes, in their later periods, in an unintelligible farrago of letters, which either represent a wholly barbarized dialect, or else indicate the ignorant attempts of a barbaric people to continue the fashion of using a language, the knowledge of which had died out. The philological value of these indisputable facts consists in the indication it gives us—

"1. Of the existence in Bactria of a spoken dialect of the Greek current after the conquest of Alexander from the time of Theodotus, B.C. 256, to that of Pantaleon, B.C. 120, (v. for dates Wilson, Ar. Ant. C. IV. passim)—

"2. Because, as the language of established monarchy and of the dominant class, it was continued on the coinage of their barbaric successors—

"3. Preparing us for the occurrence of dialectic peculiarities, savouring of Greek origin in the language of unread inscriptions or even of spoken tongues with which further inquiry and investigation may make us acquainted.

"The number of Bactrian monarchs whom Professor Wilson sees reason to class as of unblemished Greek descent, is eighteen. The attempt to adjust their chronological succession has been loosely tried, but there can be no doubt that many, if not most of them, were cotermporary kings of different portions of what had been Grecian Bactria. The numismatic evidence in our possession shows Theodotus, whom Professor Wilson does not reckon in the number above noted, Euthydemus, and Demetrius, to have been the only purely Greek monarchs of Bactria; their title king, and their proper names simply, in the genitive case of the Greek, are given upon the coins as yet found, which have issued from their mint.

"Eukratides, B.C. 181, (I give Bayer's and Wilson's chronology) is the first who gives signs of orientalising, though in style of workmanship his silver tetradrachms are exquisite medallion specimens. He ceases to be simply king on all his coins: he becomes on some of them great king, and upon one,—the authority for this however is doubtful,—king saviour. The source of this amplified title is explained in the obverse of some only of his coins. His name as king; his title in Greek as great king; in Greek letters, are explained in the local dialect of the land he had adopted, and he appears in Pācrit as Mahārājā. We may trace on the one hand, in the sparse employment of the Pācrit legend in the case of this monarch, and on the other in the singular bungling manner in which some native artist doubtless has tried his hand at the Greek characters of his amplified title, signs of the fusion going on between the conquerors, and the conquered. His coins contribute to our vocabulary the word μεγας, 'great,' and perhaps σωτηρ, 'saviour.'

"The name Eukratides with the word μεγας occurs in conjunction with that of Heliokles, and Laodice on an unique coin procured by Dr. Lord, and described in this Journal (July, 1838, Pl. XXVII. fig. 1.) by, of course, our ever-lamented James Prinsep. Heliokles himself, however, B.C. 147, adopted the title of 'just'—δικαιος—as peculiar to himself, and this word, with its translation in Pācrit, obtains on almost all his coins.

"Lysias, B.C. 117, called himself ανικητος, 'the unconquered,' and translated the title on the Pācrit obverse of his coinage.

"Amyntas, B.C. 135, varied the royal attributive to νικατωρ, being the Doric form of νικητωρ, 'conqueror;' this word, again, is the poetic form of νικητηρ, or νικητης (v. Liddell and Scott's Lexicon). I am careful to show the irregularity of the language, for reasons to be given hereafter.

"Agathokleia, of whom one coin alone has been discovered, is the only queen who figures in the Bactrian dynasties. Her epoch is uncertain. She called her coin, piously and ungrammatically, as being βασιλισσας θεοτροποι (v), 'of the god-turn queen;' had τροπος been used adjectively, it should have been necessarily in the feminine. (?) The proper word is, θεοτρεπτος (Æschyl. Pers. 905), 'god-sent.' She is translated in Pācrit as maharnjasa (not rancee) midatasa mikasaklayasa.

"Antimachus, B.C. 140, boldly records on his tetradrachm his own apotheosis,—he is βασιλευς θεος, 'god;' on his hemidrachm, νικηφορος, 'bringing victory,' translated, like the νικατωρ of Amyntas, Jayadharasa.

"Philoxenes, B.C. 130, has the same title and translation as Lysias.

"Antialkides, B.C. 135, and Archelios, B.C. 125—120, both adopt the latter title of Antimachus.

"Menander, B.C. 126, who is mentioned by Strabo (Wilson, in loc.) as having crossed the Hypanis (Sutlej) and reached the Isamis (Jumna) river, a monarch whose extensive dominions lay to the eastward of Bactria Proper, has as title σωτηρ, 'saviour,' and on one coin, δικαιος.

"Apollodotus, who is also mentioned in narrative history, B.C. 110, continues the title σωτηρ; but in one remarkable coin adds to it, και φιλοπατορος (in the genitive), 'and father lover;' the Pācrit legend on this coin does not contain the translation of this new affix.

"Diomedes, (B.C. 100, and Hermæus, B.C. 98, continue the single title, σωτηρ; and the two last of the series of true Grecian monarchs, Agathokles, C.B. 135, and Pantaleon, B.C. 120, are both content with the plain monarchic prefix.

"We now reach the epoch of the first barbaric princes of Bactria, of whom it is sufficient in this place to say that they were Sakæ, Sakas, or Scythians, who, being, says Strabo, 'Asii, Pasiiani, Tokhari, and Sakarauti,' engaged the Parthians, and were ultimately forced upon Ariana, to the destruction of the Greek monarchies, and thence upon India, in which their progress was arrested by the prowess of Vicramāditya, king of Avanti or Oojain, B.C. 56, commonly called Sakiri, 'the foe of the Sakas.' (Wilson, in loc.) Some light is thrown upon the immigration of these hordes by the accounts of Chinese historians, quoted by Messrs. De Guignes and Rémusat, in addition to the information afforded by Strabo and Trogus Pompeius, of the whole of which Professor Wilson has made ample and excellent use. The chain of numismatic evidence, as respects these invaders, commences with the name of Eu, and Su Hermæus, according to the arrangement in the Ariana Antiqua. The coins are of barbarous execution, the Pracrit characters corrupt, the Greek very much so; the title is perhaps an exemplification of the actual manner in which the word σωτηρος, 'of the saviour,' was locally pronounced in a barbarized Greek dialect, viz. with the omission of the ω.

"Passing over a few coins of uncertain names, on which the learned have bestowed much trouble, only, in my opinion, to prove to us that they belong to a period of great internal confusion, during which the dominant chiefs could not command the services of any educated Greek, or even any competent artificer, we arrive at the epoch of Mayes, B.C. 100,—a barbarian king, whose barbarian title runs, βασιλεως βασιλεων μεγαλου Μαιον, 'of the king of kings, of great Mayes:' this is translated into Pracrit, Rajadhirajasa Mahatasa Ma-a-sa.

"A successor, who repeats the Mitridatic title, 'king of kings,' was Palirisus, B.C. 80, a king apparently of limited dominion and short reign. With the coins of this prince have been found sparingly those of Spalyrius, B.C. 75. The legend is interesting, as it contains a complete phrase in correct Greek, apart from the name, which is in the nominative instead of genitive case:—Σπαλυριος δικαιον αδελφον του βασιλεως. 'Spalyrius (of the) just (true?) brother of the king,' instead of, 'of Spalyrius,' &c. The Pracrit is read, Alabaraputasa Dharmiasa Spalapharamasa.

"The coins of Azilise, B.C. 60, and Azes, B.C. 50, continue the same ultra-regal title.

"All the above legends of barbaric kings are tolerably well written, with the exception of the σ and the ο, the latter of which is invariably represented by a square; but we now come to a nameless monarch, who seems to have reigned, by the abundance in which his coins have been found there, in the Punjab, who adopts new forms for several letters. He calls himself, σωτηρ μεγας βασιλεως βασιλεων, 'great saviour king of kings,' and, by his mounted effigy, seems to have been a Scythian. His religion was apparently fire-worship.

"The Indo-Parthian dynasty of Vonones, Undophernes, and Gondophares, also adopted for their coins Greek legends, with a Pracrit obverse, the titles, 'saviour,' or 'king of kings.' The name Abagases has been once read Akaja Kubhasa, in the Pracrit, and classed in connection with this dynasty; to which, also, Kodes, or Hykodes, must be considered to belong. His coins have a Greek legend only, and are remarkable as presenting us with an addition to our vocabulary, μακαρος, 'blessed.' It is used with a word, the corrupt Greek letters of which may read Ordeethro, or Ordeoro: the root of it is evidently Zend.

"We now come," says Professor Wilson, 'to a long and important series of coins, the issue of princes of well-defined names and unquestionable Scythian descent,' of whom 'Kadphises is the earliest.' The dominion of these potentates seems to have been about Cabul and Jullalabad, spreading occasionally along the Indus, and into the Punjab. The dynasty consists, as far as is at present known, of Kadphises, or Kadaphes; Kanerkes, or Kanerki; Kenorano to Oerki, and a certain Baraono, to whose coinage seems to have succeeded that of Ardokro, with which the use of Greek letters died out, the language as applied to numismatic legends having already all but disappeared. I cannot help being of opinion that the last name is not that of a reigning monarch, but of a tutelary deity. The words Mioro or Mithro, Mao, Okro, and Ardokro, on the Kanerki coins, with their accompanying symbols, refer, says Professor Wilson, to the Mithraic worship, favoured or introduced by that prince. There can be little, if any, doubt of the fact.

"This Indo-Scythian group of potentates presents to the philologist matter of very peculiar interest. The earliest king (or kings) introduces new Greek words, as descriptive of regal merit and dignity, in conjunction, to a certain degree, with the old 'king of kings' title, and even appears, as I read the words, to place upon his coin a familiar expression of vernacular Greek. His successor (?) alternates the Grecian form of the title above noted with its equivalent in Hindee, Rao Nana Rao; and continues to affix, after his name, with this title current in India to this day, the corrupt form of a Greek appellation! Later kings fall, as I have noticed, into total barbarism of language and expression.

"This group of coins has afforded numismatologists much trouble, and their difficulties are epitomised by Professor Wilson in the legends, some of which I give in simple Greek characters.

"1. Κορσο κοζουλο καδφίζου—Pl. XI. f. 10, Ar. Ant.

"2. σονηλνο—Pl. XI. f. 12, ditto.

"3. σηνοχ φρομο—Pl. XI. f. 13, ditto.

"4. ζαθον κοζουλο καδφες κορανο—Journ. As. Soc. B., June, 1835, Pl. XXIV., and Sept. 1836, Pl. XXXV.

"5. ραο νανο ραο καντοκι κορανο—Pl. XII. fig. 3, Ar. Ant.

"It may," says the Professor, 'furnish some clue to the origin of these coins, that, as far as we can conjecture the purport of their legends, the title of king is wanting on the reverse of all, and also on the obverse of the coins which bear the names of Kadaphes and Kadphises. What may be the meaning of Zathou, Korano, or Korso, in the Greek, it is impossible to say, or whether either (any?) of them be equivalent to 'king': the latter recurs in the coins of Kanerkes, in a position in which it cannot well have that signification. Neither (none?) of the others bear a resemblance to any Turkish title, as Beg or Khan. It is said indeed that the Sakas, when subdued by the Yui-chi, had no king; and it is elsewhere mentioned (?), that, in the century before our era, they had abolished royalty, and remained under the command of military chiefs; and hence possibly the adoption by them of the portraits and types of Hermæus at various times, and the insertion of names and epithets unconnected with royalty. These coins, therefore, might be the issues of different military officers of the Sakas, during the latter half of the century that preceded the Christian era, and the establishment of the kingdom of the Yui-chi; in which case, the conjecture that these coins bear the name of the Yui-chi prince, Kiu-tsukio, would fall to the ground.' (V. also Ar. Ant. on the same subject pp. 358-59, 4to.)

"In dealing with the difficulties above set forth, it must be recollected that we have to do with a dialectic difference, as I read it, of the Greek, which had, as we have already seen, become even in Græco-Bactrian periods, incorrect, not to say corrupt; but strange to say, it is not the less in its elements Grecian, as I shall proceed to show. Should my brief dissertation appear a little pedantic, I trust it may be excused on the ground that the subject is new and curious, and one which the savans of Europe have, by their tacit concurrence with the dicta of Professor Wilson, pronounced inexplicable.

"As to the first word then, in the legend No. 1, κορσο, I must remark, with reference to those which will form the matter of our sequent inquiry, that it is intended to be in the genitive case, the legends of this period giving us ο, and even υ, for the genitive ου: the nominative of this word would therefore be κορσος. The word κορση, which in old Homeric Greek (Il. 4, 502, 5, 584), is used plurally for the temples, or sides of the head, and more modernly, in a poetic sense, for the head, is the root whence this barbarized substantive has been derived. There is a legitimate Greek noun, κορσης (one who cuts or shaves the hair), but it springs from quite another origin (κειρω, 'to clear or shave'). The attempt has been evidently made in the rude word before us to impersonize the head, as alluding to the qualifications of the individual to whom it is applied to head or lead a tribe or people. It is in fact, however irregularly, the philological equivalent of our common and popular English word, 'header.'

"The next difficulty in legend No. 1, is simplified by looking on the word at once as composite: there is no such, nor the semblance of such, in Greek. It appears on the legends with different spellings, the second syllable being at one time vowelised with ο, at another ου. As respects this difference, I refer the reader, in the first instance, to the Greek dialectic differences which I have detected in the pure Græco-Bactrian period; and then remind him of the Doric (which we have already found in the coins), and Æolic permutations of ου for ω; and in the latter dialect of even ο for ω; sufficient, as critics too well know, to warrant in pure Greek literature a wearisome variety of readings. It is no stigma on our scholarship if we explain the barbarized written form of a rude spoken (?) dialect by reference to these varieties. I read the word as—και οζωλον the και being abbreviated as in κάν for καὶ ἄν—κάλον κἀλθον for καὶ ἀγαθόν: the adjective being formed from ὄζος, 'a branch,' and metaphorically, a scion or offshoot (ὄζος ἄρσος Il. 2, 540); its meaning, therefore, is that of 'brancher,' 'branch-giver,' or 'branch-leader.' I read the legend No. 1, in English—'of the header and branch-leader, Kadphises.'

"Before quitting the subject of this legend, I may quote a very curious passage in the elder Pliny (B. 17), which bears upon the Scythic use of the word Chorus or Chorsas, as descriptive of the heads or leaders of a tribe. I need hardly remark that, chronologically speaking, there would have been ample time for the adoption of the (foreign) term as a national phrase before Pliny wrote of the Scythians; and I may mention that I believe the word, which occurs in no dictionaries (?), is not to be found elsewhere in any classic of authority. Should my Greek derivation be thought arbitrary, I have yet a meaning indigenous among the (Indo) Scythians for the first word in the legend in the passage, as follows:—'Ultra sunt populi Scythorum: Persæ illos Sacas universos appellavere approxima gente; antiqui Aremeos; Sacæ ipsi Persas, Chorsaios.'

"The legend No. 2, occurs also on a coin of Kadphises, marking the commencement of the introduction of a Mithraic worship which became generally current in the time of Kanerkes, whose coins bear indifferently the Greek ἡλιος, or the Zend Graecised μῆρο. It is slightly barbarized by the omission of an i; or perhaps rather the use of v for i: it reads easily: ὅσον ἡλιού, 'as great as the Sun.'

"The legend, No. 3, I introduce, not to explain it, but to give such readers as are new to this branch of study a fair specimen of the unintelligible; together with my assurance that there is infinitely more of the like found, and to be found, which patience, ingenuity, and the spread of intelligence, will make patent to us; of course, if labourers be found where the vineyard is so large and fruitful. The second word gives an idea of the Greek φῆμη.

"Legend No. 4 contains the three words, one of which I have explained, which constitute the despair of the author of Ariana Antiqua. They are not the less Greek, very slightly barbarized. The use of the first, however, as applied personally, argues the same corruption of language, traces of which have already met us;—ζαθος—ζαθιος—'divine,' 'godlike,' 'majestic'; φρυγών τε ζάθιοι σιλάται (Eurip. Troades, 1074), being used by Homer (in the Iliad only), as also by Hesiod and Pindar, as applicable to places and cities frequented by the gods, (in the same sense as ἡγῆτιος, in relation to ἀγαθος). Here the rude dialect applies it to the king Kadaphes, who also assumes the ὄζωλος title, and adds, as his sovereign designation, the Greek word, doubtless as it was barbarously pronounced,—κοιρνος:—κοιρανόν—κοιραν. When Mr. Mason vaguely guessed, the word meant 'a military chief,' he was right. It occurs joined with ἡγεμών (Il. 2, 487; also, Il. 7, 234, κοιρανὲ λαών), and joined with βασιλεὺς (Il. 2, 204); but is ordinarily used as 'lord' or 'master' in which sense the well-known line of the Iliad, ὄνκ ἀγαθὸν πολυκοιρανίη, ἢς κοιρανὸς ἔστω, gives two instances. It may be fairly taken on these authorities as equivalent to 'king'; and I read No. 4, in English, therefore: 'Of the divine and branch-leading Kadaphes king.'

Legend, No. 5, gives us the interesting spectacle of this pure Greek word in vernacular contact with one which still forms part of the spoken Hindce of this country: 'Of the king of kings Kanerkes king (or Lord).'

It is interesting as part of the speculation which represents the people over whom this dynasty ruled as being under military chiefs or lords in the Punjab, and as having abolished royalty, to detect in one of the epithets of these potentates an indication of the leader of a sect or branch; and it is curious, as history is ever a repetition of herself, to discover in this rude community the prototype of the Sikhs, divided into their όζοι, or Missuls, before the dominant influence of the great and wise Runjeet had consolidated their power into the union of a monarchy.

"The last observation which I have to offer respecting these coins is a conjecture as to a very peculiar legend of Kadphises, in which, in a very perfect silver specimen (the only Indo-Scythian silver coin yet (1841) found), there occurs, after βασιλεὺς βασιλεων μεγας, the inexplicable word ΟΟΗΜΟ. A similar barbarism occurs on a large copper coin of this king, after the words βασιλεὺς βασιλεων σωτηρ μεγας, written ΟΟΗΗΝ. It varies apparently on other coins to ΟΟΗ, ΘΟΚ, ΟΟΗΚ, ΟΟΚΜ. Is not the first a barbarized effort to write ὁ ἴμω, 'who (is) of me,' i. e. my? And the second a like attempt to express ὁ ἴμω, 'who (is) to us,' i. e. our? The reduplication of the o would express the aspirate, and even classical authority (οἶμος for ὁ ἴμω, being the Attic contraction, found also Il. 8, 360,) admits the running of the words together. We thus have a curious and familiar legend in both cases.

"1. King of Kings Great my (of me) Kadphises.

"2. King of Kings Saviour Great to us Kadphises.

"The other barbarous legends are natural mistakes on the part of ignorant die-cutters, directed to employ a new form of words. These, which are barbarisms of execution, are thus easily accounted for: the barbarisms of diction, I would submit, are nowhere so great in the legends of these coins, as in the barbarous, but still intelligible, Greek of the Triballus of Aristophanes, who says (it is his longest speech)—

καλὴν κόπραν καὶ μέγαλα βασίλεια ὀφείλει παραίεσθαι.

"Indeed I rather think our Bactrian and Indo-Scythian barbarians gain by the comparison. Our κοιραν is surely preferable to the drawling feminised κοιραννα of Triballus; while the βασιλίσσα of Queen Agathokleia is so superior to the Triballian corruption of βασιλινά, that one utterly forgives her the ungrammatical memory in which her name is perpetuated. It is a curious and not unvaluable coincidence that gives us in this one line, two of the words for comparison of our slender numismatic vocabulary.

"It now only remains to record one or two reflections which naturally ensue upon a review, such as has been here attempted, of indistinct and obscure material for history. The question that suggests itself is,—if the subject does not contain much in itself, to what does it point as a subject of inquiry? The exploration of Kafiristan is one point; and the study of the immigration of nomad tribes into this country another. The first must of course depend upon far other than scientific authority; the second is in the power of any man reasonably familiar with the language and manners of the natives of Upper India. Passing by the latest colony that has settled itself in the land, the Pathans of Rohilkhand, I would suggest the study of that singular race, the Goojurs, stamped still with the type of nomads, so lately has their immigration been into Upper India, and from them to the Juts or Jäts, the Thuggas, and other anomalous tribes. All have their traditions, and their simple records, and I suspect that it will be eventually from them, critically examined, that the real internal and popular history of the country will be, if it ever is to be, elicited."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

THURSDAY, August 28, 1851.

THE "agitation" going on at the present moment to obtain the removal to this country of the obelisk called "Cleopatra's Needle," gives rise to a question rarely, if ever, discussed with the attention which its importance demands; namely, what right or title one country has to appropriate to itself, under all circumstances, the ancient monuments of another? In the case of the prostrate Alexandrian obelisk, the right of Great Britain may be alleged to be complete, as including all the ingredients of an equitable transfer of property, our acquisition of it by conquest from the French, in whose possession we found it, having been ratified by the voluntary cession or gift of the original owner. But not to insist upon the fact, that that owner might be ignorant of the real value of what he thus alienated, the true question is, whether the principles of bargain between buyer and seller, supposing them to be most equitably carried out, are the only rules applicable to such transactions; and whether, in the case of the relics of extinct nations, associated with the history of the great family of mankind, in which relics the present rulers of the lands where they are found can enjoy but a transitory right, the world at large may not have, not merely an interest, but a latent title, to prevent their removal from their original localities. Not to mention the vast number of Egyptian remains which decorate some of the capitals of Europe, or the treasures of ancient art which have left the Parthenon a sadder ruin than the Turks had made it, in order to enrich the British Museum, large transportations of Assyrian monuments, to France as well as England, are now taking place, with no better authority than a firman from Constantinople.

In all such cases the acquisition of the relics is justified upon one or other of the grounds we have adverted to—conquest, gift, or purchase. When Napoleon, amongst other magnificent projects, determined to make Paris the emporium of ancient art, and, with that view, removed its choicest specimens of sculpture and painting from the capital of every country he subdued, his title to them was universally exploded; he was stigmatized as a robber, and France was compelled to make restitution of the stolen property. Conquest, therefore, confers no valid title. Purchase or voluntary gift, were we dealing with the first owners,—the ancient Assyrians, Egyptians, or Greeks,—would impart a title unquestionable by all the world; but these owners are extinct, and the difficulty consists in this, that the articles acquire their chief value in the estimation of modern nations from this very circumstance, and whilst they have fallen into the temporary possession of people utterly regardless of them, being ignorant of their character and value,—an incident which must impair the validity of any bargain for their alienation.

But assuming gift or purchase to found a prima facie title, there still remains, as we before observed, the question whether all civilized nations have not a qualified right to prevent this species of spoliation of these relics of early societies, which tends, amongst other effects, to deteriorate the value of some of them—that value consisting mainly in their local associations. Were the ancient triumphal arches and columns of Rome transported to Washington, half their worth, and all the charm they impart to the history of the city of the Cæsars, would be lost. This objection applies undoubtedly only to some of these monuments,—not to statuary, architectural ornaments, domestic implements, and articles which are valued chiefly as works of art; but it is still very doubtful whether the removal even of such articles can be justified except upon the ground, namely, that to leave them in the guardianship of their present possessors would be to consign them to destruction.

This plea, however, has its limits. In the case of the Assyrian monuments, which, like those of Herculaneum and Pompeii, have been so miraculously preserved by the very materials which were apparently intended to be the agents of their total annihilation, the argument we have referred to is all-powerful: if left where they are, they would now be doomed. But different considerations, we think, apply to the monuments of Egypt, the removal of which from the land of the Pharaohs is not to be excused upon such a ground. Egypt is daily becoming more civilized; it is now the highway of intercourse between Europe and India; travellers from both are constantly passing and re-passing, and it would be mortifying to see it denuded of those monuments without which Egypt would cease to be Egypt.

EVERY arrival from Australia brings evidence of a determined spirit of resistance on the part of the colonists to the reception of convicts. The opposition has at length taken the shape of an organized league, embracing all those colonies, except Western Australia, and resembling very much in character the Anti-convict Association of the Cape of Good Hope, the success of which, no doubt, prompted the formation of the Anti-Transportation League of Melbourne. The entire cessation of transportation, not to one or two, but to all those colonies,—even those that should be willing to receive convicts,—is the avowed object of this league; to accomplish which, it is said, the colonists are prepared to resort to any means, even the throwing off dependence upon the mother country.

This is one of the sad effects, easy to be foreseen, of the foolish and culpable policy pursued towards the South-African colonists. It may now be regarded as certain that none of our settlements abroad, to which convicts in any number can be sent, will consent to admit them. Either, therefore, we must abolish transportation altogether,—and it will be difficult to devise a practical substitute for some species of transportation, as part even of a scheme of reformatory discipline,—or we must provide a fresh outlet for our criminals, by establishing new convict settlements, properly so called, which, if founded with more care, skill, and foresight than presided over the foundation of New South Wales, may afford means of developing well-matured plans for extracting a large amount of good out of evil in this form of secondary punishment.

THE insurrection in the southern provinces of China, where the leader of the insurgents has assumed the title of emperor, and the imperial designation T'ien-tih, "Heavenly virtue," appears to create increased anxiety at Peking. An imperial decree appears in the Peking Gazette, calling upon Le Sing-yuen, the former commissioner, and the other high officers already in Kwangse, not to abate their ardour on account of the delegation of new ambassadors from the Imperial city, but, encouraged by the sense of their sovereign's attention to the exigencies of the case, to redouble their energies towards the completion of the campaign. The pretender, a descendant of the last (Chinese) dynasty, is master of three-fifths of the province of Kwang-se, and has repeatedly defeated the imperial forces. An extract from the China Mail, in another column, though the writer seems to look upon the insurgents rather as banditti, intent upon plunder, than as rebels, seeking to overthrow the dynasty, states facts sufficient to show that the crisis is a serious one; and, whatever be the real character of the outbreak, the inability of the government to put it down is an evidence either of its own weakness or of the force of the insurgents, which pretty nearly amount to the same thing. By the latest advices, T'ien-tih was at Sin-chow-foo, whence he had issued proclamations to the literati, calling upon them to assist his views, telling them that "China can manage her own affairs without the aid of foreigners." A report prevalent at Canton, that the pretender was dead, was regarded as a ruse on the part of the adherents of the reigning dynasty, to allay excitement.

T'ien-tih is said to be twenty-five years of age; his complexion is described in the Chinese reports as "purplish red."

The Delhi Gazette announces, as a warning to the authorities at home, that the vaccine matter supplied for last winter, in the north-west provinces generally, did not act.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Messrs. FRASER AND LIGHTFOOT, East-India merchants, have failed. Their liabilities are stated at 50,000*l*. The cause assigned for the suspension is that their assets (which are put down at 53,000*l*.) were not immediately convertible.

STEAM COMMUNICATIONS WITH INDIA.—From September there will be two direct monthly communications between Trieste and Alexandria. The vessel which leaves Trieste on the 10th will be in communication with the Bombay line, and the steamer which starts on the 27th with the Calcutta line. The Calcutta ship reaches Suez on the 7th or 8th, and that from Bombay on the 17th or 18th of the month. As officers of health are always to be on board the Levant steamers, quarantine will be kept during the passage, so that the passengers, if the bills of health are clean, may land as soon as they reach the port.

EAST-INDIAN RAILWAY.—The half-yearly meeting of this Company was held on the 19th August, Mr. J. Cattley in the chair, when the secretary read the report, an abstract of which appeared in the last Mail. The chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said it was certainly a short account of their proceedings during the half-year, but, if any gentleman had any question to ask with regard to the undertaking, he would gladly give every information in his power. The Board had received advices from the engineer, in which it was stated that the works were progressing satisfactorily. In reply to a question, it was stated that one-third of the earth-work was executed on the two first contracts; that 9,000 men were now at work on the line, exclusive of artisans and other parties employed by the contractors. The second section of the line, about 40 miles in length, was being surveyed, and when the surveys were completed, and the necessary plans and sections prepared, the contracts for its construction would be let to contractors. The report was agreed to unanimously.

CEYLON RAILWAY.—At the annual meeting of this company, Captain Nairn in the chair, the secretary read the report, which stated that, although the directors were satisfied that the affairs of Ceylon were gradually reviving from the depression which mainly prevented the carrying out of the arrangements of the company, they are of opinion that it would be premature at present to seek pecuniary aid from Government, without which it has never been contemplated to attempt to establish the railway. The rapid progress of railways already being constructed in India induces the directors to believe that the great object they have so long entertained may ultimately be achieved; and as no responsibility whatever attaches to the maintenance of the company in its present position, the directors again recommend that it be kept in abeyance for another year, when they trust to meet the proprietors with a more favourable report. Resolutions were passed, adopting the report, and re-electing the retiring directors and auditors.

The CHINESE FAMILY, upon their recent visit to Osborne, were by her Majesty's desire, received in the state drawing-room by the Queen, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and each of the younger branches of the Royal Family, to whom they were introduced by Mr. Hammond, jun. The junior wife of Mr. Chung-Atai had the honour of singing to the Queen. The elder consort presented Her Majesty with a beautifully executed Daguerreotype of the Chinese group; and the younger lady left with the Princess Royal a pair of very handsome lady's shoes, embroidered in gold by herself, and the exact size worn by her, viz. 2½ inches long by 1 inch broad. Prince Albert, thinking the family would be interested in the numerous plants and flowers of Chinese origin abounding in the garden adjoining the drawing-room, conducted his visitors round the terrace and parterres. His Royal Highness then showed them the splendid encaustic-tiled corridor, and lastly the large picture in the dining-room, representing the family group of our beloved Queen and her Royal Consort. The gentlemen-in-waiting on her Majesty also endeavoured to explain the use of the billiard-table, by making a few strokes, the covering being removed for that purpose.

The ship Queen has been engaged for the conveyance of troops to Calcutta.

According to a parliamentary paper showing the trade of the United Kingdom with the United States of America in the last four years, it appears that, in 1847, the declared value of British and Irish produce and manufacture exported to the United States was 10,974,161*l*; in 1848, 9,564,909*l*; in 1849, 11,971,028*l*; and in 1850, 14,891,961*l*. Of the imports from the United States, in the three years ending 1849 (last year's account not being made up), the official value of the imports was respectively, 20,349,882*l*., 23,916,844*l*., and 26,554,941*l*.

COAL IN OUR AUSTRALIAN COLONIES.—Mr. De Salis states that, in the Newcastle district, New South Wales, coal is very widely diffused, as well as in other parts of the colony. "I have seen," he says, "the outcrop of coal strata in the deep sections presented by the precipitous valleys of the Blue Mountains, 50 miles to the westward of Sydney. I have also examined the outcrop of a seam of coal near Burrina, 75 miles to the south-west. Coal has been found 50 miles south of Newcastle, at Illawarra. The area of the Newcastle coal basin has been estimated at 16,000 square miles." Coal, he states, has been found at Western Port, and it is traceable in various parts of Van Diemen's Land, chiefly in the Jerusalem basin and in the South Esk basin.

The most highly esteemed favour which the early missionaries at Tahiti could confer on the king and queen was to furnish them, on state occasions, with a specimen of that splendid novelty, the sun-flower, to be worn in their bosoms.

The Mechanics' Magazine states that a patent has been granted to William Duckworth, of Liverpool, coffee merchant, for certain improvements in the manufacture of chicory. The machine is intended to "form, mould, or compress chicory into pieces of the shape of berries and other arbitrary forms." If successful, it will be impossible to detect the presence of chicory in coffee, whether ground or unground.

According to a return to Parliament, the quantity of cotton wool imported into the United Kingdom in 1848 was 713,020,161 lbs.; in 1849, 755,469,012 lbs.; and in 1850, 663,376,611 lbs.

COLONEL WAUGH, in his report on the surveys in India, speaking of the changes that, in the course of a few years, may be expected in the face of that country,—tracts now covered with jungle reclaimed, canals dug, marshes drained, roads established, new towns and villages, &c.,—observes: "That these views are not chimerical may be attested by my own experience, during twenty-two years of wandering throughout the length and breadth of the land; for places where, in my early days, I hunted the tiger, the bear, and the boar, are now covered with smiling fields, yielding a plentiful harvest to the cultivator. The greatest difference is also perceptible in the extension of towns and villages, showing the increase of productive wealth which is taking place on all sides. On the other hand, in many native states the jungle is advancing on cultivation, and the people thus become the alternate prey of man and wild beast."

Dr. Darwin, with reference to his theory, that plants are really an inferior order of animals, observes, in his Phytologia, that "it is not impossible, if Spallanzani should continue his experiments, that some beautiful productions might be generated between the vegetable and animal kingdoms, like the Eastern fable of the rose and the nightingale."

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 14th of May, 1851, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.
20	On or before 14th of May, 1846.	£1,000	£19 6 8	£10 12 8
30		1,000	24 8 4	13 8 7
40		1,000	31 10 0	17 6 6
50	1846.	1,000	42 15 0	23 10 3
60		1,000	66 11 8	36 12 5

. The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assurers to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.—Under the provisions of an Act of Parliament, this Company now offers to future insurers FOUR-FIFTHS of the PROFITS, with QUINCENTENNIAL DIVISION, or a LOW RATE of PREMIUM without participation of profits.

The divisions of profits will be declared in June, 1855, when all participating policies which shall have subsisted at least one year at Christmas, 1854, will be allowed to share in the profits.

At the several past divisions of profits made by this Company, the reversionary bonuses added to the policies from one-half the profits, amounted, on an average of the different ages, to about one per cent. per annum on the sums insured, and the total bonuses added at the four s-teriminal divisions exceeded 770,000*l*.

FOREIGN RISKS.—The extra premiums required for the East and West Indies, the British Colonies, and the northern parts of the United States of America, have been materially reduced.

INVALID LIVES.—Persons who are not in such sound health as would enable them to insure their lives at the tabular premiums, may have their lives insured at extra premiums.

LOANS granted on Life Policies to the extent of their values, provided such policies shall have been effected a sufficient time to have attained in each case a value not under 50*l*.

ASSIGNMENTS OF POLICIES.—Written notices of, received and registered.

TIBET, TARTARY, & MONGOLIA:

BEING

THEIR SOCIAL & POLITICAL CONDITION,

AND

The Religion of Boodh, as there existing.

Compiled from the Reports of ancient and modern Travellers, especially from M. Hue's Reminiscences of the recent Journey of himself and M. Gabet, Lazariste Missionaries to Mongolia.

By HENRY T. PRINSEP, Esq.

"Mr. Prinsep has not only furnished a very interesting volume, but has also contributed, by his judicious observations, to throw much light upon the remarkable religious institutions, which, while they bear a strong resemblance to those of the churches of Rome and Constantinople in the middle ages, vary little, there is every reason to believe, from a condition of things existing five centuries anterior to the Christian era. Upon the evidence of rock-preserved edicts, which refer to kings Ptolemy and Antiochus as contemporaries, it is maintained that the sacred books and ritual of the Boodhists, as now observed, were at that time 'the received scriptures and state religion of India.'"—Patriot, Aug. 21, 1851.

"A valuable contribution to our historical information."—Morning Post Aug. 26.

"We can recommend Mr. Prinsep's volume as a good sketch of whatever is yet known of Tibet, and a plan but valuable introduction to the study of that curious subject, Boodhism, on which, probably, much yet remains to be written."—Athenæum, Aug. 16, 1851.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE Indian journals brought by this mail add nothing to our previous information respecting the Nizam's affairs, except by confirming the statement, that Sooraj-ool-Moolk, the new dewan, had succeeded in staving off the menaced sequestration of territory, by an arrangement with General Frazer for the immediate payment of forty lakhs, or half the debt, and the discharge of the remainder before the end of October; and to this engagement, it is said, the Nizam has affixed his signature and seal. The correspondent of the Englishman, at Hyderabad, states that the offer of Sooraj-ool-Mook to pay the debt in four months to the Company's government was accepted by the Resident on the 16th July. "Sooraj-ool-Moolk lodged with him a sum of twenty-four lakhs of rupees, and a further sum of sixteen lakhs, to make up forty lakhs, is in course of payment." The writer adds:—

To obtain a correct knowledge of the means of the government to pay, it will be necessary to examine whence its first resources, the easiest of access, have been derived. Four sahookars—Sheo Lall, Kriparam, Kangeer, and Hurry Doss—have contributed six and a quarter lakhs of rupees in the shape of a loan. These sahookars claim on old balances against the government thirty lakhs, and the condition of the present loan is, that they shall receive assignments on the districts to have been ceded to the Company's government, and now to be assigned to the discharge of their debt, for the first year, in the sum of Rs. 12,25,000, a fresh bond being given for the old and new debt conjointly, so as to mark a renewed recognition and acknowledgment of the old debt, with a view to preclude any re-opening for examination of back accounts; the new bond will contain stipulations for payment of the remainder of the thirty lakhs old balance. The remainder of the eighteen lakhs has been thus supplied:—Oomrageer has given two promissory notes for twelve lakhs of rupees to the Resident, in the sums of five and seven lakhs; and has put himself forward ostensibly as a party undertaking these ventures. But the fact is not so. Oomrageer undertakes for himself to pay one lakh only, part of the note for five lakhs, and stands sponsor for Abdool-bin-Ali and Oomurbin Oaz, the Arab chieftains, par excellence, for the remaining four lakhs. The parties subscribing to the note for seven lakhs are not so well known. But there is no mistake that they are all talookdars, and that the money they pay will be in advance of revenue. The names of the subscribers that are given out, are Sooltan Nawaz-ool-Moolk two lakhs, Hussun Khan Mudozaee two lakhs, Boodhun Khan one lakh. No names are given for the remaining two lakhs. The first and last of those named are men who have been specifically proscribed by the English government, and subjected to dismissals from the districts they formerly held, in consequence of that proscription.

It is apparent that, as the payment of the Company's debt will proceed from a loan and territorial advances, and not from any extraordinary supply, the embarrassments of the Nizam's government will not be in the slightest degree relieved. His only advantage in the change of creditors will be, that he need not pay the less powerful creditors to whom the debt may be transferred.

The situation of the prince is critical. It is stated that the recommendation of the Governor-General, that the Nizam should dismiss his foreign troops, has alarmed the Arab mercenaries. "I hear from one of the best sources of information," says the writer before quoted, "that, if required by the Company's government to give up the lands of the Nizam, which they occupy as talookdars, as mortgagees of jagheers, and as creditors of talookdars, they will resign them, and concentrate themselves in Hyderabad, taking possession of the palaces of the Nizam and his minister—in other words, their persons—and will then, from this advantageous position, exact the justice they claim, and demand hostages for the performance of engagements that may be made with them."

The intelligence from Oude would render a revolution in that kingdom a no more surprising event than in the territories of the Nizam. The treasury at Lucknow is said to be empty, yet the king is squandering money, without the praise of generosity, or of that munificence for which Nusseer-ood-Hyder was so famed. "He lavishes immense sums on his mahals, builds palaces for himself, makes roads for himself, which no other person can tread, and illuminates those roads for no other benefit than his own. He economizes where he ought to be liberal, saves where he ought to spend, and where he ought to retrench, he increases the expenses." He can scarcely be made to sign a document, however important, and detests the very name of business. His troops, unless paid by the chuckildars, when engaged in the districts, are ill paid. Some corps have fourteen months' pay in arrears. There is scarcely any police; criminal cases are tried by the eunuch Mosahib-ood-Dowlah, who is invested with the office of Fouzdar. The Dewanny, or court where money matters are decided, is under the directions of the chief Mollah; and the Tahsildaree, or management of revenue affairs, is the peculiar province of the minister, Uly Nucky Khan, whose inexperience and incapacity make him a ready tool in the hands of shrewd and cunning men. A letter from Lucknow gives an entertaining account of the constitution of the king's army there; it appears that, in addition to the regiments, regular and irregular, the Telungas, Nujebis, and Seebundies, his majesty, emulating Runjeet Singh, has a troop of Amazons, commanded by a eunuch. They are described as most ferocious viragos, with short hair, dressed in uniform, like men.

From this picture of a native state we turn with pleasure to the vast territories which own the sway of Britain, whence the report, which has not varied for months, is "perfect tranquillity." Even the restless tribes upon our remote frontier beyond the Indus have ceased their annoyances.

From Peshawur, the accounts of the health of the troops are not favourable: fever and ague are said to afflict the soldiery, especially the European regiments. The average daily number of sick in the hospital of H.M.'s 61st, since the commencement of the hot weather, was from 180 to 200!

It is reported that the expedition of Maharajah Golab Singh against his mountain subjects had been unfortunate; that his advance-guard had been cut up when only four marches from Cashmere, and the greater part of his commissariat captured. The Maharajah had removed from Cashmere to the fort of Ushkur. Numerous complaints are made of his cruelty and caprice.

The native rulers of Affghanistan appear to continue in a state of disunion. There has been an affray at Cabul, owing to the refusal of Dost Mahomed to receive certain chiefs at his durbar. The belief that he instigated the poisoning of Akbar Khan is said to be increasing. Yar Mahomed Khan, of Herat, has addressed a friendly letter to the sons of Dost Mahomed Khan, pointing out the impossibility of preserving amicable relations, if they continue to interfere with the internal affairs of his country. The Affghans, who still retain possession of Balkh, returned, it is said, a favourable answer to this letter.

The latest reports of the Governor-General from Simla were, that he was projecting another tour, intending to visit Almorah and other cool spots, and that he might perhaps reach the seat of government in February, or perhaps March. He was expected to pass through Rohilkund and Oude on his way to Calcutta. His camp, according to a Simla correspondent of the Delhi Gazette, would be formed at Umballah on the 15th October.

Amongst the local incidents at the Presidencies may be mentioned the discovery of a conspiracy to release the Sikh prisoners in Fort William, which, for a time, created a good deal of excitement at Calcutta. The Englishman gives the following as an authentic statement of the affair:—

A letter from the Serampore post-office came to the address of Moolraj, written in the Nagree character, which was opened by the authorities, and on being translated, was found to allude to a plot for the delivery of Moolraj, and referred to a previous communication, which had been sent to the fort under a feigned address. This former letter also came into the hands of the powers, but being directed to a third party, they were induced to return it unopened to the post-office for delivery; it was however eventually recovered, and its contents stated that a sum of four lakhs of rupees had been subscribed by different individuals (naming them all), some of them residing in this immediate vicinity, and that they were determined to take Moolraj out of the fort, and convey him to Nepal; seven hundred persons were to be employed, the arsenal was to be set on fire, and during the confusion consequent on this, a dash was to be made at Moolraj's guard, the sentries were to be put to death, and the liberated prisoner was to be conveyed to the river-side, put into a boat, which was to be waiting for him there, and carried over to Howrah.

The connection, at first suspected, of Moolraj with this plot has been amply disproved. The ex-dewan's removal to Allahabad was at his own request, on account of his health. He is said to have felt the last rains severely. The Citizen remarks:—

Of the complicity of the Dewan of Mooltan in Vans Agnew's and Anderson's death, we are free to confess, we were never satisfied, and especially after a cool review of the evidence produced on his trial. His bearing as an insurgent was gallant; as a captive most dignified. The confinement to which he has been subjected in these provinces has seriously affected his health, and we believe shortened his life. We hope, however, the mitigation the local government has seen it necessary to allow him will alleviate the pains of the close of his career.

The subject of the New Indian Marriage Law has attracted much attention. The Friend of India praises it for the delicacy and tact with which the interests and prejudices of all parties are respected.

The order for the annual "relief" of regiments has appeared, and will be found to accord with previous anticipations. Its great merit is its brevity, a large relief being regarded as a great evil.

The railway company at Calcutta have advertised for tenders for the construction of the section of the line which extends from Pandua to Raneegeunge, to commence with the approaching cold weather: for the convenience of contractors, the section was to be divided into lots of between five and six miles each. The Hurkaru mentions, that the site of the railway terminus at Howrah has been fixed upon. The property belonging to Captain Oakes, near the Howrah Ghaut, is the place selected.

Two cases of some interest were decided in the Supreme Court on the 6th of August. In the first, arising out of the great Jotee Persaud affair, Mr. M. R. Gubbins, magistrate of Agra, was sued by Mr. John Lang, the counsel for the contractor, for the illegal seizure of various goods and chattels. The defence was grounded on the recently-passed Act for the protection of judicial officers; but the Chief Justice (who is said to have been the framer of that Act) decided that it did not give impunity to the magistrate on the mere assertion of his belief that he had jurisdiction, but only when he could show some reasonable ground for such a belief. Judgment was given for plaintiff, damages fifty rupees, reserving certain points of law for future decision. In the other case, another Mr. Gubbins (Mr. Charles), also in the Civil Service, was defendant in an action for libel brought by Mr. Tandy, secretary of the North-Western Bank. The alleged libel was contained in a circular addressed to the shareholders by Mr. Gubbins, who was then a director, and which afterwards found its way, through Mr. Gubbins's agency, into one of the papers. The libel appeared also in a minute which was submitted to the directors only. The Court gave a verdict for the plaintiff, with Rs. 500 damages, the decision being grounded on the circular to shareholders, the minute, intended for the directors only, being regarded as a privileged communication.

Complaints of the dulness of trade and the losses of the past season were general at Calcutta, yet the official returns indicated a constantly increasing commerce. The imports of merchandise are fifty-nine lakhs in value greater than the preceding year; the exports are about nine lakhs less. The shipping returns, as might be expected, show an increase in foreign, in proportion to British, shipping, since the removal of the navigation laws; but there is no diminution in the tonnage, though some in the number, of the latter.

The disconnection of the Government with the temple of Juggernath has not diminished the number of its votaries. On the 6th July about fifty thousand persons assembled to witness the dragging of the car. The cholera is said to have made a fearful assault upon the thickly-thronged people. Multitudes of lives, foreign and native, were swept away on the occasion by this dreadful scourge.

At Bombay, in an action brought by the Oriental Bank against Wiswanath Balcrustnagee, to recover their losses by the late robbery, and the forged hoondies, the Supreme Court gave judgment in favour of the defendant upon all points, holding that Wiswanath was not bound by the bond absolutely, under all circumstances, to return the money given him in trust.

The accounts from China state that the insurgents had routed a body of the imperial troops, killing 1,000, and wounding the commander.

From Australia, we have accounts of the discovery of a gold-mine, or rather gold-fields, to the west of Bathurst, in the Wellington district,—an event which will exercise a powerful influence upon the fortunes of those colonies, for good or for evil. The greatest excitement, it appears, was produced in the neighbourhood of the auriferous locality, some indulging wild visions of boundless wealth, others anticipating famine and misery. The latest advices, which are to the 2nd June, from Sydney, mention that lumps of the metal, 46½ oz. and 4½ lbs. in weight, had been found, and that the daily average produce of the operations of the diggers was an ounce of gold per man.

The intelligence from the Cape of Good Hope, which reaches to the 1st August, is by no means of a satisfactory character,—less so, indeed, than the preceding accounts. The Caffres and Hottentots had gained some advantages over the British forces, and, whilst Sir H. Smith and General Somerset were still stationary at their posts, King William's Town and Fort Hare, the enemy, driven from their fastnesses in the Amatolas by the combined movement from which so much was expected, had spread throughout the eastern provinces, carrying rapine into the very heart of the colony. Sir H. Smith seems to have anticipated this result (against which he does not, however, appear to have adequately provided), since he warned the colonists in a general order that, if the movement succeeded, the Caffres might be broken up into small marauding parties. "There is no particle of evidence," says the Zuid Afrikaan, "that the operations hitherto directed against the enemy have been productive of any effect. He very adroitly keeps himself out of the reach of the troops. His cattle, at least the most valuable portion, appear to be in safety, and when the colonial forces sometimes succeed in capturing those which are too wretched to be driven off, he speedily retaliates by sweeping off thousands of colonial or Fingoe cattle."

The discontent of the Cape colonists has been exasperated by the receipt of "Additional Instructions" in reference to their constitution, whereby its completion is to be suspended, and the existing Legislative Council, though consisting of less than the stipulated number of ten members, and extremely unpopular, is authorized, until further orders, to make laws,—a step which is stigmatized as despotic, illegal, and as menacing the internal tranquillity of the colony. Sir A. Stockenström and Mr. Fairbairn, writing from England, tell the Central Constitutional Committee that "Lord Grey is determined to outstrip the longings of even the most desperate abettors of despotism in South Africa." Verily, Ireland will soon cease to be the only difficulty of a British minister!

BENGAL.

THE NEW SYSTEM OF EXAMINATION IN THE NATIVE LANGUAGES.

We accord every praise to Government for the order, introducing uniformity into the system of examination in the native languages, and abrogating that hitherto pursued, under which no officer could be sure that he would not be sacrificed to the caprice, ignorance, or obstinacy of those he had to appear before. As hitherto constituted, no aspirant could depend upon the line of examination the up-country committee would take up—one set of officers, fresh perhaps from a college examination, were eager to exhibit their own knowledge, and crush the candidate, by abstruse and unnecessary questions. Another committee, perhaps, was composed of members possessing some faint recollection of having themselves once passed in the native languages, but that was all. The modicum they had learnt they had long forgotten, and, when appointed members, they were as little fitted to examine others as they were to pass again themselves. One station had one system, another station another. At this perhaps there was an old martinet judge, or field officer, as standing president, who delighted in fixing those brought before them with grammatical difficulties, or asking them to read impossible handwriting. Again, though perhaps few were ever rejected from personal ill-feeling on the part of members of a committee, yet we venture to say that every officer in the army can point out a man whose connection, or friendship with individuals appointed to examine him, has prevented him sinking amidst the Scylla of his exercise, and steered him clear of the Charybdis of his Urzee. Even if the members of the committee wish and strive to execute only justice, unknown to themselves, they must have a bias in favour of those with whom they are attached in intimate and every day connection.

The Simla committees have often evinced how much they are under the necessity of submitting to local influences, and have frequently exhibited their complacency in an extreme degree. We have known men travel five or six hundred miles to appear before a committee, at a station where their fathers, brothers, or grandmothers held an influential position; we have known officers thus passed as interpreters, who would be rejected at the College of Fort William as unworthy of even a colloquial certificate; and again we have known men rejected by an up-country committee who possessed more real knowledge of the languages than all the members of that committee put together. All this is now prevented, and every officer, it matters not how distant his station may be, who wishes to pass an examination, must submit his knowledge to the critical acumen of Major Marshall, or to the deeply studied and severe decision of Dr. Aloys Sprenger; and any expression of partiality on their part is anticipated and prevented. By the present excellent system, the College must decide on the merits of A, B, and C, or 1, 2, and 3; and we think that those who have not yet undergone the ordeal, may congratulate themselves on the G. O. G. G., which, independent of every other advantage, will prevent them having a college examination hanging like the sword of Damocles over their heads, hitherto the prospect of up-country interpreters.—Englishman, July 21.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LONDON MAIL of June 24th reached Calcutta on the 29th of July.

MR. BRUCE.—A correspondent of the Englishman says that the Government steam agent at Gowhaty, Mr. Bruce, has been sentenced to seven years' imprisonment, with labour. The offence charged against him was that of abstracting old silver coins, to the value of Rs. 530, from a box consigned to his care by a native merchant. He was tried by a jury, and the offence was fully proved against him. He was formerly high in the confidence of Government, and had the entire management of their experimental tea plantations in Assam.

MAJOR GENERAL W. BATTINE, C.B., in command of the Cis-Jhelum division, who died at Lahore on the 21st July, was an officer of forty-seven years' standing, and was universally popular. He was very recently in command of the station of Barrackpore, and, in a green old age, exhibited a degree of vigour and buoyancy, not common to those who have passed nearly half a century in India.—Friend of India.

AN ACCIDENT, attended with fatal consequences, occurred at Simla on the 24th July. A fancy ball was given on that day at the station theatre, and the building was crowded with visitors, when the roof of the stage suddenly fell in, and one native was crushed to death. The European visitors, many of whom were on the stage, escaped without any injury.

BENGAL MEDICAL RETIRING FUND.—The Eastern Star says: a great mistake has been committed in the accounts of the Bengal Medical Retiring Fund, which will cause a diminution of the funds to the extent of two lacs of rupees. It appears that Government has been paying double interest upon some portion of the moneys deposited in its hands. The story requires confirmation.

THE INDIAN STEAM NAVY exhibits those signs of decadence which are always the forerunner of dissolution. That navy, according to the acknowledgment of the Court, is maintained almost exclusively as a packet service. It has ten or eleven steam vessels, some of which are of superior size and great power. Yet so utterly inefficient has this steam flotilla become, so totally unequal is it to the performance of the duties, though light, which are entrusted to it, that the last mail was actually conveyed from Aden to Bombay in a collier, and was fourteen days in reaching the port. The Indian Navy is sealing its own doom. The intelligence of this most untoward event will leave the Court of Directors without an excuse for continuing to maintain an establishment, the value and efficiency of which are in an inverse ratio to its cost.—Friend of India, July 10.

PROPERTY IN IDOLS.—An action was tried in the Supreme Court, on the 31st July, by Rasmoney Dabee against Madiub Chunder Banerjee, to recover possession of an idol, "an old-established family idol," and the jewels thereto belonging. In the course of the trial, the defendants produced some images in Court, the identity of which was denied, and a sharp discussion arose as to the value of the deity and jewels. The plaintiffs valued them at Rs. 1,400, while the defendants thought Rs. 150 quite enough. The Court assessed the value at Rs. 700.

COTTON IN THE PUNJAB.—Mr. D. F. McLeod, writing from Dharmasala, in the Punjab, to the Agricultural Society of India, applying for seeds, observes:—"I do not think you should send us any more cotton; there is some cotton, of a rather superior quality, sown along the range which bounds the Jaswun Dun; and the large town of Rahon in Julundhur has long been celebrated for very superior cloths made from it. But the crop is not productive. Large quantities of cotton are imported, even for domestic use, and I am convinced that the cold here is too severe and the frosts set in too early to admit of the Punjab ever being a really cotton-bearing country."

MUNICIPAL.—There was warfare here on a small scale very lately. The sons of the late Rajah Nursing secretly returned from Kachar, accompanied by some two or three hundred sepoys, and attacked the reigning Rajah Chunder Keerti. At the first onset the insurgents lost one of their cousins and their uncle, and they thereupon took to flight. The rajah, though young, has in this instance exhibited by his conduct that his wisdom is far above his years. When a brother of the insurgents, who was taken while in the act of flight, was brought before him, he acted quite unlike his predecessors, so much so that the captive, instead of having to entertain any apprehensions for the safety of his life, was welcomed most warmly. On his approach, his victorious foe advanced to meet him, and hailed him in terms of sincere cordiality, quite suited to his station of life. He was afterwards accommodated with quarters contiguous to the rajah's own dwelling, with every arrangement as to his dress and meals which might not in the least interfere with his comfort and convenience.—Poornochandroday.

MOOLRAJ.—The Calcutta Morning Chronicle announces, that Moolraj would leave Calcutta for Allahabad on the 26th July. The health of the dewan, though not so bad as has been represented, has been much injured by his residence in Bengal. The Englishman assigns another reason for his removal. It announces that a plot had been discovered to liberate Moolraj from the fort. Letters are said to have been intercepted, written from Serampore, and stating that four lacs of rupees had been obtained; that the conspirators were 700 in number, and that the arsenal was to be blown up as the first step. While the troops were busily employed in extinguishing the flames, the conspirators were to cut down the guards and rescue Moolraj. The whole of the correspondence has fallen into the hands of Government. It was intended, if the plot succeeded, to carry him off to Nepal.

THE PRIVATE SOLDIER, of H. M.'s 10th regt. of foot, who murdered Jewan Singh, commandant of a Sikh regiment at Umritsur, has been tried by a court martial, and sentenced to death. The Court, however, accompany their sentence by a recommendation to mercy, on the ground of irritation of mind, and "the unhappy facility afforded by the vicinity of the weapon." The Commander-in-Chief rejected the recommendation.

ANTIQUITIES.—The Citizen says, that Capt. Layard has completed some valuable sketches of the Ruins of Gour. The Government has also ordered a minute investigation to be made of Aliverdi Khan's mausoleum.

Sailors' Home.—The Calcutta papers contain a list of subscribers to a fund for building a Sailors' Home in that city,—the amount set down up to 30th June being Rs. 30,000. At the head of the list we find the names of Lord Dalhousie and Sir L. Peel for Rs. 2,000 each; the two puisne justices, three of the mercantile firms, and Capt. T. E. Rogers, I.N., have given Rs. 1,000 each; seven or eight houses Rs. 500; and the Honourable the Deputy Governor of Bengal, Rs. 100!

THE ESTABLISHMENT OF TOLLS ON ROADS AND BRIDGES has now been made general throughout India. The Act passed the Legislative Council on the 4th July. Tolls have been in operation on the public roads at the Bombay presidency for more than a quarter of a century. When the power of legislation was vested in the Bombay Government, a local Toll Act on this subject used to be passed, when requisite, by the Governor in Council. On the centralization of the legislative powers for all India in the hands of the Supreme Council in Calcutta, the applications for the creation of new tolls, or a modification of existing tolls, were necessarily referred to it, and it became necessary in every instance to pass a new Act. It appeared advisable, therefore, to pass a general Act, conferring the power of levying tolls on the local authorities at Bombay, and by a natural sequence, to bestow the same powers on the authorities at the other presidencies, to be brought into use wherever they might appear to be requisite.

ENIGN J. O. PENSON, of the 19th N.I., was tried by court-martial for wounding a native, and sentenced to be imprisoned at Agra for two years, and dismissed the service. Her Majesty, however, commuted the penal sentence to one year's imprisonment, and the Court of Directors, at the recommendation of the Governor-General, have restored the young officer to the service. They observe: "Considering the nature and degree of the punishment which Mr. Penson has already sustained, in having been imprisoned for one year, and deprived of his military commission for upwards of eighteen months; considering also the high character he had previously borne, and the recommendation of the Government and Commander-in-Chief in his behalf; and being of opinion that sufficient has been done in this case to evince our determination to punish with severity any officer who treats the natives of India with cruelty or oppression, we are now induced to restore Mr. Penson to his rank as third ensign in the 19th regiment N.I. on the Bengal establishment, from the date when the orders to this effect shall be received by your Government."

NORTH-WEST BANK.—The Mofussilite reports that the shareholders in the North-West Bank will receive a half-yearly dividend in August at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum. The dividend is, of course, to be declared on the reduced value of the shares, viz. Rs. 400. The profits are said to have been made out of legitimate banking business, particularly exchanges between Calcutta and London.

CHUNAR.—"There has been a pretty little fracas at Chunar. The commanding officer refused permission to one of the European invalids to marry, on account of the extreme youth of the bride elect. The consequence was, that a danger arose of her becoming a mother before she was a wife. To obviate this, and make her an honest woman, an order was issued for the immediate performance of the marriage ceremony. Upon this the chaplain thought proper to preach a sermon on the subject, and to address the commanding officer from the pulpit, charging him with being the cause of the girl's offending. The commandant directed that the European invalids should cease to attend the church, and the chaplain, in some correspondence on the matter, is said to have indulged in certain slanderous insinuations as to the conduct of the commandant in the business. Thus matters stood, when the serjeant-major of the Invalid Battalion, who is called 'the Chunar brigadier' by the men, volunteered to become a mediator. The colonel very injudiciously allowed him to go to the padre, telling him that he was to remember that he had not ordered him to do so. He mounted his horse, and went to the house. The chaplain, returning home in his buggy with the Catholic priest, found two horses, the serjeant-major and a friend at his door. This annoyed him; high words ensued, and the serjeant-major was kicked by the enraged padre, who has been reported to head-quarters. Such is the tale as told to me."—Hurkaru, July 15.

PRICES OF FOOD.—The Dehi Gazette quotes a statement, from an official price-current, published in the North West provinces, which illustrates very strongly that remarkable inequality in the price of food in different districts, which is one of the great evils of India. At Allahabad, wheat is selling at twenty six seers per rupee, at Cawnpore, at thirty-five, and in the Allypore, Agra, and some other districts, at 40 to 50 seers the rupee. In Orai, the cheapest district in the North, grain has fallen to 62 seers per rupee, and grain to 145 seers.

Messrs. COLVIN AND Co.—The seventh dividend, at Co.'s annas 4 per Sa. Rs. 100, on this estate, is now payable at the official assignee's office, Calcutta.

Dacca Bank.—A dividend at the rate of eight (8) per cent. per annum is now payable at the Dacca Bank, on account of the half-year ending 30th June, 1851.

THE FIRST LOCOMOTIVE.—The Agra Messenger reports, that the first locomotive ever seen in India, has arrived, was shipped on the Goomtee flat, and was on its way to Allahabad, whence it will be transferred to the great establishment at Roorkee.

LIEUT. F. V. DE MOLE, of the 2nd European Fusiliers, is said to have made an attempt on his own life, by cutting his throat; he failed, and there is no doubt of his recovery. Pecuniary difficulties are said to be the cause. Sir Charles Napier's farewell order has driven many distressed officers to a state bordering on madness.—Hurkaru, Aug. 5.

THE FEMALE SCHOOL.—Rajah Kali Kristo Bahadur, of Sobha Bazar, has consented to accept the office of president of the Victoria Female School, established by Mr. Bethune. This circumstance is the more gratifying, as the Rajah was, on the first establishment of the school, one of its most violent opponents.

LIEUT. BLAIR.—A correspondent at Agra, writing on the case of Lieut. Blair, whose attempt at suicide was noticed in our columns, assures us that the injury inflicted by the unfortunate young man on himself was not so serious as it was represented. The debts which were said to have been the occasion of the sad deed are, he tells us, very small, and the attempt is in a great measure, unaccountable.—Hurkaru, July 26.

LIEUT. WARD, of the Indian navy, who, on the nomination of the naval Commander-in-Chief of that service, has been appointed to succeed Commanner Fell, I.N. in charge of maritime surveys under this presidency, in command of the Krishna surveying vessel, arrived in the Oriental, and will take command of the Krishna as soon as she returns from the Straits, whither she proceeded about a month ago, with a number of native convicts. She is now daily expected back. Commander Fell will take his furlough to Europe. Lieut. Ward is highly recommended to the Bombay Government by Commodore Lushington, as well qualified for the service in which he is about to be employed.—Ibid. Aug. 7.

THE MITFORD BEQUEST.—A correspondent at Dacca writes as follows:—"Under instructions from Government, a meeting was convened and held on the 30th July, at the office of the commissioner: present—Mr. Mytton, Dr. Row, Dr. Green, Mr. J. P. Wise, Mr. A. D. Coull, Mr. J. Pogose, and only one native inhabitant of this place. The object of the meeting was to ascertain the sense of the whole native inhabitants of Dacca, as to the mode in which they wish that the Mitford Bequest should be laid out for the benefit of the city. Certain resolutions were proposed and passed; but what authority those 'selected few' had to represent the city, is a matter of question. The Government should not permit this private gift of an individual to be applied for any purpose other than the inhabitants may think would really be for their own benefit. This was the intention of the late Mr. Mitford, and it is to be hoped that the same will be respected and adhered to by the Government."—Ibid.

A JAIL DELIVERY took place at Agra, on the 2nd of July, when the following state prisoners, many of whose names figure prominently in the record of the trial of Dewan Moolraj, were released by order of the Supreme Government:—Debee Dut, nephew of Dewan Moolraj, Toole Ram, Kooljus Rae, Futeh Mohamed Khan, Joala Sing, Hur Bhugwan, Rutun Sing, and Mohun Sing. On the day of their liberation, they lodged a formal complaint, that a man of the Nujeeb guard, to whom their friends in the Punjab had been remitting money for their use, had retained every fraction.—Lahore Chronicle, July 12.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

EXAMINATION OF MILITARY OFFICERS IN NATIVE LANGUAGES.

Simla, July 7, 1851.—The Most Noble the Gov. Gen. having had under consideration the system now pursued in the periodical examination of military officers in native languages, by station committees, and being of opinion that it is open to objection, his lordship, with a view to insure a more uniform and satisfactory test of proficiency, is pleased to direct that the examinations shall hereafter be conducted under the following rules:

2. Examining committees will be assembled annually on the 10th of January and 10th of July, at the several stations of the army as at present, and will be composed, when practicable, of one officer of the civil service, and of two or more military officers.

3. The committees will meet and conduct the examination as at present, but instead of passing an opinion as to the qualifications of the candidate, they are to transmit their proceedings, which are to be fully recorded, together with the translations, exercises, written questions and answers, and their opinion on the manner in which the candidate has passed the visd voce examination, to the secretary of the College of Fort William, to be laid before the college examiners, by whom the decision on the candidate's proficiency will be pronounced.

4. In transmitting their proceedings, committees are to make up each candidate's papers separately, designating them by a figure, or some distinctive mark, and not by his name.

5. Detailed instructions for the guidance of station examining committees will be prepared by the examiners of the College of Fort William.

6. Under this system, the same standard will be applied by the same judges to all who submit themselves to the test of examination.

COURT-MARTIAL.

LIEUT. ANSTROUTHER MAC TIER, 6TH L.C.

Head Quarters, Simla, July 18, 1851.—At a general court-martial assembled at Meerut, June 26, 1851, Lieut. A. Mac-tier, 6th L.C., was arraigned on the following charge:—

For unbecoming conduct, in the following instances:—

1st. In having, at Cawnpore, on April 27, 1851, caused Byjoo, a servant in his employ, to be beaten with a horsewhip by Bhowanee Sing, trooper, of the same regt.

2nd. In having, at the same time and place, himself struck with a horsewhip and with his fist the said Bhowanee Sing, trooper, because the latter did not beat severely enough the said Byjoo.

Finding.—Guilty of both instances of the charge, and guilty of unbecoming conduct, as set forth in the preamble.

Sentence.—To be severely reprimanded.

Revised Sentence.—The Court having maturely considered the observations made by H. E. the C.-in-C., beg most respectfully to adhere to their former sentence.

Confirmed.

(Signed) W. M. GOMM, General,

C.-in-C., East Indies.

Remarks by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.—The C.-in-C. considers that he cannot more effectually discharge the office which devolves upon him at the requisition of the Court in this instance, than by requiring that the observations which accompanied his orders for the reassembly of the Court should be read to Lieut. Mac-tier in its presence, evincing to him, as they have already done to the Court, in how grave a light his conduct is viewed by the Commander-in-Chief, and how inadequate to the offences proved he regards the sentence awarded and adhered to by the Court.

"1. The C.-in-C. cannot rest satisfied with the sentence passed by the Court in this case.

"2. It is not only the positive injunction of the Court of Directors, but it is the obvious duty of all vested with authority in India, to visit with marked severity the ill-treatment of natives by British residents or functionaries of whatever description.

3. "Yet here is an officer of twelve years' standing in the Company's service, who permits himself, in a fit of ill-humour, to summon his trooper to horsewhip his native servant; and, the infliction falling short of his desire, the trooper himself—one of a detachment employed on a special duty, under the immediate command of the lieutenant arraigned—becomes the victim of the moment, and is violently assaulted with fist and whip; and all this outrageous proceeding would seem to be in a great measure excused in the eyes of the Court by the prisoner's plea of infirmity of temper.

"4. The C.-in-C. cannot be prevailed upon to show such indulgence to proved misconduct, which, by the 103rd article of war, renders an officer liable to be cashiered; and he therefore recommends the Court, in the interest of the service and of the public at large, to reconsider its sentence."

After having heard these observations, Lieut. Mac-tier will be released from arrest, and directed to return to his duty.

THE FORSYTH POISONING CASE.

The proceedings consequent on the alleged attempt to poison Mr. Forsyth, the Civil and Sessions Judge of Tellicherry, have excited a good deal of talk here. In last month's issue we mentioned the acquittal of the prisoners, one of them a high official in Mr. Forsyth's court, charged with the commission of the crime. They were tried before Mr. D. Cooke, the Acting Sub-Judge of Calicut, whose most remarkable judgment has found its way into the public papers, and considerable indignation has been excited to witness judicial opportunities prostituted to the gratification of private animosities.—Athenæum, Aug. 13.

The judge, after a detailed analysis of the evidence, sums up thus:—"The evidence of all the witnesses of course rests upon the credit given to the 'confession'—the Court holds it of no importance; it was illegally obtained by violence or persuasion, and standing uncorroborated by a spark of evidence, is worthless both in reason, law, and equity. It is necessary only to remark, as regards the first and second witnesses, they are both hostile to the Nazir—the first was passed over and was told that he would not be promoted, he now found an opportunity of coming forward, and he did so, but gave evidence which, if credited, subjected him to have been committed as an accomplice—he concealed what he says the Nazir told him eight days through fear! Such an answer as this is indeed pitiful—yet he was tempted to hold to it, for he saw the situation of the Nazir vacant, and the salary of the officer had already been divided amongst the officials of the court. The evidence of the first, second, and third witnesses is not only false; it is infamous. It is needless to go on—a careful and earnest consideration of the evidence in this case has led the court to the conclusion, that, as regards the first and second prisoners, it is a base conspiracy fabricated by the fifth and sixth witnesses, in conjunction with the head of police, all enemies of the first prisoner, advantage having been taken of the drugging of the soup. The court resolves, therefore, to direct the immediate release of all the prisoners, the confession of the latter standing uncorroborated by a single ray of evidence either direct or circumstantial. There is no evidence that poison was put in the soup—no one died—and as no analysis was made either of the remains of the soup or of what was ejected by those who partook of it, the case as one of poisoning with the intent to kill falls to the ground."

The Tellicherry poisoning case is still sub judice. Mr. Forsyth's appeal in the Sessions Court of Calicut against the decision of the subordinate judge, was intercepted by a counter complaint of conspiracy against some of the witnesses for the prosecution, which was very expeditiously set on foot. Before this investigation was commenced, notice of appeal had been given, and the sessions judge had ordered the recapture of the prisoners, but the latter having been released on a Saturday, the magisterial proceedings took the lead, by the commencement of the first examination on the Sunday. Under these circumstances, the appeal appears to have been temporarily withdrawn, with a view to its renewal at the close of the magistrate's inquiry, and when that was understood to have terminated without the conviction of the accused, the appeal was again presented before the sessions judge. On account of some technical objection, however, it was considered inadmissible, and the prosecutor has therefore carried the case before the Court of Foudjary Udaltut. The matter, as it stands, resolves itself into three questions; viz., 1st, whether the subordinate court was justified in refusing to hear a material part of the prosecutor's evidence; 2nd, whether that court was competent to acquit and release a prisoner who had voluntarily confessed the crime for which he was arraigned; and 3rd, whether the magistrate's interference while the appeal was pending, and the examination of the third prisoner at a time when his recapture had been ordered by the sessions judge, were illegal or calculated to prejudice the case for the prosecution. If any of these questions are determined in favour of the appellant, the prisoners will still have to stand their trial for the offence with which they have been charged.—Spectator, July 16.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LONDON MAIL of June 24th arrived at Madras July 25th, GEOLOGICAL EXCURSIONS.—The Spectator contains an account of the first of a series of geological excursions that have been commenced by the indefatigable Dr. Hunter, with the view of enlightening the public on the proper method of developing the resources of the country.

THE CONVERT STREENAVASSA.—The Madras Hindu Chronicle states that Lutchmee Ummal, the lately truant wife of the convert Streenavassa, is now living happily with her husband. The same paper alleges that "it is pretty generally known that there was no real disinclination on the part of Lutchmee to follow the fortunes of her young husband, and that her parents were far from being opposed to the reunion so conducive to the happiness of the child. The late little row was only got up to throw dust into the eyes of the community."

NAVAL SCHOOL.—A meeting was held on the 1st of August, in the large hall of Patcheappalli's school, to adopt measures for the establishment of a naval school for East-Indian boys. The assemblage was one of the most numerous ever witnessed in Madras, was presided over by Sir Christopher Rawlinson, chief Justice, and addressed by Sir William Burton, the Hon. D. Elliott, Capt. Biden, Majors Young and Jenkins, Messrs. J. Thomson, E. B. Powell, J. H. Kenrick, and other gentlemen of influence.

THREATENING NOTICES.—A letter in the Spectator from a correspondent at Jaulnah states that another placard has been found in a locality near the general bazar at that station, of a similar import to that found on the gate of Captain Waters' compound. The writer subscribes himself "the murderer of Lieut. Johnstone," and threatens to take the life of another victim, [defying all attempts at discovery.]

A MODEL OF A RAILWAY, in brass, ordered from England by the Rajah of Mysore, had arrived at Bangalore, and excited the most intense interest in the native community. The rails are circular, twenty feet in circumference, and the engine is ten inches in length.

INDEBTEDNESS IN THE ARMY.—The attempt at head-quarters to check indebtedness in the army is producing distressing results in the shape of courts-martial and attempted suicide. The interference of the Commander-in-Chief with the private pecuniary affairs of officers, has been warmly denounced in some of the public prints as inquisitorial and degrading. One officer has been brought to a court-martial for resenting this interference, in what was considered a disrespectful manner; replying to certain queries from the Adjutant-General on the subject of his financial embarrassments, that he was not aware that he had constituted the Commander-in-Chief his agent. That the remedy is painful and humiliating there cannot be a doubt; but it must not be forgotten that the evil was extensive and aggravated; rapidly in fact becoming desperate. Sir William Gomm's reign will not be popular if its future progress manifest the same spirit as its commencement; but popularity is a trifling sacrifice to make on the altar of a reformation so necessary and important as that of weeding the Indian army of those habits of extravagance, negligence, and fraud in monetary dealings, now so lamentably rife in it.—Athenæum, Aug. 13.

ABDUCTION.—The Madras papers publish a report of proceedings in the Supreme Court, on the return of a writ of habeas corpus, for bringing up a Mussulman female child, who had been sold by her uncle for Rs. 44, to some retainer of the nawab of the Carnatic—whom there is a great reason to suspect of connivance at the affair, apparently for the purpose of eventual prostitution. The father of the child, who had intrusted her to his brother during absence, and could not recover her on his return, saw her riding with dancing girls on one of the Nawab's elephants, and applying for redress at the police-office, was referred to the Supreme Court, which issued the writ of habeas corpus. In obedience to it, the girl was brought up, but not until the Government agent at Chepauk had been applied to for assistance in serving it; the Nawab's servants having forcibly resisted the officer of court. The thing took place at a house of the Nawab's, and his servants were the offenders. The girl was restored by Sir William Burton to her father.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—We regret to announce the deaths of Lieuts. C. Kensington and T. A. Stannus, of the 14th regt. N.I. by drowning by the upsetting of a boat at Kulladghee, on the evening of the 1st instant. This casualty promotes Ens. C. D. Clementson and A. Read to lieutenants.—Athenæum, Aug. 12.

Fort St. George, July 29, 1851.—In consequence of the demise of Col. (Major-general) Henry Bowdler, of the infantry, the following alteration and addition to the list of officers entitled to off-reckonings are authorized.

Colonel Westrop Watkins—to half a share from the Off-Reckoning Fund, from the 7th June, 1851, vice Bowdler, deceased.

CUSTOM DUTIES ON ARTICLES IMPORTED INTO INDIA FOR USE OF THE ARMIES.

Fort St. George, August 1, 1851.—No. 149 of 1851.—The Right Honourable the Governor in Council is pleased to direct the publication of the following copy of a revenue despatch from the Honourable the Court of Directors to Bengal, on the subject of the levy of customs duties on articles imported into India for the use of regiments of her Majesty's and the Honourable Company's service.

Separate Revenue Despatch to Bengal, No. 3, dated April 9, 1851.

Para. 1. These paragraphs bring to our notice four instances in which an exemption from customs duty on wines and spirits brought or sent out for the use of the messes of her Majesty's regiments serving in India, was applied for, in three of which the application was complied with, and in the fourth refused.*

2. We desire that in future the rule laid down in Mr. Secretary Prinsep's letter to the Board of Customs, salt and opium, dated the 11th of April 1838, may be strictly adhered to and under which, exemption from Customs duty is granted to all articles of military store the property of Government, or of the regiments of her Majesty's and the East India Company's service, but denied to the mess stores or to the property and equipments of the officers of a regiment individually or collectively, which when imported are to be chargeable with the same duties as similar articles provided in the way of trade for sale in Calcutta.

3. A practice has for some time prevailed under the Madras Presidency, of permitting commanding officers of regiments to obtain from England and to pass free of duty, articles intended to promote the health and comfort of the soldiers,—such as wine, woollen cloth, dannel, &c., provided that application is made through the proper channel to Government, previously to the goods being ordered; to this practice we have no objection, it being understood that the exemption from duty extends only to articles which are to be applied exclusively to the use of soldiers, as in the case of the rum which is now issued to regimental canteens at cost price free from duty.

4. As the practice in these respects appears to differ at the several presidencies, we shall forward a copy of this despatch for the information and guidance of the Governments of Fort St. George and Bombay.

BOMBAY. THE NIZAM.

The following important communication reached us from Hyderabad yesterday:—

"It is most gratifying to announce the happy termination of the arrangements pending, since the end of June, for the payment of the large debt to the Supreme Government. Their disruption was momentarily threatened through the pigheadedness of the Nizam. He threw obstructions innumerable in the path of his minister; his caprices and vacillations occasioned the withdrawal of confidence and of credit in the money market, seriously injuring the measures the minister had in contemplation for the accomplishment of that great one which was to liberate his master from the pressure of that incubus, which would ere long have destroyed his vitality. I mentioned, about the commencement of the current month, that hoondies, to the amount of eighteen lacs, were actually sent in to the Residency, and for some days the Nizam's obstinate refusal to contribute a single rupee in aid of his minister's efforts to free him from thralldom, threatened a disruption of those efforts, and the commissioners for the to-be-ceded districts, who were on the eve of returning to their quondam occupations, were ordered to remain. Now, it is truly gratifying to know that they have received their congè; and that this truly harsh measure for the cession of part of the country, as designed by the Governor-General, will, in all probability, not be carried into effect, and a gross scandal both in this country and in Europe, uproar and clamour, be avoided, and the British name and honour be saved. There can be little doubt that the Governor-General must confirm the act of his representative. It was only on the 15th that the Nizam doggedly refused a sum of about twenty lacs to his minister, to complete the latter's promise of the early payment of forty lacs. His powers of persuasion, or "modus operandi" of working on his fears, must have been very extraordinary, for, on the 16th, he waited on the resident with a document, amply authenticated by his master, pledging himself to the immediate payment of twenty-two lacs, thus completing forty; and with the hopeful prospect of liquidating the whole debt before the end of October next. Then the great difficulty to be obviated will be the regular future payment of the contingent. For this purpose the minister has appropriated districts, the revenue of which yield thirty-six lacs per annum, with which his master has promised not to interfere, much less to divert. But the rumour is again revived that he will not suffer a Feringee to be employed in their collection. If this be true, the version I gave you in my last that, he had consented to the employment of an English capitalist, falls to the ground. These arrangements will necessarily require the intimate and incessant interference and control of the resident, in which it is to be hoped he will be strenuously upheld.

"There of course has not been time for the display of that vigour, with which those who know him have endowed the present minister. That anarchy which has prevailed so long still continues: and those friendly relations subsisting between him and the resident must necessarily lead to suggestions of good counsel, which will tend to the amelioration of the whole country. An instance of the adoption of vigorous and prompt measures has just occurred. On the 14th authentic intelligence was received of the sacking and plundering of twenty villages by a body of Rohillas in the vicinity of Goolburgah. The brigadier commanding the cavalry division happened to be in Hyderabad on duty. A 'forthwith,' as it is said, sent this gallant officer to the scene of the Rohilla outrages, and if they but abide his coming, he will certainly make as severe an example of them as did Brigadier Hampton on a late occasion."—Bombay Telegraph, July 25.

The new minister, Seraj-ool-Moolk, has succeeded in raising forty lacs of rupees, the amount of half the debt due to the British Government, and is prepared to make good the remainder within a limited period; General Fraser has acceded to the arrangement, and abated the demand for the surrender of territory. This demand of Lord Dalhousie's was founded upon the distinct acknowledgment, made in person by the Nizam to the Resident, that he had not the means of discharging the debt. When those means were provided, the territorial demand, of course, ceased. It is much to be doubted whether this measure, though it may postpone the day of absorption, will effectually obviate the necessity of that measure, and by restoring the vigour and virtue of the Nizam's administration, maintain his kingdom in its integrity. If this sum of forty lacs of rupees has been drawn from the private hoards, which, like every other Asiatic prince, he is reputed to possess, the payment will be viewed with much satisfaction. But if this relief has been obtained by fresh loans from the capitalists, and fresh hypo-thecation of landed revenue, accompanied with the transfer of the territory to their charge, it is highly to be deprecated. In that case, the finances of the state will be as much embarrassed as if the districts had been assigned to the British authorities. Perhaps even more so, because the accounts of these territorial assignments would have been more honourably and honestly adjusted by the responsible officers of the British Government, than they are likely to be by unscrupulous and imperative creditors. But even if the effect of this mortgage of land on the financial position of the Nizam be the same as if it had been made to the British authorities, and not to the native lender, the condition of the districts and of the agricultural population, which would have been improved under the management of the one, must necessarily be deteriorated in the hands of the other.

The Nizam is utterly unable to perform any of the functions of a ruler, and his government is kept together by the presence of British troops, who maintain him on the throne, but only by the sacrifice of every feeling of compassion or even justice for his wretched people, and we shall rejoice, when the period arrives for taking the sceptre out of the puny hands in which we have so long left it, and making ourselves responsible for the welfare and prosperity of the people.—Friend of India, Aug. 7.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LONDON MAIL of July 7th reached Bombay on the 1st of August.

THE VOLUNTARY PRINCIPLE IN TURNPIKES.—In England, when a new road or bridge is about to be constructed under the authority of an Act of Parliament, on which there is a chance of toll requiring to be levied, power is allowed to prevent the construction of other roads or bridges, or to shut up those which may exist, in the neighbourhood. The Bhore Ghaut is the only case on this side of India where a toll has been tried, and here, where the English provision was attended to, the returns have been so enormously remunerative as to show that money could scarcely be better invested with the view to direct return than in the construction of toll roads in suitable localities. A road having been proposed to be constructed by Government on the Thull Ghaut, a toll was wished to be imposed,—but there was no end of delays and difficulties in obtaining an Act to shut up all the roads in the ghaut save the Government one. It was resolved to try what could be done without an Act at all, and tolls were placed at both ends of the Government road, the ghaut being left perfectly open, the old roads remaining as before, and wayfarers were allowed to select which they chose—to go by the old road free, or pay for the Government road should they desire to use it. The result has been, that the toll road has been exclusively sought after, the natives being perfectly alive to the advantages of a good road, and quite willing to pay for it when it is to be had on fair terms, rather than accept of a bad one for nothing.—Bombay Times, July 16.

NATIVES OF INDIA IN LONDON.—The Bombay Board of Education have offered a gold medal, of the value of Rs. 200, for the best Essay on the following subject:—"On the advantages which would result to India by the establishment of a serai, or public bungalow, in London, with compound, wells, &c., suitable for native travellers." This is evidently intended to draw out native ideas upon the subject of a visit to England.

RENT-FREE LANDS.—The Bombay Telegraph states, that the Draft Act, intitled an "Act for the adjudication of titles to certain estates claimed to be rent-free in the Presidency of Bombay," enables Government to re-open the whole question of the tenure of the Enam lands. These are lands in some degree resembling, we believe, the Debutter and the Brumutter lands of Bengal, but held of Government under a somewhat different tenure. The total loss caused by them to the revenue is said to be 90 lacs (900,000*l.*) a year; but this is doubtful.

TWO STEAM-FRIGATES have been ordered to be sent, in October, with a sufficient force, to punish the tribes to which the murderers of Captain Mylne belong, as they refuse to give them up.—Telegraph, Aug. 5.

CEYLON.

The Governor is now in Colombo, and as the slight estrangement between himself and the colonial secretary, resulting from some difference of opinion on public questions, has been made the subject of comment, it does not seem out of place to mention, that His Excellency and his most immediate adviser are now on those cordial terms which ought to exist between men in their relative positions, and which may be expected to prevail more and more the more they know each other, between two such minds as Sir George Anderson's and that of Mr. Mac Carthy.

By next mail we shall probably be able to announce the assembling of the legislative council, with the vacant seats filled up by the introduction of Mr. Robert Dawson from amongst the merchants, and Mr. Edremanesinghen from amongst the native Tamils. Great and organic changes in the laws, and the constitution of the courts of justice, are anticipated. It is expected that some steps will be taken to put an end to the uncertainty which now prevails as to which law out of the many prevalent in Ceylon should be applied in certain cases and in certain districts. The changes to be effected in the laws are to a great extent matter of surmise merely, but those to be proposed in the tribunals vested with their administration are pretty certainly known. The jurisdiction of courts of request is to be extended, and the district courts are to be vested with similar summary powers. The Supreme Court will hold criminal sessions every month instead of every six months, as at present, and all civil appeals will be heard at Colombo. Lord Torrington's stamp ordinance, which has been found to operate with oppressive harshness on suitors, is to be greatly modified; and, we believe, the fees of advocates and proctors will be reduced. There is no intention, we understand, to legislate on the Buddhist question. The Governor has signed some appointments of parties selected by the colleges of chiefs and priests, such appointments being deemed necessary to the appearance of the parties in courts of justice as the legal custodiers of temple lands. But it is well known that Mr. Anstruther was correct when he declared that the effete system of Ceylon Buddhism was kept alive only by the countenance which it received from the British Government. Let us hope then, for the sake of the natives as well as the British—for the sake of truth and progress, that some fair, just, and practicable scheme may be devised for leaving Buddhism to the Buddhists. The large amount of property involved, the political influence which the holders of such property would inevitably acquire if rendered entirely independent, and the utter inability of the natives, when left to themselves, to manage property without scrambling, fighting, and incessant litigation, are the great bugbears with Government. Those who have studied the subject most deeply are most keenly alive to the difficulties which surround it; but we have no hesitation in expressing our conviction that the religious element as existing in the minds of the Buddhists has very little to do with the matter.—*Cal. THE INSURRECTION.—In our last we stated that Lieutenant-general Wu lan-tai had left Canton in the early part of June, with the intention of coalescing with the commissioners sent by the Tartar Emperor to put down the rebellion. But the insurgents had no intention of allowing him to form the coalition with the ease it would appear he had anticipated; and, giving him battle, at a pass called Luk-wo-ee, he was totally routed with a loss of upwards of one thousand men; the general himself being so severely wounded that it is said he will have to undergo the amputation of an arm.

Since the receipt of this intelligence nothing else has come to hand that can be in any way relied upon. The boat people and others importing provisions for the Canton market have circulated a report that Kwei-lin-fu, the capital of Kwang-si, has been taken, ransacked, and again deserted; but this is not the first time such a report has found its way into our columns, and we receive it with the more caution, for that natives here, who have friends in the disturbed districts, have not received advices corroborative of such report. In Canton we were told that the mandarins were determined on keeping the real state of affairs from becoming known to the inhabitants of the city, and that they were using every measure, even to the interception of correspondence, to prevent the same from being effected. Commissioner General Seu leaves Canton as to-day, taking with him a body of three thousand men, and a large amount of treasure.

A report is current that he will take another course to reach his colleague commissioners, viz. by the way of Cochinchina; but such a report will have grown out of the misbaps of his friend the general. Tartar courage can hardly have descended so low in degree, that it would take a circuitous course like that to evade an engagement.

From Shanghai Samqua, the late acting Taou-tae wended his way for Kwang-si, with some 140,000 taels of silver, on the 21st ultimo, taking under his charge en route a sum of 600,000 taels appropriated at Nankin out of the salt and customs revenue of Keang-nan.—Friend of China, July 24.

The health of the troops in garrison is not so satisfactory as we would wish; as compared with the state in July last year, however, the improvement is most manifest. Then we had to tell of twenty-three deaths; this month there have been twelve only, viz.—seven privates of the 59th regiment, four of the Ceylon rifle corps, and one of the staff assistant surgeons. At present there are 105 sick in the European hospitals and sixteen in the hospital of the Ceylon rifle corps; total, 121.—Ibid.

DISCOVERY OF GOLD.—The discovery, by Mr. Hargraves, that the country, from the mountain ranges to an indefinite extent in the interior, is one immense gold-field, has produced a tremendous excitement in the town of Bathurst and the surrounding districts. For several days after our last publication, the business of the town was utterly paralyzed. A complete mental madness appears to have seized almost every member of the community, and, as a natural consequence, there has been a universal rush to the diggings. Any attempt to describe the numberless scenes,—grave, gay, and ludicrous,—which have arisen out of this state of things, would require the graphic pen of a Dickens. Groups of people were to be seen early on Monday morning at every corner of the streets, debating both possibilities and impossibilities, and eager to pounce upon any human being who was likely to give any information about the diggings. People of all trades, callings, and pursuits, were quickly transformed into miners, and many a hand which had been trained to kid gloves, or accustomed to wield nothing heavier than the grey goosequill, became nervous to clutch the pick and crowbar, or "rock the cradle" at our infant mines. The blacksmiths of the town could not turn off the picks fast enough, and the manufacture of cradles was the second brisk business of the place. A few left town on Monday, equipped for the diggings; but on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, the roads to Summer-hill Creek became literally alive with new-made miners from every quarter, some armed with picks, others shouldering crowbars or shovels, and not a few strung round with washhand-basins, tin pots and cullenders, garden and agricultural implements of every variety, either lung from the saddle-bow or dangled about the persons. Now and then a respectable tradesman, who had just left his bench or counter, would heave in sight, with a huge something in front of his horse which he called a cradle, and with which he was about to rock himself into fortune. Scores have rushed from their homes, provided with a blanket, "a damper," and a pick or grubbing-hoe, full of hope that a day or two's labour would fill their pockets with the precious metal; and we have heard of a great number who have started without any provision but a blanket, and some rude implement to dig with. Such is the intensity of the excitement, that people appear almost regardless of their present comfort, and think of nothing but gold. Of course, all this must end in disappointment. The wet weather of the last two nights, with the damp ground for a bed, and the teeming clouds for a canopy, will do much towards damping the enthusiasm of numbers. We have the authority of an experienced man in stating that, from the imperfect and unsuitable implements used by all who have left for the diggings, coupled with their miserable provision in other respects, success is impossible; that the labour necessary to success is extremely severe, and he ventures, as his opinion, that no more than 3 per cent. will become permanent miners. One of the consequences has been a rapid rise in the price of provisions. Flour, which ranged from 26s. to 28s. per 100 lbs., has been sold for 45s.; tea, sugar, and almost every other eatable commodity, have advanced in equal proportion. A large amount of the wheat in the district is in the hands of a few speculators, who will maintain their hold, in the hope of a golden harvest. But for the very extensive supplies now on their way from Sydney, flour would soon be at a famine price; and should a rush take place from below, as may be reasonably expected, it is to be hoped that there are capitalists enough to adventure in one of the safest speculations of the times—the purchase of flour for the supply of the district.

What assisted very materially to fan the excitement into a flame, was the arrival of a son of Mr. Neale, the brewer, with a piece of pure metal, weighing eleven ounces, which was purchased by Mr. Austin for 30*l.*, who started to Sydney by the following day's mail with the gold and the news. Since that, an old man arrived in town with several pieces in mass, weighing in all from two to three pounds. He also started for Sydney, with his prize. Mr. Kennedy, the manager of the Bathurst Branch of the Union Bank of Australia, visited the diggings in company with Messrs. Hawkins and Green, and each picked up a small piece of the pure metal, and a few handfuls of the loose earth from the bed of the creek, which were brought home by Mr. Kennedy from motives of curiosity, have been since assayed by Mr. Korff, from Sydney, and a piece of gold extracted therefrom of the size of a small pea. On Wednesday morning last, Mr. Hargraves, accompanied by Mr. Stutchbury, the Government geologist, went to the diggings, and with his own hands washed a pan of earth in his presence, from which twenty-one grains of fine gold were produced. He afterwards washed several baskets of earth, and produced gold therefrom. Mr. Stutchbury hereupon expressed his satisfaction, and immediately furnished him with credentials, which have since been forwarded to Government. The fact of the existence of gold is therefore clearly established; and whatever credit or emolument may arise therefrom, Mr. Hargraves is certainly the individual to whom it properly belongs.

A Mr. Rudder, an experienced California gold-digger, is now at work in the diggings. There are also several magistrates plying their picks and cradles most laboriously, but we have not heard with what success. In fact, there appears every probability of a complete social revolution in the course of time. Those who are not already departed are making preparations. Servants of every description are leaving their various employments, and the employers are, per necessitatem, preparing to follow. But, notwithstanding all this, we feel that a reaction will speedily take place. The approach of winter and wet weather will do something towards cooling the ardour of the excited multitude.—Bathurst Free Press, May 17.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The accounts from Cape Town, which are to the 1st August, afford a poor prospect of speedily terminating the war in Caffria.

A combined movement of the two divisions under Gen. Somerset and Col. Mackinnon, against the enemy in the Amatolas, on the 26th June, lasted several days, and was successful. The Caffres were driven with considerable loss from strong positions, and 2,200 cattle were taken. Our loss was 9 killed, and 19 wounded, including Capt. Melville, of the Levies, and Lieut. Bruce, 74th Highlanders. This success, however, caused the enemy to enter the colony, where they committed frightful ravages, wasting whole districts. Macomo, with the Caffres and rebel Hottentots, crossed the upper "sprints" of the Konap, and thence precipitated themselves on the colony; and before they could be checked by a sufficient force, the property swept off and destroyed was immense. It is stated that the whole of the fine tract of country watered by the Bariaans, the Kaga, the Konap, and the Kat rivers, is devastated; the dwellings of the inhabitants are laid in ashes, while 20,000 Merino sheep, 3,000 head of cattle, and 300 horses, had been swept away by the enemy, who had penetrated the colony as far as the Qugga Flats, on the other side of Port Elizabeth. Measures were, however, being taken to check their progress. Camps were formed at Haddon and the Fish River Rand, whence active patrols were sent out to scour the country and protect the farmers.

On the 19th July, a patrol under Col. Michell to the Keiskamma returned to King William's Town, after nine days' continued operations in the Fish River bush, during which he dislodged several parties of Stocks Caffres, destroyed a Hottentot camp, and captured 80 head of cattle. His loss was, two killed and two wounded. They were attacked on their return by the chief Seyolo, who stated that, having lost his country, he did not desire peace. Col. Eyre had returned on the 22nd with his patrol of 700 men, bringing in 224 head of cattle; but had no fighting. Some Caffre women, whom he took prisoners, confirmed the report of the alarm of the Gaikas at the combined movement in the Amatolas; they stated that Sandilli had a very narrow escape from falling into the hands of the troops during these operations. Col. Napier, who had gone out at the same time in command of 200 cavalry, had captured 280 head of cattle.

From the Orange River Sovereignty the intelligence is of a nature calculated to cause considerable alarm. Major Warden, the British Resident, in endeavouring to quell some disturbances between the native chiefs, had suffered a repulse. In an action on the 30th June, the British troops were forced to retire, and Moroko, our ally, is stated to have lost upwards of 130 men. Major Warden was preparing for a combined movement, at the head of 3,000 men, against the enemy; but all the regular force at his disposal did not exceed 170 men, principally of the 45th Regiment and Cape Corps.

Another attack had been made on the frontier mail, between Graham's Town and Fort Beaufort, by the Hottentots. The party (among whom were two respectable tradesmen of the latter town, Mr. S. P. Impey and Mr. Curley, who availed themselves of the return of the post) were fired on; six were killed, and one wounded, the man who brought the intelligence alone escaping. On the same day, a party of the European levy, in pursuit of some cattle, met with a severe repulse from the same enemy, five of the levy being killed. Gen. Somerset had sent out a strong force in pursuit.

From Port Elizabeth, information had been received of the great destruction of property in the Zuurberg and Oliphant's Hoek. It is said that the line of Sunday's River, if not that of the Zwaart-kops also, is contested by the enemy.

Sandilli, who is represented as greatly dejected, it is said, contemplated a removal with his people to beyond the Kye. He had sent messengers to Pato, who had gone to Fort Murray to receive their communication.

The news from Krelis is pacific. Two messengers had arrived at King William's Town, with a message from him to the Governor. The substance is stated to be a desire for peace, a profession of fidelity towards the British Government, and, as a proof, a request that the British Resident may be sent back, in order to be the medium of future communication.

Pato continued faithful to the British cause.

The native levies, whose term of service has expired, having declined to remain longer in the field, had been disbanded. This reduced the force in Caffreland by upwards of 1,500 men. Orders had been issued for raising a force of 1,000 volunteers; but it is very doubtful whether anything like that number will be obtained.

No further supply of troops had reached the Cape subsequent to the arrival of the Vulcan.

A fresh outbreak of constitutional opposition has manifested itself in the colony in consequence of the publication of what are termed "Additional Instructions" to the Governor, under the Sign Manual, whereby the existing Legislative Council, though consisting of less than ten members, is declared to be, until further provision is made, competent to make laws so long as it shall comprise not less than six members, exclusive of the Governor, and that five (including the president) shall be a quorum, instead of seven; but that when the Legislative Council shall be summoned to pass the ordinances adverted to in the Letters Patent of 1850, for constituting a future Parliament, the Council shall be constituted in all respects as before.

The despatch from Lord Grey, accompanying the Additional Instructions, contains the following paragraphs:—

"With regard to the course now to be followed as to the proposed new constitution, I consider that it would be inexpedient to take any steps for bringing it into operation in the state of things which you describe as now existing. With a war actually raging, and under the influence of the strong party-feeling which you describe as prevailing between the different classes of the inhabitants of the colony, it seems to me impossible that representative institutions could be brought into operation for the first time with advantage, or even with safety. When so many of the inhabitants of the colony are in the field against the enemy, it is impossible that elections could be carried on without throwing the choice of the members of the new Parliament mainly into the hands of those who have been least ready in coming forward in defence of the colony.

"Hence her Majesty's Government have come to the conclusion that it is advisable to wait for a more fitting season for completing the constitution, and to abstain from taking any measures at present, except those which are necessary for carrying on the ordinary business of the colony, and passing those laws which are immediately required."

Meetings were called, in which these Instructions were denounced. The Central Corresponding Committee met, and adopted the following resolution:—"That this Committee view the measures described in the Additional Instructions, as calculated to cause universal discontent, ruinous to the best interests of the colony, and despotism on the part of her Majesty's servants; and that they deem it the duty of the colonists to cause their remonstrances against it to be fully made known to her Majesty." A meeting of the Commissioners of the Cape Town Municipality was also held, at which a petition to her Majesty was agreed to, in which the petitioners submit humbly "that the measures now contemplated by your servants will utterly subvert the peace of the colony; will cause universal discontent; will raise throughout the colony the most extreme anxiety, lest yet greater injustice be committed towards your subjects;—and they therefore pray your Majesty to interpose between your servants and the inhabitants of this colony, and to grant the colony, without delay, the representative form of government so often already entreated from your Majesty; thus relieving them from the principles of despotism which characterize the present mode in which the colony is governed; assuring them in their affection to your Majesty, and effectually securing to them that state of internal tranquillity which has so often been jeopardized by the acts of your Majesty's servants."

The London Gazette of the 16th publishes official despatches from Sir H. Smith, detailing the operations in the Amatola mountains, which he says were effected with the success he anticipated:—1,500 head of cattle, 42 horses, and nearly 1,000 goats were captured by the second division, 350 head of cattle by the first division, and 300 by the force under Captain Tylden, while large stores of corn were destroyed, as well as numerous recently-constructed huts. "In the midst of these scenes of desolation," his Excellency adds, "I am consoled by the fact, that the people are aware that the war was commenced by their chief, Sandilli; that every prisoner is set at liberty, and told that peace and the former harmony which prevailed are our only objects, after the due punishment of the war party and their rebellious chiefs; and, more than all, by the gratifying reflection that our troops can be charged with no act of wanton cruelty." He admits, however, that this success had no perceptible effect as regards the termination of hostilities. "The people indeed declare that they are tired of the struggle, and that our patrols keep them in a state of constant alarm; while the chief Sandilli asserts and gives out 'that an agent has gone, on his account, to England, who will procure the restoration of the land which he forfeited in the previous war;' such forfeiture having been the condition on which he obtained his own liberty and that of his 'Great Men,' who were in confinement with him when I assumed the administration of this Government, and on which peace and tranquillity were given to his people."

In another despatch, Sir Harry, with reference to the irruption of the Caffres into the colony, consequent upon their dislodgment from the Amatolas, observes: "Lamentable as these excesses are, former experience strongly inclines me to believe that they are the last effort of the enemy, who in all previous wars has invariably made a rush into the colony immediately before his final submission. I am therefore the more anxious to continue my combined operations in the Amatolas, which, in the present dispirited state of the Gaikas, would, I hope, bring hostilities to a close."

In a third despatch, he says:—"In the Orange River territory affairs are by no means in so satisfactory a position as I could desire. In my memorandum to the officers in authority there, it is far from my intention to convey censure, having full confidence in their discretion; but risks should never be run, nor any attempt made to carry an enemy's position, especially in the commencement of a war, without every probability of success. It would have been gratifying to me to have been able to extend my report of successful operations in British Caffraria to the Orange River districts, and I trust that my next intelligence will enable me to do so."

The following passage in Major Warden's report describes the incident which elicited the Commander-in-Chief's memorandum above referred to.

"In my letter of the 27th ultimo to your Excellency's secretary, Colonel Garvock, I mentioned that the force under Major Donovan would move on the following day towards Sikongela's country, in order to enable that chief to join his tribe. We took the waggon-road, and, when about 10 miles from Plat Berg, the advanced guard was fired upon by a party concealed behind some rocks. Not a shot was returned on our side, and the troops with the burghers and native contingents encamped near the mountain called 'Vier Voet.' During the night some shots were again fired by the enemy, and a Fingoe sentry badly wounded. The next day, being Sunday, the commando made no movement: the enemy, however, was observed to be in force on the Vier Voet Mountain, and on the following morning Major Donovan gave the order for attack; most gallantly was it made, and the stronghold of the enemy carried with severe loss to our opponents. The Barolongs, 700 strong, after capturing some thousands of cattle, and believing that no further fighting was required, remained on the mountain for the purpose of plundering the huts, and regaling themselves on Caffre beer, which was found in large quantities. During this time two large Basontu commandoes, under Moshesh's brother, Mosseni, and Molappa, Moshesh's son, gained the summit of the mountain and fell upon the Barolongs, who were taken by surprise, and had it not been for the gallant stand made by the Boers under Commandant Erasmus, who had observed the approach of the Basontus, very few of the Barolongs would have escaped; as it was, 138 Barolongs were killed and many wounded. A six-pounder gun, well horsed, and supported by a detachment of Cape Mounted Rifles, under Ensign Somerset, and a party of Boers under Mr. A. Eervee, was hard pressed by the enemy for many hours, and escaped with difficulty."

A letter from Mr. Gladwin, from Butterworth, dated so late as 31st July, reports, as one of the results of the Amatola movement, "that the chief Rilli, 'the key-note in Caffreland,' had come to him, and expressed a desire for peace."

ST. HELENA.

The case of the Levenside (see p. 490), seized by Capt. Vesey, of the Royal Artillery, has concluded. It will be recollected that, while on the passage to St. Helena, Capt. Vesey attempted to uncover a hatchway which, being closed, was thought likely to be injurious to the health of the men under his command. The captain resisted by force, and Capt. Vesey caused him to be confined till the termination of the voyage. The St. Helena Advocate, of the 10th of July, says, "The sessions commenced this morning. In the above important case, we have just time, before going to press, to report that the indictment against Capt. Campbell, the master of the vessel, for assault with intent to murder, has been thrown out by the grand jury, and that the indictment for piracy against the passengers and first mate has also been ignored."

Capt. Campbell had obtained a verdict against Capt. Vesey, with 200*l.* damages.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

Amongst the indications of progress in knowledge to be discerned in the literature of Europe, we may fairly reckon the comparative accuracy in the draughts of Eastern manners furnished in our Oriental tales and fictions. Fifty years ago, these vehicles of popular amusement and instruction were anything but what they professed to be; an Eastern tale was scarcely Eastern even in the mere names of the actors; its machinery was at best a preposterous caricature of Oriental manners and modes of thought, but in most cases, an absurd jumble of those of all nations; whatever was not European could be readily passed off as Asiatic. The portraiture of Eastern society was thus disfigured, not only in those fugitive productions which take no permanent hold of our literature, but in works denominated classical, which are still read as manuals of social ethics, and models of English composition. Strange, too, as it may appear, the later of these productions are the least correct; there is far more truth in the Oriental tales of Addison, who seems to have had access to genuine materials, than in those of Johnson and Hawkesworth, where the justness of the sentiments and the elegance of the style offer a strong contrast to the false, puerile, and even ridiculous manners of the fable, which they scarcely redeem from the contempt of the well-informed reader.

An Eastern tale in the latter part of the last century would run somewhat in the following strain:—

"Bimbashi, the sultan of the Indies, a devout worshipper of Ahirmanes, looked out one morning from the window of the imperial pagoda which graced the banks of the Ganges, and, gazing for a while at the pelicans sporting upon its golden sands, and at the crocodiles sunning their oozy backs upon the flowery turf that carpeted its luxuriant islets, 'Let this day,' said Bimbashi, 'be dedicated to happiness!' The balmy breeze, impregnated with delicious odours from the adjoining shores of Zeylan, wafted the decree throughout the land; palaces and harems, the tent of the soldier and the hut of the peasant, poured forth eager multitudes, their countenances radiant with joy and redolent of gratitude and hope, prepared to obey the glad summons of their prince. Caled, the vizier, led the van; prostrating himself at the feet of Bimbashi, he placed in the monarch's hand the hilt of his jewelled sabre, and, baring his neck, exclaimed, 'Commander of the Faithful, strike, and with joy will my soul, dismissed by thy paternal hand, seek and sing thy praise in the dark caverns of Shems-ul-Sheddin!' 'Rise, my faithful minister,' said the sultan; 'and as thou hast taught thy master to be wise and devout, teach his people to be happy!'

"The Moofis and the Imams, the Dufferdars and the Talookdars,—all who were versed in the secrets of science, and skilled in the arts of heightening pleasure and devising new modes of enjoyment, were required, on pain of impalement, to assist the vizier by suggesting means of fulfilling the decree of Bimbashi the devout. Bands of musicians without number intoxicated the very air with their incessant harmony; troops of damsels of the most bewitching beauty, habited like Peris, crowned with unfading flowers, and bearing bowls of sherbet which, by a secret contrivance, were always replenished, danced in never-ending mazes, which made the dazzled eye giddy with delight; burning piles of cassia and eagle wood, strewed with Olibanum and Benzoin, on which firkins of richest otta were constantly poured, sent forth volumes of the most fragrant incense; whilst swarms of rosy cherubs were everywhere busied in filling pipes of Shiraz with tobacco of Lataki, and cups of China with the aromatic essence of the bean of Yemen, to recreate the spirits of the faithful. Ever and anon, the sound of a mighty trumpet was heard from the topmost pinnacle of the towering mosque, which lifted its dome above the turrets of the seraglio, whence a gigantic black slave of Mongolia called aloud to the throngs below, 'Bismallah as-Snooki?' 'In the name of Bimbashi, are you happy?'

"Bimbashi descended from the highest story of his pagoda, where he gazed upon the shining orbs to which he offered his morning and evening orisons, and, calling unto him his vizier, said, 'Caled, are my people happy?' Prostrating himself again, and again tendering his scymetar and his throat, the faithful minister affirmed, by the Vishnu he adored, that they were happy. 'We,' replied the monarch, 'are not happy; we will therefore mix privily with our people, and whilst we assure ourselves of their felicity, we may peradventure catch a portion of it ourselves.'

"Removing from his imperial brow the lofty karakalpak, divesting himself of the other insignia of his rank, and clothing his regal limbs in the coarse raiment of a maker of gingerbread, the sultan sallied forth arm in arm with his vizier, clad as a merchant of Stamboul, and plunged amongst the crowds summoned and waiting to be happy.

"They had not walked more than twenty paces of a camel, ere they were startled by the shrill and piteous notes of a wailing infant. The sultan cast a dark look upon his beloved vizier, who said, 'Arbiter of my fate, infants find their sweetest solace in cries and tears,'—and the frown left the imperial visage as swiftly as a fog vanishes before the sun on the waters of the Caspian. Twenty paces farther, a muffled female was heard to complain that she was tired, could see nothing, and wished to return home. 'Slave,' exclaimed Bimbashi to the minister, 'how is this?' 'Disposer of my life,' replied Caled, 'hush, or you will be discovered. Would the enlightener of the world act upon the evidence of a woman?' 'Go on,' said the sultan; and they went twenty paces further, when they heard a man grumbling that he had missed that day the making of a dress; that the tobacco he believed was not of Lataki, and that he was sure the coffee was the accursed berry of the Unbeliever. The sultan grasped his scymetar; but the vizier stayed his hand, and asked the man his occupation, who replied that he fashioned the garments of the Faithful,—in other words, that he was a tailor; and the sultan was pacified.

"The golden orb of day was stealing down the azure slope, the bulbuls were beginning to pipe their even-song, the crocodiles had sought the flood, the pelicans had forsaken the golden sands, and were feeding their young from their bosoms in the tall rushes that skirt the margins of the Ganges,—yet Bimbashi had heard no one say, 'I am happy!' Perceiving, seated upon the grass, a group, from the midst of whom issued a merry laugh, 'Inshallah! Mashallah!' exclaimed the impatient prince, 'here at length we shall find some who are happy;' and with his vizier he squatted upon his hams in the circle. Alas! the exclamatory symptoms of delight came from one who was either a holy idiot (peace be with such!), or one who had quaffed the forbidden liquor whose deadly fumes destroy body and soul. The vizier, in despair, strove to elicit from the group a confession of enjoyment. Drawing his calloon from his lips, the nearest man declared that, though he had been told he was to be happy, and had been seeking happiness all day, he had not found it, nor met with any who had. The others groaned assent, one affirming that the happiness promised by the sultan had been intercepted by the vizier. 'Miscreant!' shouted the infuriated prince; and, as the lightning leaps from the dark cloud where Indra sits enthroned, splitting the giant oak, so the sabre of the Commander of the Faithful, starting with a flash from its sheath, descended upon the neck of Caled, whose head rolled grinning in the midst of the group. Terror first, then rage, seized the whole party. 'Wretch,' they exclaimed, grasping him by the throat, 'thou hast by this crime polluted a day dedicated to happiness; thou shalt answer for this before Bimbashi.' 'Avaunt! basest of slaves,' returned the sultan; and, shaking off those who held him, with a killing frown and a voice of thunder, 'I,' he said,—am—Bimbashi!!'

"It was night; the votaries of happiness were wending homewards, wondering what had balked them of the boon they were promised, when the sultan, moody and solitary, reached his pagoda, and flinging himself upon the silken cushions of his musnud, commanded the eunuch Ortogrul to fetch the white-bearded moollah Lakshmidelah, whom he had left communing with the invisible stars in the upper story of the pagoda. 'O, moollah,' said the sultan, when he appeared, 'why are not my people happy, as I commanded? Have the stars—' and here he clutched his sabre, still reeking with the blood of the vizier.

"Avatar of Ahirman the most Merciful,' interposed the moollah, 'forbear. The stars are not to blame, neither was thy vizier. It is not enough to command happiness; its means must be carefully provided beforehand; and when next Bimbashi desires to secure to his subjects a happy day, let him give to his faithful Lakshmidelah an order upon the imperial treasury for the sum he shall require to procure from a cave in the mountains of Kaf, guarded by griffins and unicorns, a precious essence, one drop of which, evaporated on a brand taken from the flaming nest of a phoenix, will purge the atmosphere, extinguish all sorrow, and so exhilarate the corpuses of the human body, that happiness must be the necessary result.'

"Bimbashi vowed that he would try this experiment, and, under the cooling influence of chowries, the gentle fanning of which subdued the fever in his blood, he,—fell asleep."

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

Sir,—“Greek and Arabic seem to be the languages that have suffered the smallest change in the lapse of ages.” These words are those of Mr. Finlay, in his History of Greece, lately published, where he examines the history and character of ancient and modern Greek; but he appears, I think, here to overlook, or possibly not be aware of, a third language, which, far from having undergone the process of degradation, by which he describes the Hellenic language to have been transformed into the Romaic, has, to this day, retained all the original strength and beauty it derived from remote antiquity, and cultivated through-out succeeding ages,—I mean, the Persian.

With your permission, I will, in a few words, endeavour to show that the opinion here advanced rests on no slight foundation, but is capable of clear and satisfactory elucidation.

Cornelius Nepos informs us that Themistocles, during his exile in Persia, in the course of one year, acquired a competent knowledge of the language of the country; this was about the middle of the fifth century before Christ.

The next historical notice of this tongue we meet with does not occur until the commencement of the seventh century of our era, when Moohummud, in order to oppose the seductive influence of Persian tales and romances, then beginning to be heard in Arabia, and to be received by the people with delight, deemed it necessary to arrest the progress of such pernicious entertainments, and produced, more suo, a special revelation in the Koran, directed to condemn and suppress them. But the Prophet himself, who polished the language of the country, and brought the Arabic to a degree of purity and elegance unsurpassed by any writer since, is said to have held the Persian in high estimation for its “extreme sweetness,” and was heard to declare, that “it would be spoken, on this account, in the Gardens of Paradise.”

Now the Persian of which mention is here made, and the language employed by Firdoosee, in his Shah Namu, admitting a few Arabic words, is identically the same. We know, also, that, unchanged to the present day, and accepting Arabic more or less liberally, the Persian continues to preserve the distinctive character, regimen, and grammatical construction, which mark it as an original language, having no affinities; and although, as already stated, freely admitting Arabic words, it is, in the above respects, totally different in genius and organization from that language. To prove what is here said, I need but refer to the works, in prose and verse, of the host of Persian writers who have flourished since the conquest of the country by a foreign race, to whose domination Persia yielded her religion and independence, without losing, from intercourse with her conquerors, the possession of her ancient national language.

Here we cannot but observe the opposite fates of two old languages, presented in striking contrast. Greek, superseded by Romaic, is become what is termed a dead language; whilst Persian, in the land of its birth, survives, a flourishing and living tongue, the vehicle of speech and thought of a powerful nation.

As a fitting conclusion, I add a specimen of the spirit and vigour of Firdoosee's muse, which will also serve as an example of the “laffo nushur” of Eastern dialecticians, or “folding and expanding” in poetry; a feat, I believe, less esteemed by us than by the Oriental sons of Apollo:

*Buroz-i-nuburd, an Yul-i usjoomund,
Butegh o bu khunjur, bu goorg o kumund;
Booreed o dureed o shikust o bibust,
Yulanra sur o seenu, pa o dust.*

“On that tremendous day,

With sword and dagger, battle-mace and noose,
He cut, and tore, and broke, and bound the brave.”

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

FRIDAY, September 19, 1851.

WHEN steam-navigation was in its infancy, a communication with India, by means of steam-vessels, that would shorten the voyage by a few weeks, was timidly contemplated as a remote possibility. We are now told of the probability, or at least the practicability, in the space of fourteen years, of a route between London and Calcutta by land, that shall occupy only a week! Who that has seen the many supposed impossibilities, in the matter of locomotion, that have been accomplished within the last twenty years, will condemn this scheme as visionary?

The details of the project,—a gigantic one, it must be confessed, and which, for its fulfilment, requires certain very difficult conditions,—are developed in another column. In fewer words, it proposes to carry a continuous line of railroad from Ostend to Orsova, on the frontier of Turkey; thence to Constantinople, and, across Asia Minor, to Bussorah, at the head of the Persian Gulf, whence it is to be continued to Hyderabad, on the Indus, where the converging branches of the Indian lines would meet the great trunk, and convey travellers to Bombay, Lahore, or Calcutta. The total number of miles of railway to be constructed is 5,600, of which, we are told, 2,600 miles, or nearly one-half, are actually decided upon, and in course of construction. We are further informed, that the scheme is the result of “the revised designs of an engineer, who has been for some time engaged in maturing the means of the undertaking.”

Very cool-headed people may easily suggest numberless impediments to the realization of such a mighty scheme as this, amongst which, the difficulty of uniting all the various nations through whose territories this stupendous highway will run, in the common co-operation indispensable to its construction and maintenance, is not the least. But neither this difficulty, nor the physical obstructions, which, in some portions of the line are formidable, need be looked upon as insuperable, after what has been actually done in Europe and America.

Whilst languid objectors may have been enumerating the obstacles to this scheme, another, once deemed even more impracticable, namely, a passage through the isthmus which divides the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, has been actually effected by the Americans, whereby a new route is opened to China, Australia, and India. The physical impediments, pronounced to be irremediable, have proved imaginary; the destructive climate turns out to be “extremely salubrious,” and the barren and desolate country, a lovely one!

The route of the passage is that by Lake Nicaragua,—other routes may possibly hereafter present still greater facilities. A brief narrative of the first transit across the isthmus is given by Mr. Wetton, late deputy consul at San Francisco,—the only British subject of the party,—in a letter published in the Times.—

On the 14th of July we sailed from San Francisco with 400 passengers, in the steamer Pacific, a fast and beautiful boat, nearly, if not quite, equal in most respects to her namesake on the Atlantic waters. Coaling at Acapulco on the 23rd, we reached San Juan del Sud on the 29th; on the 30th about 180 of the passengers landed, the remainder proceeding on to Panama. We made the overland journey on mules, 22 miles to Ruivoes, a large and thickly-populated Indian city, about two miles from Lake Nicaragua. Here we had to wait for the baggage-mules and treasure, and could not start until the evening of the 1st August, when we got under weigh in a small steamer, the Director, crossed Lake Nicaragua, distance about 80 miles, reaching the entrance to the San Juan river on the morning of the 2nd, which we steamed down for about 20 miles, fetching up at the Tauros rapids. Thence we were conveyed in "bungoes" (canoes) 13 miles, to the Castillo falls, where a small steamer, the Sir Henry L. Bulwer, was waiting for us. On the following morning, the 3rd, we started, and, after grounding three times during the passage (170 miles from the Castillo falls to the sea), reached San Juan del Nicaragua about nightfall of the same day. Here we met the splendid ocean steamer Prometheus, and after a most agreeable and rapid passage reached New York at 8 A.M. on 13th inst. At noon the same day, I sailed for England in the British and North American Royal Mail Steam-packet Niagara, landing at Liverpool on the 24th, having made the voyage from California to England in the unprecedented time of 40 days. But, short as this is, it will soon be much shorter, thus:—

Present Time.	Future Time, with improved arrangements.
From San Francisco to San Juan del Sud, 15 days.	Deduct 2½ days for going into Acapulco and bad coal—12½ days.
Crossing the Isthmus through Nicaragua, 5 days.	Deduct, on account of delays from want of sufficient mules, 3½ days—14 days.
To New York from San Juan del Nicaragua, 9 days.	Deduct going out of our route to make Havannah, 2 days—7 days.
New York to Liverpool, 11 days.	Deduct 1 day on account of slow boat—10 days.
Present time 40 days.
Deduct for imperfect arrangements .. 9 "
Future time, with perfected arrangements 31 days.

Mr. Wetton adds: "I have to bear my willing testimony to the extreme salubrity of this route, for during the whole of the passage, notwithstanding great and unnecessary exposure to the weather, and this during the rainy season, there did not occur one case of disease of a climateric or malarious character."

The success which has rewarded the energy and promptitude of the undertakers of this important work should make us slow in rejecting such schemes on the ground of impracticability. It appears that, although, two or three years ago, facilities for effecting this route were at the command of this country, through its control over the Mosquito territory, which commanded the entrance to the passage, and although "the privileges necessary for the construction of the route in which Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and the Mosquito territory were interested, were obtainable on moderate terms, consequent on the absence of competition," the Americans were quietly allowed to possess themselves of the means of monopolizing it. Nay, when the American Canal Company offered to English capitalists, upon little more than nominal terms, a clear half of all the privileges they had acquired, and which were held under a joint guarantee of protection from the Governments of the United States and Great Britain, the offer was virtually declined. "The lesson," the Times observes, "which these things furnish to our capitalists, is rendered, too, more striking by the fact, that they have been achieved by a small body of business men, without, we believe, the issue of a single prospectus, or raising a dollar in the share-market."

Arrangements, we are informed, are making at New York to establish a line of steam-communication from San Francisco, by the way of Nicaragua, with Liverpool.

The obvious advantages of the acceleration of intercourse betwixt England and India, in its political and commercial aspects, are of vast importance; but it is impossible to foresee all the benefits that will arise from such a practical approximation of the seat of the imperial government to the largest of its dependencies. If, in conjunction with other improvements, an electric communication can be established between London and the Presidencies of India, the risks to which our eastern empire is now exposed will be diminished in an almost incalculable degree.

THE affairs of the Nizam have attracted an attention at home which is seldom bestowed upon Indian topics. The arrival of a crisis long foreseen, and sometimes accused as tardy, has created almost as much interest as if the event had come upon us unawares. The truth is, that measures of policy wear a very different aspect when in process of adoption from that in which they are regarded from a distance. Now that the Indian Government has apparently made up its mind no longer to tolerate the procrastination by which its demands have been hitherto baffled, but sternly to exact payment of the debt due from his Highness, or the cession of equivalent territory, public writers in India and at home begin to question both the policy and the justice of the terms forced upon the Nizam, as it were, at the point of the bayonet.

In a former article,* we set forth briefly the relations of this prince with the Government of British India, the political condition of his state, the obligations he had contracted towards the Company, and his means of discharging them; and we considered, at the same time, the equity and expediency of applying to the Nizam that sovereign remedy which Indian journalists habitually prescribe when any political difficulty occurs with native states, namely, annexation. Without retracing the same ground, we shall shortly examine the case with reference to the particular issue to which it has been brought.

There is no dispute as to the fact, that the Nizam has incurred a pecuniary debt to the Indian Government of about 850,000*l.*, which, after repeated demands for payment, and reiterated promises to pay, remains unpaid. If the prince is unable, as alleged, to discharge this obligation in money, he is still able to extinguish it in another form; and the question is, whether, in such a case, it is just and prudent to insist upon an equivalent for the debt actually due, and a security against future arrears, in the shape of an alienation or hypothecation of certain districts, the possession of which would, perhaps, be more convenient to us than the money itself.

It appears that a letter from the Governor-General of India was delivered to the Nizam by the British Resident on the 21st June; that, in this important missive, the Marquess of Dalhousie expostulated with his Highness in very plain and severe terms upon the violation of the subsidiary treaty and of his solemn pledges; upon his extravagant expenditure, in the maintenance of an unnecessary body of turbulent troops, and upon the insults which British subjects had suffered from these mercenaries; that he urged upon the prince the necessity of disbanding this useless and dangerous force, and the appointment of an able and honest minister, fixing the 15th July for the discharge of the debt, or the occupation of certain specified districts, with a significant intimation that the existence of his Highness as an independent sovereign depended upon the will and pleasure of the Supreme Government of India.

This unmistakeable communication, we are informed, produced a great sensation at Hyderabad, and the consternation of the prince is represented to have been extreme. He forthwith sent for his discarded prime minister, Suraj-ool-Moolk, whose advice, in the first instance, seems to have rather exasperated than mollified the Nizam; his loud and indignant tones were heard in the ante-chamber of the hall of audience, and Suraj-ool-Moolk, upon his return to his own apartments, manifested his chagrin by "casting his turban with violence upon a couch." The explosion of royal passion seems, however, to have been transient; the minister was recalled, and being reinstated in his post of dewan, applied himself to meet this terrible crisis in his master's affairs, which he had long anticipated, and had endeavoured vainly to prevent.

His first step was to collect immediate funds to satisfy the demands of the British Resident. By means of contributions from the Nizam's wealthy ameens and subjects, by loans from bankers and other moneyed classes, and lastly from the Nizam's private hoards, it is understood that half the amount, namely, forty lakhs, had been raised, and actually paid, and that the other moiety was to be forthcoming on or before the 15th November, for which security was to be given, and the regular payment of the contingent force was to be provided for, not by the actual cession, but by the appropriation of the revenues, of certain districts. This arrangement, however, was dependent upon the sanction of the Governor-General, who had empowered and required the Resident, in the event of the whole debt not being discharged on the 15th July (and it was unsatisfied on the 19th), to occupy the districts.

This strong measure,—the only one, short of absolutely de-throning the prince, to which the Indian Government could resort after the subterfuges and evasions of the Nizam,—is now alleged to be open to serious objections. The entire net revenue of the state is said not to exceed a million sterling, which is short of the expenditure some thirty lakhs. The alienation of a revenue amounting to about 360,000*l.* would incapacitate the Nizam from meeting the ordinary demands of the Government, to say nothing of liabilities contracted by his Highness with British subjects, the pay of the regular army and contingent force, upon which the safety of the state depends, the wages of his military and civil retainers, and the variety of irregular and extraordinary claims which we referred to in our former article. To assume the usufruct of a portion of his territory, therefore, it is said, would insure his ruin; whereas, to take the entire control of his state in trust, securing to the prince an ample stipend, would enable the British Government to extract a much larger amount of revenue by means of improved management, whereby not merely the Indian Government and the other creditors would be benefited, but the Nizam himself, and above all, the inhabitants of the country, would reap a solid and permanent advantage.

There is, indeed, a third course, which some of the Indian journalists recommend, that of considering the treaties between the Hyderabad government and the Company as annulled. "The dissolution of the Nizam's existing engagements," observes one of these writers, "might, if turned to good and legitimate account, prove the political salvation of the Deccan, as his Highness could then at once shake off that intolerable incubus on the resources of the country, saddled upon it by the present treaties, namely, the Contingent." There are obvious objections to this policy, which, so far from saving the Nizam, would seal his destruction.

The alternative is, therefore, between occupying a part of the territory, sufficient to secure the debt, or assuming the management,—which means military occupation,—of the whole. The former seems the wisest course, since it is at once the most equitable and the least hazardous. Upon what plea, indeed, we could adopt the latter, except the spontaneous request of the Nizam himself, which cannot be expected, is not apparent. If our management of the revenues is likely to be so productive, its success in the ceded districts would realize a surplus beyond our claims, applicable to the purposes of the state, whilst it would furnish an instructive lesson to an able financier like Suraj-ool-Moolk, who is represented, in one of the communications from Hyderabad, as earnest in his desire to introduce the British system of collecting the revenue into the Nizam's dominions.

It is argued that a partial occupation would lead to popular discontent, to a disorganization of the prince's government,—in short, to a revolution. But whose fault would that be? If the Nizam and his advisers desire to ameliorate the condition of the people, at the same time multiplying the resources of the state, the measure in question, though it may stimulate, would not impede, but rather promote, so desirable an object. If this insensate prince continues deaf to all good advice and blind to his own approaching ruin, we see no reason why he should be prevented from rushing upon his fate. The dangerous doctrine, that nations should be assisted in their efforts to shake off the authority of tyrannous rulers, finds advocates, and plausible arguments, in Europe; but surely it is pushing the principle of legitimacy to a preposterous length to commit an act of usurpation,—depose a sovereign, and seize his territory,—in order to save the country from, perhaps, a wholesome revolution.

WE have devoted a considerable space in our present issue to the insertion of a very able vindication of the late Sir W. Macnaghten, copied from the Friend of India. The article, which is derived avowedly from information supplied by Colonel John Lawrence, secretary to the Envoy, and other official persons, completely exonerates Sir William from the foul charge of suborning assassination, made against him in the Calcutta Review. The refutation of such a charge is not merely a tribute due to the deceased,—who, whatever may have been the errors of his policy, was incapable of an act so base;—but it purifies the sources of history, and redeems the character of the country from an unworthy stain.

SHELLS FIRED WITHOUT MORTARS.—"I remember hearing some years ago in India," observes Lieut. Yule, "that Lena Singh, Majeetia, a Sikh chief well known for his attachment to the curiosities of European science, had exhibited to some officers at Umballa an art which he professed to have, of firing shells without ordnance of any kind. The sirdar, with one native assistant, concealed himself within a canvass screen, having no apparatus but a shell, a tent-peg, and an ordinary digging tool, and in due time the shell was discharged, ranging to a considerable distance."

THE LATE SIR WM. MACNAGHTEN.

The following is a very copious abstract of the able article in the Friend of India, to which we referred in our last issue (p. 511), vindicating the late Sir W. Macnaghten from the charges brought against him in the January number of the Calcutta Review:—

Of all the calumnies with which the article is crowded, by far the most damaging to the character of the deceased Envoy is the charge of having employed all the means in his power to procure the secret assassination of the chiefs. The writer was fully aware that no charge more odious, and more certain to deprive him of all public sympathy, could be brought forward than this, and he has taken extraordinary pains to give it the appearance of truthfulness and consistency. In this labour of love he has been diligently assisted by one, a well-educated native, who has not scrupled to avow his having procured the assassination of two chiefs, and who claimed the price of their blood from the Court of Directors, and who had therefore the strongest personal and pecuniary interest in showing that he acted under the direct and specific orders of Sir W. Macnaghten.

The assertions which are advanced regarding these schemes of assassination can, of course, have been given only on the authority of Mohun Lall, inasmuch as he, and he alone, was the agent in these alleged transactions. Although the reviewer has endeavoured to create the impression that Sir W. Macnaghten was "secretly" employed throughout the insurrection in attempts to take off the insurgent chiefs by assassination, the reader must bear in mind that there is only one single overt act brought forward to support this charge. This is the alleged assassination of Meer Musjedee and Abdoolla Khan, which is said to have been planned and paid for on the 12th November. Mohun Lall, it is true, made a proposal to the Envoy to assassinate Ameenoola on the 1st December, but it is acknowledged to have been indignantly scouted by him. The object of the reviewer is to destroy the effect of this repudiation, by implicating Sir W. Macnaghten in the reputed assassination of Meer Musjedee and Abdoolla. And it is our object to demonstrate that, if they were put to death through Mohun Lall, Sir W. Macnaghten knew nothing whatever about it.

The reviewer informs us that "Macnaghten, while calling upon the military authorities to quell the revolt, secretly adopted measures of a much more doubtful character, which, failing of issue, subsequently exercised a most unfortunate influence, not only upon his own individual fate, but upon that of the whole force of Cabul." Mohun Lall, we are told, was, shortly after the first burst of the rebellion, "in daily communication with both Macnaghten and Capt. J. B. Conolly, who, as political assistant, and in the confidence of the Envoy, thus opened the correspondence with him on the 5th November: "Tell the Kussil-bash chiefs, in fact, all the chiefs of Shah persuasion, to join against the rebels. You can promise Khan Sherin one lakh of rupees, on the condition of his killing and seizing the rebels, and arming all the Shahs, and immediately attacking all rebels." As a postscript, followed, says the Review, the important addition: "I promise Rs. 10,000 for the head of each of the rebel chiefs." Here it is most important to remark that, if such a letter ever was sent, it was written by Capt. Conolly under the direction of the king, and not as political assistant, and in the confidence of the Envoy. While Sir W. Macnaghten was besieged in the cantonments, Capt. Conolly was with the king in the Balla Hissar, and was the channel of communication between Shah Soojah, and his loyal subjects, and Mohun Lall. One of the officers then in the cantonments, who survived the catastrophe, thus writes at the present time to explain this circumstance: "I have no doubt that the late Shah Soojah, who was an Eastern despot, exercised his acknowledged right as such, and did, through John Conolly, authorize Mohun Lall to procure the death of certain traitors, for certain sums of money. John Conolly, as the appointed channel of communication between the Shah and his allies and his subjects, was called upon to convey this message."

But it must not be forgotten that there were two simultaneous, yet separate and independent, lines of correspondence carried on at this time: one between Conolly, in the Balla Hissar, as the king's representative, and Mohun Lall; the other between the latter and Sir W. Macnaghten in the cantonment; and it is only by artfully mingling the two, and representing Conolly and Sir William as acting in concert in these schemes of assassination,—of which there is not the smallest shadow of evidence,—that the reviewer is enabled to implicate the Envoy in the charge brought against him. We are next told that Mohun Lall was unable for six days to act upon the authority thus given him on the 5th November. "He was forced to wait a more favourable time, and to watch for such opportunity as the course of events, or the fickle humour of the chiefs into whose hands fate had thrown him, might offer." It is also stated that, the envoy becoming impatient of the state of uncertainty in which the wary silence of the timid Mohun Lall had left him, Conolly, on the 11th November, wrote to Mohun Lall: "Why do you not write? What has become of Mir Hyder? Is he doing anything with Khan Sherin? You never told me that you had written to Naib Humza. Exert yourself; write to me often, for the news of the Kossids is not to be depended on. There is a man called Haji Ali, who might be induced by a bribe to bring in the heads of one or two of the rebels; endeavour to let him know that Rs. 10,000 will be given for each head, or even Rs. 15,000." The reader will bear in mind that this letter was written by Conolly on the 11th November. The reviewer then proceeds to say that Mohun Lall, feeling more secure as to his own personal safety,—that is, after the receipt of this letter,—now reported to the Envoy the receipt of these instructions, viz. to offer Rs. 10,000, or even Rs. 15,000, for the assassination of each of the rebel chiefs. He then explained the offer of Conolly to Aga Mahomed Soudah and Haji Ali, who entertained his overtures; but these men, fearing themselves to undertake the deed, suborned two others, Abdool Aziz and Mahomed Ollah. The reviewer proceeds to say, that, besides these instructions from Conolly of the 11th, Mohun Lall had also been empowered by the Envoy to promise to the extent of five lakhs of rupees in aid of the Shah's cause. He therefore did not hesitate to advance to Abdool Aziz Rs. 9,000, and to promise that a balance of Rs. 12,000 should be paid as soon as the heads of Meer Musjedee and Abdoolla Khan were brought in. The Envoy's letter about the five lakhs for buying off the chiefs, which had no connection with Conolly's instructions, had been at that time four days in Mohun Lall's hands; but the reviewer keeps this out of sight, that he may identify Sir William with this assassination scheme, and represent the offer to the assassins as the result of a communication both from Conolly and the Envoy. "Having thus set on foot this affair, Mohun Lall reported his proceedings to the Envoy, adding, with naive simplicity, that 'he could not find out by Lieut. Conolly's notes how the rebels were to be assassinated; but the men now employed promise to go into their houses and cut off their heads, when they may be without attendants.'" "Macnaghten," says the reviewer, "nothing startled by the plain term applied to the transactions by his subordinate agent, replied, on the 13th November, 'I have received your letter of this morning's date, and highly approve of all you have done.'" The dates here are all important. Mohun Lall received a letter on the 11th from Conolly, requesting him to inform Haji Ali that there was a reward of Rs. 10,000 or Rs. 15,000 for the head of each rebel. On the 12th, he says that he reported the receipt of these instructions to the Envoy; that he then explained Conolly's offer to a friend of Haji Ali, and the two friends accepted the overture; that they then shrunk back from the task, and finally suborned two others; that these two men then went to Mohun Lall, and he at once advanced them Rs. 9,000, and promised them Rs. 12,000 more for the heads of two rebels. Now, it appears strange that Mohun Lall, who, after the receipt of the first orders to assassinate on the 5th November, had been obliged, as the reviewer says, to "await for six days a more favourable time, and to watch for such an opportunity as the course of events might offer," should, on the receipt of the second order on the 11th, find this opportunity at once present itself, and should be enabled to carry on all these negotiations, and to complete what the reviewer calls "a very delicate and a very hazardous operation," and pay down the money, and write two letters to the Envoy, in the brief space of twenty-four hours. But we venture at once to affirm, without the fear of contradiction, that Mohun Lall did not write to the Envoy to say that Conolly had urged him to hasten the assassinations, and that he did not write to him to ask how the rebels were to be assassinated. We have already stated that, while Conolly was thus writing to Mohun Lall from the Balla Hissar, Sir William was corresponding with him from the cantonment, and that this double correspondence does not appear to have had any reference to the same subjects. Fortunately for the cause of truth and the vindication of innocence, we have two letters of the Envoy to Mohun Lall, of the 11th and 13th November. This is his letter of the 11th:—

"To Moonshee Mohun Lall.

"November 11, 1841.

"My dear Sir,—You will observe from the inclosed letters that I have confirmed the promises made by you to the Ghilzie rebels; though, had you known of our successes yesterday, the terms might have been more favourable for us. Humze Khan should come to me as soon as possible, and I will then talk to him about the case of Gool Mahomed. The money could not be paid until the conditions of the agreement are fulfilled, and we are perfectly certain of the fidelity of Humze and the chiefs. The chiefs should go at once and pay their respects to his Majesty. You should encourage the rival of Ameenoola Khan by all possible means. That scoundrel, and Abdoosalam Khan, should be executed, if we can catch them.

"Yours, &c.,
"W. H. M."

The reviewer says that Conolly's letter of the 11th, requesting the assassinations to be expedited, was written because the Envoy had become impatient of the state of uncertainty into which the wary silence of Mohun Lall had thrown him. But the whole of this statement is disproved by the Envoy's own letter of the same date, from which it appears that there was no silence on the part of Mohun Lall, and no impatience on that of the Envoy. Mohun Lall was engaged in negotiating with the Ghilzie chiefs, and regularly reported progress to Sir William. Is it credible that, if the Envoy had been urging the assassination of the chiefs on Mohun Lall, or had even been cognizant of such a scheme, he would have made no allusion to it in this letter?

Mohun Lall is said by the reviewer to have written on the morning of the 13th to Sir William, to tell him that he had advanced Rs. 9,000, and engaged Rs. 12,000 more to the assassins, who had promised to go into the houses of Meer Musjedee and Abdoolla Khan, and cut off their heads, and that Sir William wrote in reply to this letter, "I highly approve of all you have done." This is the turning point of the whole transaction, and the entire question of Sir William's complicity in this scheme of assassination turns upon the veracity of the reviewer, when he affirms that the letter, in which this sentence occurs, was written in reply to Mohun Lall's letter, describing the mode in which the two chiefs were to be taken off. We therefore subjoin the whole letter, of which the reviewer has given us only a garbled extract:—

"Cabul, November 13, 1841, 9 A.M.

"My dear Sir,—I have received your letter of this morning's date, and highly approve of all you have done. Let Golam Hussain of Sbar, and Abdoolruheem Khan, undertake to come to Jool-fekar Fort this morning, and Capt. Trevor will be ready there to receive them. Capt. Trevor will be in that fort night and day for some time, to receive overtures from any person, and parties coming in should send a single messenger before them. Khan Shereen Khan is quite right not to leave the Chundamull for a day or two. Tell Naib Shureef he may safely go as security to the Ghilzies for the payment of the money. When I see Humze Khan, I will talk to him about the best plan for the Ghilzie chiefs to wait upon his Majesty.

"Yours, &c.,
(Signed) "W. H. MACNAGHTEN."

"P.S.—You are aware that I would give a reward of Rs. 10,000 for the apprehension of Ameenoola Khan, and each of the Dooranee rebel chiefs. If you could see some of the officers of the Hazurbash corps, that is just come in with Mahomud Ajeem Khan, and give them encouragement, it would be very desirable. If you could send Mirza Kallul Ali or Mirza Nuzuf Ali out with Gholam Hussain and Abdoolruheem, it would be well."

We think that every impartial reader will concur with us in concluding, from the tenor and subject of this letter, that it could not have been written, and was not written, in reply to one in which Mohun Lall had explained how the men's heads were to be cut off, and what was to be paid when they were brought in and delivered. The words, "I approve of all you have done," unquestionably refers to the negotiations with the Ghilzies, which Mohun Lall was carrying on under the direction of the Envoy. It is absolutely incredible that Sir William should have merely stated that he would give a reward of Rs. 10,000 for the apprehension of Ameenoola Khan and others, in reply to a letter of Mohun Lall, which informed him that a larger sum had been offered for the assassination of the chiefs. It is impossible to read the two letters of the Envoy we have quoted, without feeling a conviction that they were written in total ignorance of any of the rewards which are said to have been offered for the murder of the rebel chiefs, although the reviewer has endeavoured, by the most disingenuous art, to make them support this calumny.

The reviewer proceeds to state that, in consequence of these efforts of Mohun Lall, "Meer Musjedee and Abdoolla Khan were soon numbered among the dead. The former died very suddenly; how, Mohun Lall could not with certainty learn; but Mahomed Ollah,"—one of the assassins whom Mohun Lall professes to have employed,—"assured him that, in fulfilment of the engagement, the wretched man had been suffocated when asleep by the hands of Mahomed Ollah himself. Abdoolla Khan fell severely wounded by a shot while standing among his countrymen engaged in fight with the British troops; but whether struck down by a ball from the piece of Abdool Aziz, who claimed the merit of having shot his victim from behind a wall, or by the fire of the troops, Mohun Lall was not confident. Abdool Aziz, however, assured him that Abdoolla Khan would soon die, as poison would complete what the shot had not done. He lingered for a week, and then fulfilled Abdool Aziz's prediction."

Those who are interested in the honour of their country will be happy to learn that the whole of this statement is fabulous; that neither of these men died the victim of British perfidy, and that Mohun Lall had no share in their death. They were reported to have been despatched by the assassins employed by this pure and exemplary character only when he wanted to obtain from the Government head-money for assassinating them. After they were dead and gone, Mohun Lall determined to make the most of the circumstance, and claimed the merit of having been instrumental in despatching them. The reviewer, at the time of affixing his own responsibility to this statement, had before him Capt. Eyre's Journal of an Afghan Prisoner, in which he must have read the following sentence: "A large party of the enemy's cavalry threatened our right flank. This demonstration, however, was repulsed by a well-directed discharge of shrapnell from a H.A. gun, by one of which a chief of consequence, supposed to be Abdoolla Khan, Achukzye, was mortally wounded;" and, in a subsequent page, that "the news of Abdoolla Khan's wound had spread great confusion among the enemy." Lieut. col. (then Capt.) Lawrence saw the ball which struck him to the ground. Mohun Lall took advantage of Abdoolla's lingering for some days to claim the credit of having had him despatched by poison. "Meer Musjedee died very suddenly; how, Mohun Lall could not with certainty learn." But he did not die suddenly. He came to Cabul very ill from the Kohistan,—we write on the authority of Col. Lawrence,—and he returned thither and died. But what throws irretrievable discredit over the whole of this narrative is, that the two men who are said to have fallen victims to Mohun Lall's plots, in consequence of the instigation of Sir W. Macnaghten and Capt. Conolly, were not the men whom the Envoy considered the most formidable of the rebels, who, in his estimation, were Ameenoola Khan and Abdoosalam Khan, and it was for their apprehension that Sir William was ready to offer a reward of Rs. 10,000. The reviewer says that Meer Musjedee and Abdoolla Khan were selected as the first victims, because they had been actively engaged in the insurrection of the 2nd November, and because they were known to be the boldest and most influential leaders of the insurgents. But the fact is, that they were selected simply because they happened very opportunely to die, and thus to afford Mohun Lall an occasion for claiming the merit of their assassination, and the money which he pretended to have paid for it.

Mohun Lall states, in the pages of the reviewer, that he advanced Rs. 9,000, and promised a balance of Rs. 12,000 as soon as the heads of the two victims were brought in. But the reviewer tells us that Mohun Lall, with a Shylock nicety, refused to pay the balance, alleging that the heads had not, according to agreement, been brought in, and that he sent the suborner's (or assassin's) notes, making the demand, and his own reply in refusal, to Sir William, who despatched a confidential messenger in his employ with a message, attested by a reference to a past event known only to the Envoy and Mohun Lall. This verbal message was to the effect that, "if the two assassins had sent the heads to the Envoy, Mohun Lall would have been ordered to pay the balance; but, as they had failed in so doing, they must rest content with the advance they have received for their doubtful services." We may remark, by the way, that while Mohun Lall, as he says, informed the Envoy that he had advanced Rs. 9,000, he informed the Court of Directors that he had paid only Rs. 4,000 in advance. The Envoy, we are told, was forced to deliver this reply by a confidential messenger, because some native writers of English had gone over to the enemy, and made them acquainted with the contents of several of his intercepted letters. But how does it happen that Mohun Lall was not equally afraid to send this information by letter? His letter might have been intercepted, and the native writers of English might have made the chiefs acquainted with its contents, and they would certainly have made his head pay the forfeit of the murders. There is but one explanation of this anomaly. The whole narrative, from beginning to end, is a fiction. Mohun Lall being unable to produce even a garbled extract from Sir William's correspondence to connect him with the consummation of the assassination plot, Sir William is represented as having sent him a verbal message, to say that he would have cheerfully paid for the heads if they had been sent to him. Now let us look at the dates. Abdoolla was wounded at Beymaroo on the 23rd. The reviewer says he "lingered for a week," that is, he died on the 29th November. We may suppose, therefore, that the two assassins came the next day, the 30th, and demanded the balance of the reward due to them, and that Mohun Lall must have sent his letter on that day to Sir William, to ask whether the head-money should be paid, when Sir William replied that it should not, because the heads had not been sent to him. The letters sent to the Envoy by Mohun Lall are nearly all extant; and, among the rest, is this letter of the 30th Nov-venner; but it contains no allusion whatever to the heads of the two chiefs; it does not mention their names, nor allude to the transaction; but it does propose to Sir W. Macnaghten the assassination of Ameenoola. And on that same day, in which Mohun Lall says the Envoy sent him a verbal message to say that he would cheerfully have paid the assassins if he had seen the heads, Sir William wrote to Mohun Lall, "I am sorry to find, from your letter of last night, that you should have supposed it was ever my object to encourage assassination,"—alluding to the proposal for assassinating Ameenoola. "The rebels are very wicked men, but we must not take unlawful means to destroy them." But, still more, on the day in which Mohun Lall says that the Envoy sent him this verbal message about the assassination, which had been completed, lest his letter should be intercepted and read by the English writers who had deserted him, the Envoy was not afraid to commit to paper, and send to him, by the usual messenger, the important fact, that he had that morning had another overture from Zeman Khan's party, offering a safe retreat to Peshawur, and in that letter he gave the names of seven chiefs who had thus made overtures to him.

To crown the evidence of Sir W. Macnaghten's never having been implicated in this alleged assassination of the two chiefs, we have an acknowledgment under Mohun Lall's own signature. When he was claiming remuneration for his services of the Court of Directors, he delivered in the following document, which has been copied for us from a paper in his own handwriting:—

"Advanced to Abdool Aziz, who offered to kill Abdoolla Khan by such means which the Envoy did not approve, therefore the balance, Rs. 11,000, was not paid Rs. 4,000." Thus it appears that, while Mohun Lall told the reviewer that Sir William objected to pay the balance because he had not seen the heads, he told the Court of Directors that the balance was not paid because the Envoy did not approve of the means that had been used!

We have stated that Mohun Lall proposed to the Envoy, on the 30th November, to procure the assassination of Ameenoola. This was the first time in the course of their correspondence in which the moonshee had ventured to hint at assassination. Lieut. col. Lawrence was present when that letter was received, and he saw the reply written, and he bears ample testimony to the indignation which the Envoy felt when so disgraceful a proceeding was thus proposed to him. The Envoy immediately wrote to say, as we have stated above, that he was sorry to find from Mohun Lall's letter of last night that he should have supposed it was ever his object to encourage assassination; and that, though the rebels were very wicked men, we must not take unlawful means to destroy them. This is the only letter from Sir William in which the subject of assassination is alluded to, and in it he most distinctly repudiates the practice. The disingenuous mode in which the reviewer endeavours to evade the force of this declaration of Sir William, is worthy of particular attention, as it serves more particularly to prove that his object is not the discovery of the truth, but the ruin of the character of the unfortunate Envoy. "At a later period (December 1st), Sir W. Macnaghten, awakening to the impolicy, if not the immorality, of such treacherous practices, wrote to Mohun Lall, in reference to a similar proposal to take off Ameenoola, 'I am sorry to find, &c.'" But this, the most important of all the documents which refer to the subject, is given only in a note, while Mohun Lall's fictions are paraded through the text!

In addition to the direct evidence of Sir W. Macnaghten's own letter, we have abundant collateral proof of the feeling of abhorrence with which he regarded every idea of assassination. The following quotations are made from the communications of those who were involved in the Cabul calamities, which have been placed at our disposal, and are entitled to the highest confidence. Lieut. col. Lawrence writes thus: "I was military secretary to the Envoy and Minister at Cabul. During the Cabul insurrection, I lived in the same house with him, and was seldom for any length of time during the day out of his sight. I have often heard him scornfully repudiate the idea of offering money for the heads of the rebel chiefs, or to procure their assassination; to the best of my knowledge and belief, I saw all the notes and letters which Sir William wrote during the insurrection, and I affirm that he never wrote to offer money for the destruction of the chiefs, though he did to spread nifak (disunion) among them. To have done so, would have been entirely foreign to his nature and opposed to his principles, which were those of an honourable, chivalrous, and high-minded gentleman. In the year 1839-40, an Afghan asked for an audience of the Envoy, and offered to bring him the head of the Ameer Dost Mahomed for a lakh of rupees. Sir William had him indignantly turned out of the house." Lady Sale writes: "With regard to the setting a price on the heads of the chiefs, or, in other words, offering money for their assassination, I knew as well as any one could do at the time that Sir William never did so. He himself told me that he had been counselled to do so; he even told me the name of the individual who had insinuated that persons were to be found who, for a consideration, would put Akbar Khan and others out of the way. But he invariably scouted the idea, and took pains to impress on the minds of the Affghans that it was repugnant to the honest, moral, and chivalric feelings of the British nation, to incite any one to murder even an enemy. I have no affection for the Affghans, but I scorn to slander any one, and will not, therefore, mention the chief who, Sir William told me, was ready to lend himself to the assassination of his friends." The Hon. Mr. Erskine, now at Katmandoo, read over all the papers on this subject, and asserts that "most assuredly there was not a particle of evidence to sustain the charge brought against the Envoy. Among all his papers, there was no letter of Mohun Lall's, either proposing assassination, or insinuating such a measure, except the one in reply to which Sir William, on the 1st December, reprehended the proposal."

Now, as the whole story of the assassination of Meer Musjedee and Abdoolla Khan is a pure fiction, the whole of the superstructure which the reviewer has built on it falls at once to the ground. Neither Sir William nor the confederate chiefs knew anything whatever of the matter, and consequently the latter were not in the slightest degree influenced, as the reviewer represents, by Sir William's treachery. Equally fabulous is the remark that the deliberate faithlessness of the Envoy led to his doom; the whole of this representation has no more truth in it than the Arabian Nights' Entertainment. Not one of the chiefs, except Akbar Khan, had any hand whatever in Sir William's assassination, and with him it was the impulse of the moment, not an act of deliberation. Akbar Khan had sent his cousin, Mahomed Sudeek, to Sir William, to propose the wild scheme of seizing Ameenoola and the rest of the Khans, with his aid and that of the Eastern Ghilzies, while Akbar Khan was to have in return thirty lakhs of rupees, and the English were to be permitted to remain in the country eight months longer, and Shah Soojah was to continue king, with Akbar Khan as his vizier. To this extraordinary and wild proposal, says Capt. Mackenzie (Eyre, p. 163), Sir William gave ear with an eagerness which nothing can account for but the supposition, confirmed by many other circumstances, that his strong mind had been harassed till it had, in some degree, lost its equipoise. The reviewer has the temerity to affirm that the chiefs were resolved to ensnare Macnaghten in the net he was spreading for another, and to take vengeance on him, &c. The reviewer perfectly knew that Macnaghten was spreading no net for anybody; that it was Akbar Khan who spread the net in which the unfortunate Envoy was entangled and slain. It was he who made these proposals, simply in the hope that they might induce Sir William to leave the cantonment and meet him at the conference, where he intended to seize him. Major Colin Troup writes thus in a letter now before us:—

"Akbar Khan never would allow Macnaghten's name to be mentioned before him but in terms of the greatest respect, and has in private, both to poor Pottinger and myself, over and over again regretted the deed, and stated that it never was premeditated; so far the contrary, that, having been accused by Ameenoola's party of being friendly to, and intriguing with, the English, to disarm suspicion, he, in open durbar, volunteered, if he was allowed time, to bring Macnaghten a prisoner into Ameenoola's house within eight days. This being agreed to, it was then that he planned the treacherous conference with Sir William; but finding, after some delay, that he was not likely to accomplish his object, and fearing to meet his party if he failed in his boasted adventure, and hearing a cry that our troops were marching out of the cantonments to where he and Sir William were sitting, he, in a moment of desperation, out with his pistol and shot Sir William; but he always loudly declared that, on the morning of the conference, when he came out to meet Sir William, he never for one moment contemplated doing him any harm whatever."

We have only one farther remark to offer in this vindication of Sir W. Macnaghten's character. The reviewer has stated that the British character, for integrity and good faith, stood high enough to command some respect for the representative of the Anglo-Indian Government, however shaken by what was known of Mohun Lall's proceedings, acting with the cognizance of Conolly and Macnaghten; but the deliberate faithlessness which led the Envoy to accept Mahomed Akbar's proposal, sealed his doom. Lieut. col. Lawrence states: "During our lengthened imprisonment, I unhesitatingly affirm that not one of the prisoners ever heard Mahomed Akbar, or any of the chiefs, accuse Sir William of bribing men to assassinate them; and it is not likely they would have been silent if they had so heavy a charge to bring forward. On the contrary, I, as well as others, have heard both Mahomed Akbar Khan and other chiefs express deep regret at the Envoy's untimely death, and much admiration of his character. Ameenoola Khan, when I was his prisoner, told me that Sir W. Macnaghten had offered a lakh of rupees for his head. Prisoner though I was, I denounced it in open durbar as an infamous lie, and never heard any more about it." Brigadier Colin Mackenzie writes: "If Sir William had ever instructed Mohun Lall, or any other person, to employ assassins for the removal of our treacherous and inveterate enemies, it would have been well known to the Affghans themselves, and they would not have failed to urge so plausible a ground of complaint against us while we were captives in their hands, which they never did, although they constantly reproached us with every act of supposed injustice on the part of Government, and with the private vices and improprieties of individuals." Capt. W. Anderson, another of the prisoners, writes: "I never heard any Affghan accuse Sir W. Macnaghten of any acts for which any friend of his, or any Englishman, need feel ashamed. On the contrary, I always heard him spoken of with great respect, and frequently with admiration." Capt. Warburton states: "I went into Cabul to the Nawaub's on the 28th (I think) of December, 1841. I remained in his house till we were forced out of it on the 12th of April following. During that time no one was prevented seeing us. Our party consisted of J. Conolly, Airey, Walsh, Webb, Drummond, and myself (besides Houghton and Campbell, who joined us afterwards). We had an opportunity of seeing and conversing with most of the chiefs at Cabul, who remained after Akbar Khan had left. None of these people ever concealed their opinions regarding the acts of our Government or people. Ameenoola Khan, in particular, spoke at times very strongly; but neither from him nor from any other, during the period of my residence, did I ever hear a word regarding the charge now brought forward against Sir William, of having offered money for the assassination of the chiefs. I had sufficient opportunities of hearing something about the matter, if any such offer had been made."

COMMUNICATION BETWEEN LONDON AND CALCUTTA IN SEVEN DAYS.

Such is the announcement which lies now before us. To be sure, the information is termed a prophecy, but, unlike most prophecies, it fixes the exact period of its own fulfilment, and that period is only fourteen years distant. Moreover, the consummation is to be gradual, and every five years will not only contribute its own realized portion of the work, but give a pledge for the completion of the rest. In sober truth, the scheme exhibits not the first visionary ideas of a projector, but the revised designs of an engineer who has been for some time engaged in maturing the means of the undertaking. About two years ago, we surprised our readers with the original prospectus of the "Direct Calais and Mooltan," and some doubts were, perhaps, entertained as to the seriousness of such an extraordinary suggestion. Since that time, however, the scheme has been actually extended in its scope, discussed in its details, approved in much of its purport, and so far advanced, that of the four great divisions of the route, two have been positively decided on, and are in present course of completion.

To form a proper judgment on the character of this enterprise, the reader should open some general map including the continents of Europe and Africa, with so much of Asia as would comprise the mouths of the Ganges, and then follow our remarks, pencil in hand, upon the sheet before him. The ancient route from England to India was round the Cape of Good Hope, — a passage which was performed wholly by sea, and which generally occupied of late years about 100 days. In 1840, the first step of a new system had been taken, by turning the course straight to the East at the Gut of Gibraltar, carrying it along the Mediterranean Sea, across the Isthmus of Suez, down the Red Sea, and so over the Indian Ocean to Bombay, or round Ceylon to Calcutta. Nor was this all, for, by traversing France from Calais to Marseilles, the detour round Cape St. Vincent was altogether escaped, and the route assumed the appearance of a tolerably straight line from Calais to Aden. It will be observed that this gain had been effected partly by the division of the voyage into stages, whereby steam power became available, but more notably, by the substitution of overland cuts for long sea circuits. Thus, the cut from Calais to Marseilles saved the circuit round Spain, and that across Egypt the vast circuit round the Cape. Now, this substitution of land carriage for water carriage is the one simple principle of the scheme before us, and the problem is nothing more than this, — how to eliminate from the route between Marseilles and Calcutta those portions which are still performed by sea, and substitute, instead thereof, some means of transport by land. Curiously enough, this is the exact reversal of that invention which changed the face of history four centuries ago. At that time, the communication with the East was by land, but land journeys were then so painful and adventurous, that the discovery of a sea passage round the Cape at once diverted the course of traffic to a route which it still steadily maintains. At present, by the introduction of railroads, land travel has become to sea voyages what sea voyages were to mediæval caravans, and the consequence is, that Vasco di Gama's invention will be superseded in its turn, and the traffic of the East will once more be conducted through Constantinople, Augsburg, and Cologne.

The sea stages of the present route to India, exclusive of the trip across the Channel, are two; one from Marseilles or Trieste to Alexandria, and the other from Suez to Bombay or Calcutta. These stages constitute by far the longest part of the journey, being 5,075 miles, performed by steamers, from which an average speed of some ten miles an hour is all that can be expected. The longer, again, of these two stages is that from Suez to Hindostan, as it includes a circuit round two sides of the triangular territory of Arabia. The first object, therefore, is to treat the detour by Aden as the detours by Cape St. Vincent and the Cape of Good Hope have been treated already, by carrying the passengers to the mouths of the Orontes instead of the mouths of the Nile, and forwarding them across the Turkish territory to Bussorah, at the head of the Persian Gulf. The railroad required for this purpose would run along the Euphrates Valley, and its length would not exceed 900 miles, — barely two-thirds of the extent just executed in the little commonwealth of Massachusetts, — whereas its completion would reduce the distance from London to Calcutta by more than one-half, — by twenty days, in fact, out of thirty-nine! This project, it is conceived, could be accomplished in five years' time, and the route would then lie through Ostend, Trieste, by the Mediterranean Sea, to the Orontes, thence to Bussorah, and by the Persian Gulf to Bombay, where it would meet the Indian railroads now actually commenced, and by that time completed to Calcutta.

We have thus got rid of the Red Sea circuit, and substituted a land route for 900 miles of the distance. There remain now the straight run from Bussorah to Bombay, and the circuitous reach from Trieste to the Orontes, to be commuted for the facilities of direct railway transit by land. Of these, the latter is the first to be taken in hand, and its difficulties are the less, as a continuous line of railway from Ostend to Orsova, on the frontiers of the Turkish empire, is already decided on. From Orsova to Constantinople is only 315 miles; from Constantinople to Bussorah is about 1,355, of which 900 would be already covered. The distances, in our English eyes, are undoubtedly great, but Americans have accomplished greater feats of railroad mechanism in countries where the natural obstacles were at least equal to those likely to be encountered in Asia Minor. It is suggested that the line should run round the coast of the Asiatic Peninsula, and an estimate is given that this communication between Constantinople and the Orontes, completing that between the same city and Bussorah, might be established by the year 1860. On that assumption, the total mileage of the route would give 4,200 to railways and only 1,600 to steamers, and the journey from London to Calcutta would occupy twelve days.

Here, perhaps, we might pause, for it is no mean exploit to have brought Calcutta as near as New York; and Beloochistan, we must needs think, would be a strange country for even Irish "navigators." The projector, however, is not yet content, and he allows five years more for eliminating the Persian Gulf and continuing the railway from Bussorah by "the coast line of Persia and Beloochistan" to the old capital of the Ameers — Hyderabad on the Indus, whence the several branches of the Indian lines would soon whisk the passenger to Bombay, Lahore, or Calcutta, according to his wants, the latter station being exactly 5,600 miles, or seven days' journey, from the booking-office of the company in Gracechurch-street. This is the scheme. Its accomplishment involves the completion, altogether, of some 5,600 miles of railway; but of these, some 2,600 are actually decided on, and in course of construction already; and, if we look to what has been done elsewhere, we may perhaps think this Anglo-Saxon prophecy by no means so impossible of fulfilment as it seemed at first. — Times.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE ORIENTAL BANK. — A royal charter has been granted to the Oriental Bank, constituting it a bank of issue in Ceylon and China, and empowering it to carry on exchange, deposit, and remittance business anywhere to the east of the Cape of Good Hope. The conditions of the charter require that specie shall always be held equal to one-third of the amount of circulation. Monthly returns are to be published of assets and liabilities, and annual statements are to be rendered to the Government. Provision is likewise made for a yearly audit by independent parties, to be nominated and paid by the shareholders; and power is given to demand a dissolution of the company if, in the opinion of the auditors, a third of the capital should be at any time lost. The liability of the proprietors is to be fixed at twice the amount of their respective subscriptions.

ASIATIC WEAPONS AT THE EXHIBITION.—A discovery has been made by one of the attendants in the India department of the Exhibition, while employed in cleaning some of the Indian weapons, which somewhat terrified the operator. The weapon was a dagger, with gold hilt and handle, and in a richly ornamented case; while pressing on one part of the handle somewhat heavily, he was astonished to see what appeared to be the single blade gradually open out into four double-edged pointed blades, leaving a spear-like weapon in the centre with four sharp edges. This five-bladed weapon, with its twelve sharp edges, is one of the most murderous-looking specimens ever seen. In the collection of this class of weapons are several other instruments of a similarly murderous character, among which is a three-bladed knife, manufactured in the state of Ulwar, the construction of which has sorely puzzled many of the most experienced cutlers. The blades are not arranged in the ordinary manner, but two of them together, with their handles, are concealed in the blade and handle of the outer or larger one. They are all of the finest Damascus steel, with exceedingly keen edges. There is a dagger with two blades, also manufactured at Ulwar, of the same construction, and of beautiful workmanship.—Observer.

STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH AUSTRALIA.—The Lords of the Admiralty have again issued advertisements inviting proposals from parties willing to provide a steam communication with Australia. They now merely propose to receive tenders for a steam communication with Sydney by way of the Cape of Good Hope six times a year, or once every two months.

COLONIAL MAIL STEAMSHIPS.—The anticipations expressed by several witnesses examined before Lord Jocelyn's Committee, last session, as regarded the efficiency of the screw-propeller, and its adoption in ocean steamers, appear to be in course of early realization. We are informed that at this moment in the Clyde alone above 17,000 tons of steam-shipping, both in wood and iron, are under construction, the greater part of which will be fitted with the screw. It is also understood that the building-yards of the Thames are more actively employed than they have been for many years, and the most eminent shipwrights and engineers have orders so numerous that it will require many months before they can be executed. Extensive engagements have, we believe, been entered into by the Peninsular and Oriental, the General Screw, the Pacific, and West-India Mail Steam Companies respectively, for building large steamers of a capacity and power superior to any yet employed; nor should we omit to mention that the South American Steam Navigation Company (whose projection we lately mentioned to run three large iron steamers between Liverpool and Rio and the Plate) are advancing most vigorously under their charter; so that we hope before long the spirit of rivalry excited by American competition will exhibit its beneficial effects in the character of our steam marine.—Liverpool Albion.

CHAPLAINS IN CHINA.—The Morning Chronicle criticises severely an announcement by the British Consul at Shanghai of the appointment by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of the Rev. J. Hobson to be chaplain at that port, to "hold his office at the will of the Secretary of State; and the license of the Bishop of Hong-Kong, or any other bishop, is not necessary to enable him to perform his functions, and will not entitle him to perform those functions, if he should at any time be removed by the Secretary of State." The Chronicle terms this a very gross and monstrous case. "Lord Palmerston had already stretched the State powers as to the Church of England chaplains beyond all religious endurance. The Madeira case was bad enough; yet, strictly speaking, no bishop was actually defied, nor any true episcopal rights denied. But in China the case is widely different. No dispute has occurred; the Foreign Office is not appealed to; no canonical or ecclesiastical difficulty presents itself; the country is a heathen one, and there is no conflict of episcopates in which to invoke the Palmerston hyper-episcopate. Nay, more,—an English bishop is actually on the spot, consecrated and sent out expressly as an overseer of the English communion in the Chinese seas, as well as for missionary purposes. Lord Palmerston does not simply ignore the Bishop of Hong-Kong, for, with a studied insolence, in a gratuitous and uncalled-for tone of insult, he acknowledges the bishop, and pointedly calls attention to him; but says, that prelate can do nothing; that his authority is nothing; that the members of the church are not to regard him; that he has no jurisdiction; that the clergy are not his, but exist solely at the will of the Secretary of State."

AN AMBASSADOR FROM THE COURT OF PERSIA (Skefish Khan) has arrived from Constantinople, being the first accredited minister from that Court that has ever been sent to this country.

MEER SYED MAHOMED HOOSAIN, the late native Peshkar of Huzzore, Tehseel (or collector) of the Jubbulpur and Nerbudda territories, who died at Jubbulpur on the 16th of June last, in the forty-seventh year of his age, was employed by the British Government from 1819 to the day of his death, an uninterrupted period of thirty-two years, in situations of the utmost importance and responsibility, and discharged the arduous duties attached to them with equal credit to himself and satisfaction to his superiors. He was a man of the strictest moral principles and the most incorruptible integrity, and was endowed with talents rarely met with among his countrymen. Meer Syed Mahomed, Tehseeldar of Seehora district of Jubbulpur, an old native officer of acknowledged merit, has been selected to succeed to the vacant collectorship. This appointment has given great satisfaction to the ryots, as well as to the rest of the fellow-countrymen of the Tehseeldar. It is pleasing to observe that the services of so deserving and distinguished an officer are duly appreciated by the Indian authorities.—(From a Correspondent.)

BOOKS.

Fortification, for Officers of the Army and Students of Military History; with Illustrations and Notes. By Lieut. HENRY YULE, Bengal Engineers. Blackwood.

We have seldom met with a scientific work more attractive than this, even to unscientific readers. The purely professional parts are diversified, so to speak, by biographical, historical, and miscellaneous details, selected with much judgment and taste, and indicating no inconsiderable amount of learning and research. Even the "Glossary of Military Terms,"—modern and ancient, Asiatic as well as European, indispensable to readers of military narratives who are not soldiers,—is not merely a collection of dry interpretations, but comprises familiar explanations, interspersed with illustrative passages and references to authorities; whilst the Notes in the Appendix (forming one-third of the book) contain a variety of instructive and entertaining matter. The portraits of the most eminent engineers, in semi-shaded outline, lithographed, have all the delicacy and beauty of etchings on copper.

Mr. Yule justly assumes, in his Preface, that there are other reasons besides the official regulations why a soldier should know something of fortification, though he may never be called upon to line out a field-work or to design a citadel; and, in order to divest the approach to the study of its repulsive features, he avows that his aim in this Essay,—for it professes to be no more,—is to give principles and essential details in a natural and readable order, and freely to use biographical and other illustrative notices, with the view of inspiring the subject with a life-like interest. In this aim, we think, he has succeeded.

After a preliminary chapter, consisting of essential geometrical problems, definitions, &c., he proceeds to the practical parts of the science of fortification, treating in succession of its objects and elementary features, the principles of outline, obstacles, materials, &c., the various forms of field-works, lines, defence of posts, &c.; and then enters upon the subject of permanent fortification, showing wherein it differs from the field forms, and explaining the different systems, ancient and modern; the modes of attacking and defending fortresses, and explaining briefly the character of the changes which have been introduced in works formed since the end of the last European war. These details are copiously illustrated by diagrams and plates.

Not the least recommendation of this Essay to officers in the Indian army will be found in the information which the author's personal experience has enabled him to furnish respecting Eastern fortification, which appears to supply some useful hints even to the practised European engineer,—as in the Sikh intrenchments and the Burmese stockades.

As a specimen of the manner in which Lieut. Yule deals with his illustrative materials, we subjoin his Note upon the early indication of a Bastion Trace:—

"We may conceive a double origin of the trace as probable. The bastion with angular shoulders may have been the natural result of the square tower applied to an angle of the city wall, whilst the bastion with round orillons, in its original ace-of-spades shape, seems an easy deduction from the long-necked roundels of Francesco di Giorgio.

"In looking at the trace of the walls of Mycenæ, the date of which is referred to the dim Pelasgic times, and comparing it with the outline of the Torres Vedras field-fort, surely, without any antiquarian clairvoyance, one may see in the former the indication of bastions and a bastioned front. This may have been a mere accident, arising from the contour of the hill on which the fortress stands. But it is remarkable how the whirligig of change moves, if not in a circle, at least in a spiral, expatiating in a wilder field of science, but still returning opposite the point which it had passed many centuries ago. So we see here the bastions of the sixteenth century anticipated in the rude cyclopean walls of Mycenæ, abandoned for more than 2,200 years; our modern speculators in fortification, Carnot and Ferguson, reverting, in the concentric circles of their ramparts, to the round raths and hill-forts of our remote predecessors in the British isles, or to the form which Herodotus ascribes to the seven-fold enceinte of Ecbatana; our Browns and Telfords, in their suspension-bridges, perfecting with all the appliances of modern art the rude swings of grass-rope or rattan, which for unknown ages have spanned the mountain rivers of North-eastern India; and, last of all, Stephenson and Fairbairn, carrying our thoughts back to the world's youth, when a pine falling over a stream gave man his first bridge, directing all the plenitude of English gold and iron, all the resources of calculation, experiment, and practised skill, to span the Menai with a single beam."

The Appendix contains a good resumé of the Turkish system of engineering. Mr. Yule tells us that the Turks, in the field, frequently intrenched themselves with the waggons which accompanied the army. "At the great battle of Zenta, in 1697,—a battle in its features singularly resembling that of Sobraon,—the Turkish works on the Theyss, which Eugene stormed, consisted of a double earthen intrenchment, and an outer barricade of carriages."

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 14th of May, 1851, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits;—

* * The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Visitors to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

HINDUSTANI WORKS BY JOHN SHAKESPEAR, Esq.

I.

NEW EDITION, with GREAT ADDITIONS.

This Day is published, the 4th Edition, in 1 vol. 4to. price £3. 5s. in boards, SHAKESPEAR'S HINDUSTANI and ENGLISH DICTIONARY, GREATLY ENLARGED; to which is added, a DICTIONARY, ENGLISH and HINDUSTANI, ENTIRELY NEW.

* * To the First Part of this Dictionary, the author has, by laborious study of Hindustani works, both printed and manuscript, made the most extensive additions. In the Hindustani and English Part, the Hindustani words are printed in their proper characters, together with the pronunciation in Roman letters. The Derivatives, which are traced from the Sanskrit, Arabic, Persian, and Greek, are given respectively in the character peculiar to each of those Languages.

The Second Part, English and Hindustani, is ENTIRELY NEW. It comprises the most common English words, and also numerous usual phrases, with the fittest corresponding translations into Hindustani.

REVIEW IN "TIMES," Jan. 3.—"Much attention has been paid to the collecting of scientific terms, especially botanical ones, as well as to the correct rendering them into the technology of Europe." * * * "The Hindustani and English Part of it now contains upwards of 53,000 words and phrases explained, being 7,000 more than in the last edition, and 11,000 more than in any other Dictionary of the like description now extant." * * * "In 1853, as well as in Europe, the character of this work has long been fully established, and the present edition will greatly enhance its reputation."

HOWARD ON THE LOSS OF TEETH, and on a new method of FASTENING LOOSE TEETH.—A very curious invention connected with Dental Surgery has been introduced by Mr. Howard, consisting of an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed by SELF-ADHESION, without springs, wires, or ligatures. They will never change colour or decay. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation. The invention is of importance to many persons, and those interested in it should read this Treatise.

TO WIDOWERS AND GUARDIANS.

AN ENGLISH FAMILY, who propose travelling on the CONTINENT, offer a HOME to a YOUNG LADY whose friends might wish her to join in the studies of an only daughter (age between 14 and 15). The young lady would be treated in every respect as one of the family, and meet with maternal care and attention. Terms (including every expense, except dress or medical attendance), 350 guineas per annum. As the chief object of the advertisers is to secure for their own daughter an agreeable companion in her studies (under the superintendence of the best masters), this would be a most eligible opportunity for any parents desirous of procuring for their daughter the advantages of education on the Continent, under the maternal care and protection of an English lady of known rank and station in society. Apply, by letter only, to B. C., at Mr. STEWART'S, Grocer, Chapel Street, Grosvenor Place, stating name, address, and reference, and age of young lady, when (if preliminary inquiries are satisfactory) the name of the advertisers will be given, and an interview appointed.

Being now at liberty to try other remedies, he commenced using Holloway's Ointment and Pills, which have so effectually cured him, that he enjoys good health, and is as well able to work as any man. THRESHER and GLENNY, London, are the Trunks best adapted for the Overland Journey through Egypt of travellers going to or returning from the East Indies. We moreover recommend all those whose intention it is to travel by this route, to provide themselves with the Trunks in question, which are most convenient, for their small size, lightness, and durability. They are most adapted for easy and safe conveyance across the Desert between Suez and Cairo, and for this cause are of greater security than any other trunks.—Under seal and signature of Hkair ed deen Pasha, Director in Chief of the Transit Administration throughout Egypt.

EMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION.

IMMIGRATION being much required in AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND, &c., and as the supposed expense of an OUTFIT often prevents individuals emigrating, S. W. SILVER and Co., CLOTHIERS, OUTFITTERS, and CONTRACTORS (having a large interest to maintain in those Colonies), have been advised to make known that they can supply a comfortable OUTFIT, including Bedding, for MALE or FEMALE Emigrants, from Four Pounds (net) upwards, or less (Two Pounds if needful), and for Children in proportion, at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN (opposite the London Tavern), where lists will be given on application.

S. W. S. & Co., being the makers of nearly every article in all the Outfits they supply, and as one of their objects is to promote EMIGRATION, they neither receive from Agents, or pay the too usual commission to any person introducing Passengers to be fitted out, so that the Passage and Outfit may be procured at the least possible expense; but they will, on application, advise Passengers how to obtain the most economic passage to the Colonies. They have a Representative in every Australian Colony, to whom they ship Clothing monthly; thus they would forward small parcels free of expense.

NAVAL and MILITARY OFFICERS, MIDSHIPMEN, CADETS, CIVILIANS, LADIES, &c., are outfitted as heretofore, at the CABIN-PASSENGER OUTFITTING Warehouse, Nos. 65 and 67, CORNHILL (the Emigration Outfitting being exclusively at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN), LONDON, and each branch at ST. SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

CENTRAL Asia appears to be on the eve of political changes, consequent upon the unexpected death of the ruler of Herat, Yar Mahomed Khan, who was attacked by a fever, on his return from a political visit to Dost Mahomed Khan of Cabul, and expired at a village about twelve miles from his capital, on the 4th June. He has named his eldest son, Syed Mahomed Khan, his successor; but this person is represented as imbecile, and utterly incapable of ruling the country, and as Yar Mahomed himself was a usurper, the legitimate title to the state vesting in the Durani monarchs of Affghanistan, the de facto chiefs of that country are bestirring themselves in order to get possession of the country. Dost Mahomed has placed his son, Hyder Khan, at the head of a large army, with instructions to invade Herat, by the route of Balk, which has been conquered by the Affghans, its ruler having been led captive to Cabul by Hyder Khan; Kohun Dil Khan, of Candahar, a brother of the Dost, has likewise made preparations to enforce his claims, and it is expected that he will apply for aid to Persia, which will rejoice at an opportunity to recover her authority over the province; whilst Sultan Mahomed Khan, the former ruler of Peshawur, another of the Barukzye brothers, is about to make an effort to repair his broken fortunes by seizing upon the throne of Herat. The Dost seems not only to have the start of his competitors, but to possess other advantages. His son, Hyder Khan, who leads his forces, by his marriage with the widow of his brother, Akbar Khan (the Affghans having no law or custom forbidding such marriages), who was the daughter of Yar Mahomed, may found some title to the throne upon family connections. Meanwhile, the German journals threaten us with the interference of Russia. The Constitutional Gazette, after detailing the preparations which have been making by that power for some years past, on the eastern coast of the Caspian Sea, on Lake Aral, and on the borders of Turkistan, in order to obtain a basis for future operations, observes:—

"Now the moment has arrived, and she is preparing to profit by it. The death of the Khan of Herat gave the signal of a war of succession, in which Persia has engaged, and will, in all probability, as she did in 1838, invoke once more the assistance of Russia. In the mean time the Russians, under the pretext of an incursion of the Turkomans, landed a body of troops on the southern coast of the Caspian Sea, which is now marching towards Herat. General Perowski, who, notwithstanding the fatal result of the expedition to Khiva, is considered as one of the ablest generals of Russia, has resumed the chief command of the Russian forces in the Government of Orenburg. Should he march alone, or in conjunction with a Persian army towards Herat, it will be easy for him, if provided with a sufficient artillery, to reduce that fortress, where he will not meet this time a Pottinger."

ARRIVAL OF MAILS.

The Ajdaha, with the mails, left Bombay September 1st, made Aden, and left same day for Suez, where she arrived on the 19th.

The mails left Alexandria September 22nd (per Merlin), and arrived at Malta on the 26th ult., from whence they were conveyed by the Caradoc, and reached Marseilles on the 29th ult. (in sixty-six hours).

DATES OF ADVICES.

Bengal August 21 | Madras August 23
Bombay... .. September 1.

If these statements are true, there is a crisis in the affairs of Central Asia.

The province of Herat was originally tributary to Persia, but in the convulsions which shook the Affghan empire, it fell into the possession of Prince Kamran (the son of Mahmood Shah of Cabul, elder brother of Shah Soojah), who became independent, and to the last claimed the throne of the Durani monarchs. Yar Mahomed Khan was Kamran's vizier, and, taking advantage of the unpopularity of his master, who is described by all travellers as cruel and tyrannical, avaricious and debauched, dethroned him, and became the ruler of Herat. Kamran, at his death, left several sons, most of whom, and especially the eldest, Jehangir, were of bad reputation; these princes would have a preferable title to either the son of Yar Mahomed or the Barukzye princes. The latter can never forget the atrocity perpetrated by Kamran upon their elder brother, Futteh Khan, whose eyes he tore from their sockets when a prisoner at Herat.

It is difficult to form any correct judgment of the influence which Yar Mahomed Khan possessed in Herat, and which he may have transmitted to his family. Captain Abbott, who had opportunities of knowing his character, paints him as an "arch-fiend,"—one "whose cunning was only surpassed by his villany," and as "hated by his countrymen as a monster of iniquity." Mohun Lal, who had also a personal knowledge of Yar Mahomed, represents him "a man of resolute character," who was "cruel to the people of the country, but liberal to his friends." The accounts which communicate the intelligence of his death state that "he was greatly beloved by his subjects, who are much depressed by the loss they have sustained."

It further appears that Dost Mahomed Khan, who was in a state of great exultation at his son's success at Balk, and at the plunder brought thence, which had glutted the market, meditated an invasion of Budukshan, a country to the eastward of Koondooz. There is little doubt that these events will work changes in those remote regions, the seat of rapine and of man-stealing, from which humanity and civilization may ultimately reap important advantages.

Maharajah Golab Sing had reported to the authorities at Lahore some successes gained by his troops over the Gilghit people. It appears that these mountaineers, having taken up arms, had made a foray into the low country, and possessed themselves of several villages; to repress their insolence, the Maharajah despatched a strong body of troops under Dewan Hurree Chund, who attacked the insurgents, routed them, and carried one of their forts.

The Delhi paper understands that it has been determined by the Government to adopt decisive measures towards the hill tribes during the coming cold weather. It is said that the necessary arrangements are nearly completed, and that "operations will be commenced on a suitable scale, and with such appliances as will render the success of this second expedition almost certain." Brigadier Sir Colin Campbell has recommended to Government, as a precautionary measure, that one regular and one irregular cavalry regiment be detached from Peshawur on patrol duty, to be kept continually on the move along the foot of the hills near the Khybur pass.

Much sickness still prevailed at Peshawur and Lahore. The Lahore Chronicle, of August 13th, says:—"We have to apologize for the extreme paucity of editorial matter to-day, the sickness that prevails in our establishment (intermittent fevers) has deprived us of the labour of some of our best 'hands,' and we are crippled accordingly."

The affairs of the Nizam of the Deccan remained in the same state as at the date of the last advices.

Death has been busy amongst persons of note and eminence in British India. In the Indian army, amongst the commissioned officers, the obituary had been unusually large during the month of August. The ex-Dewan of Mooltan, Moolraj, whose removal from Calcutta to the fortress of Allahabad we reported in our last Summary, closed his career, it appears, on the way. An official report from the commander of the steamer Lord William Bentinck, which towed the troop-boat Soane, in which the ex-Dewan proceeded, states that he died on the 11th July, off a place named Parbutpore, about half-way between Revelgunge and Ghazeepore, forty miles below Buxar, and that his remains were taken on shore and burned. Every kindness and attention consistent with his safe custody, it is said, were shown to him by the officials in whose charge he was placed.

Mr. Drinkwater Bethune has likewise paid the universal debt. We have inserted elsewhere the remarks of several of the journals upon the character of this much-abused gentleman, whose amiable temper and extraordinary efforts on behalf of native education are acknowledged by all. "As a legislator," observes the Hurkaru,—

"Mr. Bethune has never been popular here, nor deserved to be so. His intentions were good, doubtless, but he wanted the qualifications necessary to give a praiseworthy effect to them. As president of the Council of Education, he displayed remarkable zeal and energy, while his sacrifices and exertions in the cause of native female education will endear his name to future generations of Hindus, though they are but imperfectly appreciated by the present one. As a member of society, although his character and career were marked with some rather prominent faults and frailties, he was generally held in high esteem, especially for the genial warmth and liberality of his disposition."

Mr. Bethune's Hindu Female School, to which he had, actually or prospectively, devoted large sums of money, and which he did not forget in the testamentary disposition of his property (having left by will the amount to be realized by the sale of all his magnificent furniture to the purposes of his school), he on his death-bed recommended to the patronage and control of the Council of Education. Sixty or seventy gentlemen, friends and admirers of the deceased, met to consider the fittest mode of doing honour to his memory, and it was resolved to originate a subscription for a "Bethune Endowment fund," to be applied to some purpose in connection with the Hindu Female School, or otherwise in promoting the advancement of native female education. About seven thousand rupees were subscribed before the meeting broke up. It was further proposed by Baboo Ramgopal Ghose, that a separate subscription should be opened among the natives for the purpose of obtaining from England a portrait of the deceased, to be placed in the female school.

The death of the Assistant Superintendent of the Indian Navy, Captain Hawkins, was occasioned by an accident.

It was generally believed that the Governor-General would leave Simla for Calcutta, via Rohilcund, early in October, and that the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west provinces (Mr. Thomason) would proceed towards the Punjab about the same period. It was also rumoured that the Commander-in-Chief intends visiting Peshawur early in the next cold season. His Excellency's camp will, it is said, form at Buddie, instead of Kalka, as has been usual, in November, and he will cross the Sutlej at Roopur; but it does not seem to be yet decided whether he will visit Lahore en route to Peshawur, or not until he is returning to the hills.

The Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Bombay were at the presidency, having returned from the Deccan in expectation of receiving despatches from home regarding the measures to be adopted for punishing the Arab tribes of Lahedge, by some of whom the late Captain Mylne and a couple of other British subjects were murdered. It has been decided that no expedition shall be sent against them—for the present at any rate. Lord Falkland and Sir J. Grey would return to Poona after the arrival of the next mail.

The unusually heavy rains and extraordinary rise of the Indus have caused much damage. The following extract of a letter from Leia, in the Mooltan division, dated 27th July, says,—

"The Indus is in full flood; the waters are higher and more extensively spread than was ever known before. The whole of the low lands are under water. Hitherto no loss of life has been reported. The mass of the inhabitants have as usual sought shelter in the desert. The station of Leia has been inundated; the rising of the water commenced on the 24th, and in less than twenty-four hours every house was more or less surrounded by water; it was, however, only in the commissioner's estate that the flood, by the greatest exertions in making bunds, could be kept at a safe and respectful distance."

The Sehwan correspondent of the Kurrachee Advertiser, writing on the 3rd August, gives a sadder account of the destruction of life and property in and about Sehwan:—

"The town of Sehwan is now an island, being completely surrounded by water. Its suburbs and the neighbouring villages are completely submerged. Very few of the fishermen and cultivators who lived on the river banks have escaped alive, and what little property they possessed is all gone. Desolation is all around. To give you an idea of the height the river has attained, I may mention that the steam tender Napier anchored close up to the Government granary, which is situated above a mile distant from the usual anchorage-place during ordinary inundations. The villages Dadco, Mahibota, Kurraunpoor, Cheenabagh, Eusuff Kayli, and many others of less significance, are completely destroyed; the greater portion of the inhabitants have, however, owing to the unremitting exertions of Mr. Roach, the assistant apothecary at this place, been saved. He pressed all the boats he could lay hands on, and sent them to the assistance of the drowning villagers. He attempted also to save the Government grain, but without success."

It is stated that the Government of India intends to permit the ex-Ameers of Scinde, at present in durance at Hazarebaug, to remove to Allahabad, where Meer Mahomed and Meer Shah are to be married. Nothing seems to be known yet as to the ultimate destination of the members of the royal family of Scinde who are in captivity in the immediate neighbourhood of Poona.

According to some of the Bengal papers, the Government has entered into a negotiation with Lalla Jotee Persaud, to liquidate their debt by instalments of ten lakhs of rupees in hard cash (the Lalla having declined receiving his dues in bills or other paper currency) per quarter.

From Maulmain we learn that a conspiracy has taken place at Ava, having for its object the deposition of the present king; that forty people have been executed; and that the Shoay Thoik Woon is in prison, as well as several others.

THE MOFUSSIL BANKS.

The Agra and United Service Bank.—The thirty-sixth half-yearly meeting of the shareholders of this bank was held at Agra on the 11th August, W. H. Tyler, Esq., in the chair. The report of the directors, supported by the most positive reports from the various branch auditors, stated the net divisible balance on the 30th June to be Co.'s Rs. 3,87,932. 1. 3., allowing a dividend of eight per cent., and an addition to the reserve fund of Co.'s Rs. 75,352. 1. 3., the total amount of which is now Rs. 5,38,433. 1. 3. A further sum of Rs. 60,000 was left at credit of profit and loss, as a provision in case of need. In compliance with a resolution passed at a previous meeting, the reserve fund is to be vested in Government Securities, and no portion of it can be withdrawn without the consent of the trustees. The London agency had realized on the half year a net profit of 452l. 6s. 3d., and the branches at the three presidencies have conducted a safe and prosperous business. The former directors, Messrs. H. H. Bell, J. Middleton, M. Richardson, T. Seaton, E. Sissmore, and G. Snell, were re-elected.

The Delhi Bank.—The fourteenth half-yearly meeting of the shareholders of this bank was held on the 9th August, Mr. J. Smith in the chair. The accounts submitted to the meeting exhibited, as the net profit on the transactions of the six months ending the 30th of June, 1851, Co.'s Rs. 96,346. 8. 9., admitting of a dividend at the rate of Rs. 10. 2. 2. per cent. per annum, of which one per cent. or Rs. 9,504 will be carried to the reserved fund, in accordance with the resolution passed by the general meeting of proprietors held on the 7th August, 1849; but with reference to the proposal to write off the dishonoured English bills, the directors recommended that a further addition of Co.'s Rs. 9,547. 9. 2. be made to the reserve fund, which will then amount to Co.'s Rs. 1,05,000; that a dividend at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum be declared, and that the balance, of Co.'s Rs. 1,262. 15. 7., be carried to the profit and loss account of the current half-year. The recommendations of the directors were adopted by a large majority, and perfect unanimity prevailed with regard to the satisfactory character of the various accounts and statements submitted. The following gentlemen were then elected directors for the ensuing six months:—Messrs. Abbott, Menteath, Ryley, Collins, Raynor, and Lallas Narain Dass and Ajoodia Pershad.

The North-West Bank.—The half-yearly general meeting of shareholders of the N.W. Bank took place at Meerut on the August, Colonel Gwatkin in the chair. A very clear statement of the affairs of the bank was laid before the proprietors, by which it appeared that not only was the deficit in the capital made up (by reducing the shares to Rs. 400 each, and holding back the profits of the half year terminating in December, 1850), but a dividend of 12 per cent. was declared, besides leaving a surplus of Rs. 18,352. 12. 7., to be carried to the profit and loss account for the current half year. A wish having been expressed by many proprietors that the bank should be registered, it was resolved that the opinion of council should be taken on the subject as soon as the head office had been established in Calcutta. The office at Meerut was to be closed on the 20th August, and Mr. J. O'B. Tandy was immediately to proceed to Calcutta, to undertake the management of the remodelled and invigorated concern.

The Mofussil Joint Stock Banks have lately exerted themselves to the utmost to satisfy the public as to the soundness and integrity of their management. The North-West Bank has published the first clear statement of its affairs we have yet seen, and the arrangements made to meet past losses and to provide for the future prosperity of the concern, though in our opinion contrary to the spirit of its deed of partnership, are in all other respects most satisfactory. In fact, the resolutions amount to a renewal of the partnership on a different basis.

The Agra Bank has laid before its proprietors unexceptionable evidence as to its safety and well-doing. The audits published this month are in every way good and must prove highly gratifying to the shareholders.

The half-yearly report of the Delhi Bank is equally satisfactory, though we could wish that its accounts had been regularly audited. There is also amongst the assets some very doubtful items; but they are mentioned separately and at the worst can only form a small charge against the reserve fund. It is, besides, well known that the credit of this bank has never been depreciated to anything like the extent of the other Mofussil establishments.

Of the Simlah Bank we can only say that it continues to keep its place in public estimation, but owing to its situation in the hills it can hardly be said to belong to our market.

Bank shares have not as yet improved in value, nor do we imagine that they will for some time to come, as the distrust in such investments has reached a point that will require a lengthened experience of sound management entirely to remove. In the meantime proprietors are firm, and confident of the future, and it is only from individual necessity that shares are ever offered for sale.—Delhi Gaz. Aug. 21.

MR. J. E. DRINKWATER BETHUNE.

The Hon. J. E. Drinkwater Bethune, Esq., Legislative Member of the Supreme Council, and President of the Council of Education, died on the 21st August, of abscess of the liver, after an illness of no long duration. During the early part of the previous day, he rallied in an extraordinary degree, and some faint hopes were entertained of his recovery; but at night, the symptoms again took an unfavourable turn. He died without pain, apparently, and remained sensible almost to the last moment. He was followed to the grave by an unusually large number of persons, European and native, representing almost every section of the community.—Hurkaru, Aug. 14.

Mr. Bethune, from his high official position, the great public importance of his duties, and the zeal, and enthusiasm, and personal activity which he exhibited on every occasion that brought him forward as a mark for the general eye, was more talked of, both by friends and enemies, during his brief career as a legislator and educationalist, than any other official personage in Bengal. And perhaps there never was a public man in this country whose character has been judged from so many different and conflicting points of view. Few men with so many good qualities have excited an hostility so active, and few men with so many weaknesses have had so many admirers. Nothing, therefore, that could be said of him by any one man is at all likely to give general satisfaction. It is not, however, our object to gratify the partiality or prejudice of either party, but to utter what we deem the truth, be it received how it may.

Mr. Bethune was not fitted by nature for the great duties imposed upon him. It is a miserable mistake to suppose that any man of ordinary capacity could undertake effectively the task of legislation. It was a monstrous injustice to this country when the British Government sent out such a man as Mr. Bethune to frame its laws. Such a combination of high qualities as a task of that nature demands are rarely met with in a single individual. Scarcely any one of them was possessed by the late Legislative Member of Council. His only acknowledged qualification was that of good intentions; but good intentions alone, or accompanied by only ordinary intellectual powers, will go but a very little way towards the conception and embodiment of wholesome laws. An intellect at once large and quick, profound and logical; a vast knowledge of the world and of the springs of human nature; an acquaintance general and minute with the political condition and the religious and social habits of the people for whom he is to legislate; and last, but not least in the list, such a mastery of language as can avoid all those verbal ambiguities which so often turn law into a trap or a curse, are amongst the many endowments and accomplishments essential to the lawgiver. We need hardly add, that these qualifications were not united in the person of Mr. Bethune.—Englishman, Aug. 15.

He who should write on these matters, even on the de mortuis nil nisi bonum principle, must admit that Mr. Bethune appeared in this country, even in the eyes of his admirers and friends, in damaging contrast with the men and intellects that had preceded him in the position he was called upon to occupy. No person would think of comparing his mental qualifications, his taste, and judgment, with those of Macaulay, Amos, or Cameron; but it must be remembered, that India was peculiarly favoured by the presence of three such men, and that their successor suffered from the exalted reputations which they left behind them here, and which the two latter have since sustained, and the first vastly increased, in their native land. Mr. Bethune was not a man of an elegant classical turn of mind, nor was he a great lawyer; but he certainly was a man of respectable mental capacities, and he had many social virtues, and virtues too of the highest kind. He was liberal, munificent, and charitable; gave to the poor and expended on the ignorant with a lavish hand; and led the way with princely donations in everything which he thought calculated to serve, to elevate, to educate, and enlighten, the natives of the country, from whose revenues he only temporarily drew the large salary of which he was but the medium of disbursement and philanthropic expenditure. No institution in difficulties or individual in distress, that could show a meritorious claim to succour or charity, ever experienced a refusal of his patronage or a grudge of his money, and he has left behind him a reputation as a charitable and munificent man which we are not likely soon to see equalled or emulated. He had undeniably many failings of the head, and committed many grave errors of judgment; but he had many excellences of the heart, was a firm friend and a kind master, generous to a fault, hospitable, social, cheerful, and anxious to promote the enjoyment and concord of those whom, in his hours of relaxation, he assembled around him. Assuredly, if he had, as we admit, some great faults, and was not gifted with the soundest and strongest powers of judgment, it must be admitted that the virtues we have in fairness given him credit for, are not of low worth or mean degree. We never admired him as a lawyer, often differed from him on educational and other questions, dissented from many of his opinions, and condemned some of his actions; but now that he is no more, we are willing to acknowledge his many virtues, and look with leniency on his faults and mistakes, which are comparatively light in the balance, because they were, as we have said, of the head and judgment, and not of the heart and the will. We have praised him as a firm friend, and even those who suffered by his actions, his influence, or his enmity, must admit that he was an open foe, which in the laws of quarrel is recognized as a virtue. He did his best, according to the capacities with which he was endowed, for the interests of the government that employed him, and has left memorials of his benevolence and generosity amongst its subjects which will exist long after he shall have been personally forgotten amongst us, and as long as the race for which he did so much shall be capable of gratitude to a noble benefactor and a devoted friend. He died at his post, calmly and with fortitude, cut off prematurely, in the midst of a career which, if defaced by a few blemishes, was illustrated and adorned by the light of many virtues, and innumerable acts of charity, generosity, and benevolence,—the remembrance of which we commend to his successor, whoever he may be.—Calcutta Morn. Chron., Aug. 14.

Whatever the temporary unpopularity, an excitable temperament, and a convivial habit of society, entailed upon him, it has been amply atoned for by deeds of sterling worth. We have no objection to the Black Acts, if accompanied by contemporaneous measures annihilating their evil consequences. The policy, though not carried out in the spirit of Macaulay, was a necessary supplement to the legislation of 1836. But this is not the moment to dwell upon defects, which certainly did not arise from a deficiency of intellect, or a pernicious impulse. No man exceeded Mr. Bethune in his desire to improve the condition of the masses. His labours for the benefit of the mothers of the next generation have been already productive of fruit, and are no longer to be ignored. His endeavours to found the national education of the Hindus upon a scientific basis, are but a continuation of the endeavours of his predecessors, though he has experienced their entire unpopularity, for reasons which this is not the hour to expose. He has earned an honoured and a glorious grave. And when the miserable party spite of the day has melted into nothingness, those claims will meet with universal assent.—Citizen, Aug. 15.

THE EUROPEAN PRESS OF INDIA.

The English newspapers published in India are chiefly supported by the Services, civil and military, of the East-India Company, and by the European residents of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay. The press, of course, studies the tastes and requirements of its supporters; and, in so far as it is the exponent of anything, it indicates the matters which interest the European community. Public opinion in India, by which we mean the exposition of the general sentiments of chiefs and people, is therefore wholly and entirely unrepresented; and the European press, even where unbiased by class connections and influences, which is very far from being always the case, is often very grossly misled, and falls into lamentable errors, in spite of the best intentions. We have seen the European press praise men, as the models of public servants, whom we knew to be unprincipled, corrupt, and despised by the native community, as not even coming up to their own standard of integrity, debased as they acknowledge that to be; whilst, on the other hand, we have known the European press to be hounded on to the abuse and misrepresentation of public servants whom the native community honoured and respected, as just, able, and of stainless probity. Sometimes this was to be ascribed to a hostile faction, knowing how to "work the press," as it is technically termed; but more frequently to the complete isolation of the European press, and its want of connection with, and of feelers among, the native community; its want of authentic accurate information upon those most important points, the grievances, wishes, and opinions of the people. The European press is, we repeat, no representative of public opinion in India, either as to men or measures.—Calcutta Review for June.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MAGISTRATES' PROTECTION ACT.—The Chief Justice, Sir Lawrence Peel, availed himself of the opportunity afforded by the final decision of the case "Lang v. Gubbins," to disclaim any share in the paternity of the Magistrates' Protection Act, which had been confidently attributed to him.

"Who'll go to the Diggings?"—An advertisement, thus headed, appears in the Hurkaru, to this effect:—"An opportunity, such as never before occurred, and, probably never will again, now offers of proceeding direct to California. The advertiser, wishing to go there by the shortest route, and thinking it likely that in this large city there are many of the same mind, whose prospects here are cloudy and means limited, proposes to build and equip a small vessel for the purpose, and invites such to be the companions of his voyage on paying the very moderate sum of Co.'s Rs. 120. Indeed, the charge must appear ridiculously low when it is considered that the distance to San Francisco is much the same as to London; and a steamer passage to the latter place costs about Rs. 300. If a sufficient number accept of this offer at once, by paying half the amount to Mr. Thomas Reeves, Union Dock Office, Sulkah (the balance may remain till the day of sailing is fixed on), the keel will be laid down immediately, and the vessel will be ready for sea in a few weeks."

THUGS.—On the 16th August, some Thug-Goindahs, who had been sent to this place to look after some of the profession, took up their position at the Raj Ghat gate of the city, and whilst sitting there, a sower of the irregular cavalry passed, whose countenance attracted the attention of the spies. They immediately recognised him as one of a gang who had murdered some Marwaries and their children about fifteen years ago. The man was so astonished when seized and charged with being a Thug, that he dropped expressions almost admitting the fact. Five of the Thug-Goindahs have been examined, four of whom declared that they recognised him, but had lost sight of him since the murder of the Marwaries, and one does not recognise him, as he was never with any party of Thugs with which the witness was connected. The case will be tried by the Superintendent of Thuggee, Major Graham, at Meerut.—Delhi Gazette.

MR. THOMASON. We have the best authority for saying that the Lieut.-Governor, N. W. Provinces will proceed to Lahore via Julundhur on leaving Simla in November, and that hence he will march direct to Agra via Ferozepoor, that being the whole extent of his Honour's peregrination for the season. He may be expected here on the 10th of December.—Lahore Chronicle, Aug. 16.

AN "AFFAIR OF HONOUR," of a most extraordinary character, and strikingly exemplifying the defects of the present system of military messes, took place in Fort William lately. Two ensigns of the 44th N.I., doing duty in garrison, got into an altercation after dinner, and thereupon adjourned, without seconds or witnesses, to the terrace-roof of the barracks, to settle their difference by a duel. It happened, however, that only one pistol, a double-barrelled one, was forthcoming. The difficulty was got over by tossing up for the first use of the weapon, and the fortunate winner, Ensign James, lodged the only bullet procurable in the thigh of his adversary, Ensign Fraser, who, as may be supposed, was compelled to forego his privilege of retaliating with a slug. The case is now under investigation by the military authorities, and will probably lead to one or two court-martial trials.—Hukaru, Aug. 19.

The lamentable result appears to have been entirely owing to the absence of the senior officers of the garrison from the mess-room in question. The young men present were acting under no controlling authority; many of them, amongst whom were the two offenders in question, were mere boys, just let loose from school. The consequence was, that the mess-room was for the time being turned into a Gym-khana, where all sorts of practical joking, irritating recrimination, and other similar childish indulgences, were carried on, unchecked by the presence of any whose age, rank, or character, would have entitled him to check angry discussions by peremptory interference, or obviate the possibility, or at least the probability, of hostile measures by his authority, and the exercise of the power with which it vested him when presiding amongst his juniors in age and inferiors in rank. As if to cast a deeper shade of obloquy over those in authority, who are morally responsible for such scenes as that just described, it has come out, on the inquiry, that the regiment to which these young officers, who are now implicated in such a serious business, belong, is commanded by a lieutenant, of some ten or eleven years' standing!—the next officer to him, who is present with the regiment in Fort William, is a subaltern of eight years and a few months' standing! The young man who has been wounded is not in danger. It is most probable, however, that something will be done some of these days to ameliorate these absurdities after so much mischief has been committed; or, as is not at all unlikely, matters will be allowed to remain in statu quo until murder is committed; at which time it may be expected that the "authorities" will all be restored to their faculties by the aid of a "flapper" from the judges of her Majesty's Supreme Court.—Bombay Times, Sept. 1.

TRADE.—Mr. Wilkinson's Commercial Annual records the value of the sea-borne trade of Calcutta for the year 1850-51 as follows. The imports were Rs. 5,90,40,567 in merchandise, and Rs. 1,14,92,343 in treasure, together Rs. 7,05,32,910, against Rs. 6,49,71,143 in the preceding year. The exports were Rs. 10,44,99,469 in merchandise, and Rs. 27,81,426 in treasure, together Rs. 10,72,80,895, against Rs. 10,93,27,126 in 1849-50. The account of shipping shows an increase of foreign vessels, without any falling off in British tonnage.

THE UNION BANK.—A correspondent impeaches the correctness of our assertion, that certain mercantile firms ruined the Union Bank instead of their being ruined by the Bank. We deliberately repeat that statement. We appealed in support of it to the notorious fact, that by two firms alone the bank lost forty lakhs of rupees. Other houses were largely indebted to the concern.—Hurharu.

MR. T. PLOWDEN.—The questions brought forward against Mr. Trevor Plowden, by Mr. Charles Gubbins, and which Mr. Franco was deputed to investigate, have been before the lieutenant-governor, who has decided that the charges are totally unworthy of credit. It also added that Mr. Gubbins will not be allowed to return to Meerut.—Delhi Gaz., Aug. 21.

OX-DIRS. from the Delhi and Lahore papers:—Brevet Major Rowland Hill, of the 70th N.I. retires from the service from the date of the sailing of the August steamer from Calcutta.—Assistant-Surgeon R. W. Macaulay, attached to the Residency at Ajmere, will, in all probability, proceed to England at the close of the present year, and Assistant-Surgeon H. A. Ebdon will succeed him.—Col. Rich, of the 6th N.I. is to be made a brigadier. Col. Abraham Roberts, C.B. of the 13th N.I. is also spoken of as likely to be promoted to the same rank. (Both officers are at present in Europe).—Major W. E. Mulcaster, second in command of the 7th Irreg. Cav. will be appointed to the temporary command of the 14th Irreg. and Lieut. W. Graham will succeed to the second in command of the 7th during Major Mulcaster's absence. Lieut. A. H. Bamfield, of the 56th N.I. at present acting Adjutant of the 14th Irreg. will, it is said, officiate as adjutant in the room of Lieut. Graham.—The 10th Cavalry will march in from Kurtarpore to Jullundur at the close of the present season. It is said there will be two cavalry corps at Jullundur.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

CIVIL ABSENTEE REGULATIONS.

Fort William, Financial Department, Aug. 8, 1851. Under instructions from the Honourable the Court of Directors conveyed in a despatch in the financial department, No. 34, of 1851, dated June 18, the President in Council is pleased to direct the publication of the following additional clause to section XI. of the civil absentee regulations of May 17, 1843.

"Civil servants or military servants holding civil appointments, absent from their stations under medical certificate, cannot be admitted to leave under this rule, in continuation of their sick leave, and if, while absent under this rule, they be granted extended leave under medical certificate, they shall be considered liable to the rules applicable to leave of absence on medical certificate for the whole period of their absence."

HON. J. E. D. BETHUNE.

Fort William, Home Department, Aug. 12.—The Hon. John Elliot Drinkwater Bethune, fourth ordinary member of the Supreme Council of India, died this afternoon, at three o'clock, at his house in Elysium-row, Chowringhee.

The President in Council notifies, with the deepest regret, this mournful event to the community of the presidency, and requests that the officers of Government, civil and military, will attend the funeral of the late Mr. Bethune.

COURT-MARTIAL.

CAPT. FREDERICK JONES THOMPSON, 2ND EUR. BENGAL FUSILIERS.

Head Quarters, Simla, July 30, 1851.—At a general court-martial assembled at Agra, June 30, Capt. F. J. Thompson, 2nd Eur. Ben. Fus. was arraigned on the following charges:—

1st. For unbecoming conduct at Agra, between April 10, 1850, and May 15, 1851, under the following circumstances:—That, when required in April, 1851, by the C.-in-C., to settle, or to explain his reasons for not settling, a debt of Rs. 236.14.8, principal and interest, the greater part of which sum had been due by him, since March 29, 1845, to Dorajee Gooverjee and Co., of Fukkur, he, made profession of immediate payment in a letter to the adjutant of the regt., dated April 10, 1850, in the following words: "I intend paying the Parsee, if possible, this week, and am at this moment making every arrangement and effort to that purpose. The cause of delaying my answer was, that I wished to pay the money into your office, and so render any further correspondence on the subject unnecessary;" notwithstanding which profession he subjected himself to be repeatedly reminded of this debt, and, in letters to the adj. of the regt. dated Sept. 24, 1850, and April 15, 1851, alleged the following insufficient excuses for not settling it—that he could not pay one creditor without injustice to the rest, and injury to himself; that he considered himself entitled to a personal application from the Parsee firm, which he had not received; that the present system of courts of requests prevents his settling this debt; and, finally, in a letter to the adj. of the regt. dated May 15, 1851, he denied the authority of his military superiors to interfere in his pecuniary affairs, and stated, that if the Parsee firm applied direct to him, he would pay them;—such conduct evincing a disregard of superior authority, and a wilful neglect to pay a just debt, and being highly discreditable to him, as an officer and a gentleman.

2nd. For having, at Agra, between April 5, 1850, and April 5, 1851, subjected himself to the disgrace of appearing as a defendant before successive monthly military Courts of Requests, in no less than nineteen actions for debt, and on notes of hand, at the suit of tradesmen and of his servants, to the amount of Co. Rs. 2,450, in all of which actions decrees were given against him: such conduct being highly discreditable to him as an officer, and tending to bring into disrepute the reg. to which he belongs.

3rd. For highly insubordinate conduct and contempt of superior authority, in having, at Agra, in a letter to the adj. of the reg., dated May 15, 1851, in allusion to the late C.-in-C., to the present C.-in-C., and to the officer com. the 2nd Beng. Eur. Fus., expressed himself in the following language:—"I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of a letter from the brig. maj., as also one from the adj. gen. of the army, in which his exc. the C.-in-C. has thought proper to apply the epithets degrading and humiliating to my conduct, which he is led to do on account of some statement of Col. Spens; moreover, as I respect the 2nd Eur. Beng. Fus., with which I have served since the raising of the reg. I do not conceive (it) to be my duty to hear any of its members branded undeservedly as a cheat by any one, much less by those whose rank and breeding should induce them to pause before they insult the feelings of their equals in birth, though not in professional grade or authority. I did not appoint Sir Charles Napier my agent, and it is not the custom for gentlemen to interfere in one another's private pecuniary transactions."

Finding.—On the first charge, not guilty, with the exception of the words "he denied the authority of his military superiors to interfere in his pecuniary affairs."

On the second charge, guilty; but the Court find the sum total of claims to be Co.'s Rs. 2,350. 11, instead of Co.'s Rs. 2,450, as stated in the charge.

On the third charge guilty.

Sentence.—Lose two steps in the list of Captains in the 2d Eur. Beng. Fusiliers.

Not confirmed.

(Signed) W. M. GOMM, Gen. C.-in-C. East Indies.
Head Quarters, Simla, 24th July, 1851.

Remarks by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

The Commander-in-Chief has abstained from confirming the sentence of the Court, because it is inseparably connected with the finding of the Court on the several charges; and His Exc. while concurring with the Court in their finding on the first and third charges, is of opinion that under the second charge Capt. Thompson was justly entitled to an acquittal.

The debt to which the first charge relates is one of six years' standing. The C.-in-C. calls on Capt. Thompson to vindicate the character he so strenuously assumes to himself in his defence, of one anxious to preserve his respectability in society, by using his best endeavours to liquidate this debt.—No indulgence of any kind will be granted to Capt. Thompson, until the C.-in-C. shall have received a report of this debt having been duly settled.

With respect to the second charge, the C.-in-C. is satisfied, from the evidence, that Capt. Thompson's frequent appearance before the Court of Requests, throughout the term specified, was not occasioned by his having incurred debt in any mode involving the imputation of disgrace to him, or that of having recklessly brought discredit on himself as an officer, and upon his reg. This was the gravamen of the charge, and the court's verdict should have relieved Capt. Thompson of it.

With regard to the third charge, the C.-in-C. accepts, for himself and for his predecessor, the apology offered by Capt. Thompson in the course of his defence, for the unbecoming heat which dictated his letter of May 15 last, and the unwarrantable assumptions it sets forth.

A comm. officer of a reg. evincing an earnest desire to vindicate the character of his officers for general respectability of conduct, having had his attention directed by superior authority to circumstances bringing disrepute on the reg., and submitting to the notice of that authority what appears to him a systematic course of behaviour, pursued by any members of it eminently calculated to detract from such character, the individual so signalized is not to permit himself to retort with acrimony upon his comm. officer for such liberty taken with his concerns, without incurring very grave reprehension. He has himself to reproach, and none else, for the distasteful reproof so brought upon him from superior authority.

And where Capt. Thompson disputes the authority of his military superiors to interfere in his pecuniary affairs, it becomes the duty of the C.-in-C. to repudiate, in the most marked terms, the fallacious doctrine, and to promulgate at once, for general caution, his steady adherence to a principle diametrically opposed to that advocated by Capt. Thompson—importing, that, so long as an individual holds the commission of her Majesty, or that of the Hon. East-India Company, every marked irregularity in the discharge of his monetary obligations is cognizable by the military authorities under whom he serves; and that they claim a title to insist upon his creditable discharges of these;—not upon the ground of any asserted right of interference with his private concerns, regarding him purely as an isolated individual, but as a member—and possibly, from his position and standing in his corps, an influential one—of a responsible society of military gentlemen, whose moral character must suffer degradation through the short-comings of any one of its members to proper and gentlemanly support.

Captain Thompson should further understand, as the C.-in-C. feels satisfied the generality of the officers of this army already do, that there is no disposition among those highest in authority to press with severity upon individuals evincing an honest endeavour, not only by profession but by performance, duly to relieve themselves from the pecuniary embarrassments in which they find themselves involved, from whatever cause arising; but, especially, where no acts of gross misconduct can be pointed to for their origin, and that all reasonable indulgence is intended to be shown in every deserving case; while the principle against which Capt. Thompson so strongly inveighs in his defence will be steadily adhered to, and enforced where indulgence is found to be abused.

Captain Thompson will be released from arrest, and directed to return to his duty, without detriment to his standing in the regiment.

SUPREME COURT, JULY 29.

Re Cornelius Traveller, insolvent.—Mr. J. B. Norton, on behalf of Mr. Traveller, presented a petition of appeal, praying that the decision of Sir W. Burton, in the Insolvent Debtors' Court (see p. 481), whereby Mr. Traveller was ordered to be discharged from his debts after undergoing twelve months' imprisonment, be set aside. The grounds of the appeal were, that Mr. Traveller was entitled to his discharge at once, and that the sentence was excessive.

The Chief Justice confessed he could not see how any judge exercising ordinary discretion could come to a different decision than the one given in the Insolvent Court. He could not believe that any man would sign a promissory note, whether in Tamil or English, or whether purporting to be or not a copy of a note already given and signed some six or seven months before, without first knowing its contents. As regarded the excessive punishment, there was no evidence to show that Mr.

Traveller's health was injured, or would be injured by the twelve months' incarceration. Under all circumstances, therefore, the judgment of the Court below must be confirmed, and the prayer of the petition refused.

AUGUST 6.

In the matter of Lutchmee Ummall.—Mr. Salmon moved for a writ of habeas corpus, directed to the Rev. Mr. Symonds and Andrew Philip Streenevass, to bring up the body of Lutchmee Ummall. He grounded his application on the affidavits of the father and mother of the wife, and Mr. Stewart, and contended, on the authority of the case of the Hottentot Venus, 13 East, that he was entitled to the writ, although he had no affidavit on the part of Lutchmee Ummall herself. The Court would gather from the evidence of each case whether the party was in a situation to make an affidavit. According to the facts here, up to a certain time she was unwilling to remain. This was not the case of a woman foolishly saying, "I will not remain," as in the case of Mrs. Cochrane. But here her refusal was built upon the ground that the custody involves the breaking through of the customs of her forefathers, and being opposed to her peace of mind in this world and her future happiness. If the Court will allow her to come up, and hear from her own lips what her wishes are, it will set the matter at rest. Here, private intercourse was prohibited, and therefore influence might be presumable. The parents were anxious she should be brought up to hear from herself whether or not she was willing to remain with her husband.

The following affidavits, on which the Rule was applied for, purport to be made by Iyooloo Iyengar, a clerk in the Government office, and Rookoomany Ummall, the father and mother of Lutchmee Ummall, in which Iyooloo Iyengar says that Lutchmee Ummall has against her will, from the time she was taken to Mr. Symonds's house till now, been forced by Mrs. Symonds and her husband there to reside, and that, on the 30th day of July, with Mr. Stewart, he went to see his daughter, and found her in the sitting-room of Mr. Symonds's house, and Mr. Symonds refused his and Mr. Stewart's request, that he might speak privately with his daughter; that he quitted the house of Mr. Symonds without exchanging a word with his daughter, and that while waiting in the coach outside Mr. Symonds's house, Lutchmee Ummall came out of the house to dry her cloth, and made signs to him to carry her away, and that he returned those signs, promising to do so. Rookoomany Ummall, for her part, stated that she saw her daughter on the 23rd June, for the greater part of an hour, in the presence of Streenevass, but was left alone with her for a few minutes, when Lutchmee said she was sick at stomach, and would leave if detained in the house twelve years; that she requested to have food sent her, and food was sent on the 30th June, of which Lutchmee partook; she also made signs when her husband's back was turned, intimating that she wished to be taken away; that Rookoomany again saw her daughter on the 7th July, on which occasion Streenevass would not permit her to carry in the food, and she was forced to leave it in the garden; that Lutchmee begged hard of her husband to be allowed to eat it; that while Mr. Symonds and Streenevass were talking together, Lutchmee, in a low voice, said to her mother, "Bring me a bandy, keep it outside, and I will come away with you;" that she again saw Lutchmee on the 14th July; that her daughter had never been allowed a brahmin or any other caste female servant, but had always been attended by a pariah female servant, which of itself is a pollution to her daughter, as a brahmin female; that she is forced to eat her meals in the room occupied and slept in by her, where the children of Mr. and Mrs. Symonds sleep and play, and where European and pariah servants frequent, and that her daughter eating her food there, on a rattan mat, trampled on by Europeans and pariahs, is a pollution, according to their religion and caste; that every act and movement of hers in the house of a Christian minister and a European are pollutions, and which, if willingly submitted to, are calculated to cause a forfeit of caste; that Lutchmee could not live under the same roof as Streenevass without losing caste; and that, according to Hindoo custom, for the wife even to see the face of her apostate husband, who becomes a Christian, is a pollution and a crime. Mr. Alexander Stewart, in his affidavit, stated that Lutchmee came to his office, and declared her perfect determination, uninfluenced by her father and anybody else, to leave her husband, and live apart from him, because he had become a Christian; that, on that day, he took her aside several times, and questioned her, when she declared the same determination; that, on the 9th June, he saw Lutchmee alone at Mr. Symonds's house, when she remonstrated with him, and said, "How is it you handed me over to the padre in this way? you assured me in your office that the judge would not force me against my wishes to go to my husband, whereas they took me up in open court, and handed me over like a sheep." On Mr.

Stewart leaving, Lutchmee requested him to call on the 16th, but he did not do so, as he was led to believe the parents of Lutchmee considered him too favourably inclined to Mr. Symonds, but he went on the 23rd, and was permitted to have a private conversation with her, when she complained that she was sick in body, sick at the sight of European food, and would not be well till she went back to her mother's house, and that she would not remain in the house, if even she was forced to stay there twelve years, and begged to be taken out of the place. Mr. Stewart, accompanied by the father of Lutchmee, went to Mr. Symonds's house on the 30th July, for the purpose of ascertaining her mind, with a view to further proceedings; that, an hour after his arrival, Lutchmee was brought into the sitting-room, in which were present her husband, Mr. and Mrs. Symonds, Mr. Clay, and himself. Mr. Stewart, with Streenevass and Mr. Clay, entered into a conversation with her in Tamil, which was wholly expressive of her wish to stay with her husband, and that on Mr. Clay asking her what she would say if taken before the Supreme Court, she said, "What I state here I would state there." Mr. Stewart, at this, feeling unsatisfied, asked to be permitted to have a private interview, which was refused, when he asked them how it was they allowed it on former occasions, to which Mr. Symonds replied, "We did foolish then, and we must not do so again." Mr. Stewart replied, "What have you to fear, since Lutchmee Ummall has spoken out openly in your favour? if she repeats the same to me in private, I shall abandon the case;" but Mr. Symonds said he was bound to refuse, as legal proceedings were contemplated, and Lutchmee Ummall should have no lawyer but her husband. Mr. Stewart then desired Streenevass to ask her if she wished to speak to him in private; but this he refused, on the advice of Mr. Symonds, as he did not wish him to speak privately to Lutchmee. Mr. Stewart then told them of what had taken place at his former interview; and he also said that, if they did not permit a private interview, he must come to the conclusion that what she said before others she was influenced in, and was not the expression of her own free will, and that he should be obliged to make an affidavit to the judge of what she had formerly told him.

Sir C. Rawlinson, C.J.—You are entitled to a rule Nisi, cause to be shown on Friday. I shall further order that one or two persons, to be approved by us, shall have free access to this woman at any reasonable time during to-morrow, in the absence of the parties, but in the presence of any person they may nominate, who shall report to this Court what her real feelings are.

Mr. D. Shaw (deputy sheriff), and Mr. P. B. Gordon, solicitor, were appointed by the Court, which ordered that they should, at all convenient and reasonable hours, during the course of Thursday, "have free access to Lutchmee Ummall at the house of the Rev. A. R. Symonds, in the absence of the said Rev. A. R. Symonds and A. P. Streenevass, but in the presence of a person to be nominated by them, for the purpose of conversing with the said Lutchmee Ummall."

AUGUST 8.

Mr. Salmon, having seen the Report of Mr. Shaw and Mr. Gordon, and found that Lutchmee Ummall was quite willing to remain, and did not wish to leave Mr. Symonds's house, could not argue that she was unhappy.

The Advocate-General (with whom was Mr. Smyth), on behalf of the husband and Mr. Symonds, said that he appeared to show cause as to costs, upon the affidavits he had, and the Report. He suggested that there was not any ground for the attorney's interference, from first to last. He felt it to be his duty to ask for costs to be paid by the opposing attorney.

The Deputy Clerk of the Crown read the Report made by Mr. Shaw and Mr. Gordon, as follows:—

"In pursuance of an order of this hon. Court, we went to the house of the Rev. Alfred Radford Symonds this day (the 7th day of August), at about noon, and we did then and there, in the presence of the said Rev. A. R. Symonds and A. P. Streenevass, but in the presence of John Clay, a student in the Missionary Seminary under the Rev. A. R. Symonds, nominated by the said Rev. A. R. Symonds, and A. P. Streenevass, converse with Lutchmee Ummall; and that, during such conversation, which lasted about one hour, we ascertained from the said Lutchmee Ummall that she is very willing to remain with her husband, under the care and protection of the Rev. A. R. Symonds; that she is very happy where she now is; that she is not detained against her will, nor is she under any restraint whatever; that she is quite free as to the exercise of her own inclinations; that she has no complaint whatever to make against her husband, the Rev. A. R. Symonds, or any of the inmates of the house in which she is now living; that it has not been her wish or desire that any application whatever should be made to, or steps taken in, this Court to have her removed from the care and protection of her husband; that were she even produced before the Court, she would freely state all these facts; that she was always inclined to remain under the care and protection of her husband, except for two or three days, about a fortnight after she came to the house of the Rev. A. R. Symonds, where she felt unhappy, but ever since that time she has been in the same mind as she now is; that her husband behaves very affectionately towards her, and she is glad at the result of Mr. Justice Burton's decision, in restoring her to her husband, as she has since had an opportunity of judging for herself, without being influenced by any person, and she sincerely declared that she feels very happy and easy in her mind, that she had so determined to remain with her husband, rather than be doomed to a perpetual state of widowhood and misery for the rest of her life; that, if any of her relatives wished to see her, she would be happy to see them, but she has no particular desire to see them, if they do not choose to see her; that she had of her own free will and inclination partaken, and that she still partakes, of food with her husband, and that no attempt whatever was made to force her to partake of food with her husband."

The Advocate-General.—I have to show, in addition to that, by our affidavits, that almost the whole of the affidavits on the other side are unfounded.

The Chief Justice.—Was not the application made on the part of the parents?

The Advocate-General.—No; on the part of Lutchmee Ummall. I had better read the affidavits, and leave it to the consideration of the Court. This motion is not made on the part of the parents, and the Court will look favourably on the attorney, unless it appears that he was not justified in the course he has taken.

Mr. Advocate then read the affidavit of Soobaroyloo, the interpreter of the Court, who stated that he explained to Lutchmee Ummall the contents of her affidavit made herein this day, and that she refused to be sworn on the mint-leaf and water, and declared that she did not consider such mode of swearing to be binding upon her conscience; that she considered that being sworn on the Holy Bible was the only oath binding upon her conscience; that she also refused to be sworn on the Saleegram, in which mode Brahmins are sworn; and declared that she did not consider such last-mentioned mode of being sworn on the Saleegram to be binding on her conscience; and that Lutchmee Ummall having declared that nothing would bind her conscience but being sworn upon the Holy Bible, he administered to her the usual oath upon the Holy Bible, and she was sworn thereon to her said affidavit.

Mr. Advocate then read Lutchmee's affidavit, in which she denied having ever been ill-used either by her husband or Mr. Symonds, and stated that she had always been treated with all possible kindness, and that Mr. and Mrs. Symonds treated her as if they were her parents. She also denied ever having been compelled to take food calculated to forfeit caste, and declared that all she had done had been of her own accord; that she had never been forced to say anything against her will to Mr. Stewart; that she was perfectly happy with her husband, and did not wish to leave him, or to return to the house of her parents; and that she never authorized Mr. Stewart to make the present application. She also denied having ever made signs to her father, in return to his signs, when he came to Mr. Symonds's house. When her mother brought her food she did not accept it, and never made signs to her mother that she wished to be carried away. On one occasion her mother was refused admission to the house, as Streenevass was ill, and she herself did not wish to be disturbed. When she last saw Mr. Stewart, she distinctly made him understand that she wished to remain, and that what she stated to him she would, if taken before the Supreme Court, say the same, and express her gratitude to the Court for sending her to her husband.

The affidavit of Mr. Symonds said, that the reason there was a delay in Mr. Stewart's seeing Lutchmee on the 30th July was, that, when he arrived, they were at prayers, and that afterwards they went to breakfast, at which meal Mr. Stewart partook of a cup of tea; that Lutchmee came to him after she had taken her own breakfast, and that Mr. Stewart observed she was looking quite well and happy, and appeared reconciled, and to have made up her mind to stay, and when Mr. Symonds said what a happy thing it was, and that otherwise she would have been doomed to utter misery and perdition (alluding to the degraded position of a Brahmin widow), Mr. Stewart assented, and said "Yes."

Mr. Clay, in his affidavit, says that, when Mr. Stewart was refused a private interview, he (Mr. Clay) said he did not think he had any locus standi for an application; to which Mr. Stewart replied, he had then been given a locus standi, by the refusal of a private interview, and that he must consider what she had said before him that day she had not said of her own free will.

An affidavit of a Mrs. Fanny Russel, residing in Mr. Symonds's house, deposed that she understands Tamil, and never heard Lutchmee complain of ill-usage; that she was always provided with means of maintaining her caste, and voluntarily and of her own accord she took food prepared by pariahs; and that, when her relatives visited her, she always refused the food brought by them, on the ground that she had already taken food and did not need it.

Sir C. Rawlinson.—We have both thought it highly advantageous to permit this case to proceed, even though on the question of costs, because character will be involved in this discussion, and from there having been many false reports about it. We are willing to admit that unsuccessful parties, and parties bringing irregular motions, ought to pay costs, but not so in this case; so far from Mr. Stewart or any of the parties deserving blame, the public are indebted to them for again bringing this case before the Court. Whatever may have been the cause in June or July, or whatever was the mind of the girl, he was perfectly satisfied that she was now acting of her own free will and accord. Rule discharged, without costs.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE COLLECTORATE OF MASULIPATAM.—The following paragraph appears in the Madras Spectator: "Last Friday's Gazette (Aug. 1) implied, what is unhappily a fact, that the collector of Masulipatam and his head assistant had been removed from their appointments, for alleged dereliction of duty, in connection, as we learn, with frauds practised in the salt department of that district. The following gentlemen have been nominated to succeed them: T. D. Lushington, Esq., to be collector and magistrate; E. W. Bird, Esq., to be special assistant to the collector and magistrate. We deeply regret to hear of this painful affair, but are glad that neglect alone is attributed to the removed parties."

LIEUT. IMPEY.—The Maulmain Chronicle does not wonder at the catastrophe of Lieut. Impey, whose extravagant style of living brought him to the dogs. He ordered a hundred dozens of beer on the occasion of a Burmese nautch, all of which, as the editor laments with much feeling, was drunk on the premises. It ought to be a source of universal regret, that good tipple should have been consumed to such an extent, by niggers, who must have been unable to appreciate its value.—Athenæum, Aug. 19.

SMALL CAUSE COURT.—The experiment [of Sir William Burton, for dispensing cheap law to the inhabitants of Madras, has been so successful that it is given up by his lordship. The learned judge, when he promised to supply the public with a better article than could be obtained in the Small Cause Court, had no idea that the demand would be so great, betraying in that respect, a little ignorance of human nature. Suitors like to get the utmost worth of their money, and if justice of administered in the Supreme Court at the same rates of cost, it is pretty certain that but few would care to resort to the inferior tribunal. The judge who is paid about Rs. 4000 a month, is presumed to be an abler person than the functionary who only gets a fourth of that sum. Besides, the decisions of the latter may be over-ruled, whilst the verdict of the other is final. It is no wonder then that Sir William Burton has broken down, overwhelmed by the weight of popular estimation. The Spectator congratulates the public upon the fact that the chief justice has agreed to assist his colleague in adjudicating cases, where the claim is for more than a hundred rupees; but the service is not a very meritorious one. The average number of such suits is about 2-5 per cent. of the whole amount brought into court, so that it is hardly worth while to keep up a separate establishment of clerks for that purpose; and we think that if Messrs. Burgess, Rose, and Fullerton, are competent to deal out justice to more than ninety-seven persons out of the hundred, they may be safely intrusted with the legal interests of the remaining fraction. It requires as much learning and intellect to decide a suit for fifty rupees, as are needed in cases brought to recover double that sum. The division of labour, to be useful, should be made with reference to the number of suits, and not according to their nature or value.—Athenæum, Aug. 16.

ROHILLAS IN THE DECCAN.—Brigadier Mayne has only fulfilled the expectations entertained of him when his appointment to the Nizam's army was notified. The irregular cavalry were sent out to capture a band of lawless Rohillas, who were advancing towards Sholapoor. The troops went twenty miles at a hand gallop, and came so suddenly on the ruffians, before they had any warning of the approach of the suwars, that they all, on being thus surprised and surrounded, immediately laid down their arms and sued for quarter. One hundred and twenty of these ruffians have been brought into Mominabad in safe custody.—Spectator, Aug. 13.

A MOST UNUSUAL SCENE was witnessed whilst the troops were at brigade exercise under Major-Gen. Aitchison, on the 21st July, which we fear will lead to a Court Martial on a Captain of H.M.'s 25th K. O. B. The circumstances of the case, as related to us, stand as follow. The captain having committed some error in wheeling his company, it was observed by the general, who asked him why he did not follow the movements of the leading corps (for the time being, the 21st N.I.), and ordered him to do so. Twice this order was given, and twice the captain repeated the order (in an interrogative style) after the major-general, as we think, not quite understanding it, and irresolute how to act; but Gen. Aitchison attributed it to a different cause, and a third time ordered him to do it, annexing a rough, harsh, and very hasty expression,—one which no gentleman would tamely listen to from an equal, or calmly bear from a superior. No sooner did the offensive words reach the captain's ears than he returned his sword, and commenced leaving the field. The general ordered him to fall in, but he declined doing so. Gen. Aitchison then rode up to him, and asked him if he refused to obey his orders, and on answering again that he "declined falling in," he was told to consider himself under arrest, and remains so still.—Bangalore Herald.

NATIVE JURORS.

At the trial of Dorabjee Hormusjee and Lalldass Wittuldass, at the criminal sessions, on the 11th July, for robbing the Oriental Bank, when the judge (Sir W. Yardley) had summed up the evidence, the jury (including three natives) retired, and after an absence of half an hour returned into court, when the foreman (Mr. John Macfarlane) declared that the jury had agreed, with the exception of the two Parsee jurors, Cursetjee Manockjee and Limjee Jamsetjee, who held out, as they believed, against reason. The judge said, the jury must be unanimous. The case was entirely in their hands, and all reasoning must be in the jury-room. The prisoners were in charge of the jury, and must be delivered by their verdict. The two Parsee jurors both rose to explain themselves; and Cursetjee Manockjee addressed the judge in broken English:—"Some European people of the jury speak to us bad words:—we tell a doubt for the prisoners, that they are perhaps not guilty, because it is not proved that they themselves robbed. Some of the Europeans of the jury have insulted to us, and said, Parsees not know common language, and knew nothing; and so I gave opinion."

Sir W. Yardley.—"I cannot listen to this, gentlemen. I would recommend you to remember that you have sworn a solemn oath to find a verdict according to your conscience upon the evidence."

The Juror.—"I have taken swear, and for that reason I take date myself. I do not understand whether the robbery took place between them or not, and I have a little doubt."

The Judge.—"Gentlemen, you had better retire again to your room, and deliberate further upon your verdict. I shall remain here for one hour, and if in that time your verdict should be ready, I will receive it; if not, I must then resign you to the care of the bailiff, and shall feel it my duty to direct that you be locked up for the night. If you will state any legal point on which your doubts rest, I will explain that point, if it is one on which I can address you."

The Juror.—"I have no command of tongue, and therefore I wish to have an interpreter. I can explain my feelings better through an interpreter."

The Hindoo interpreter having been called, the juror explained to him the cause of his and his friend's dissension from the other jurors, which arose from fanciful doubts as to the guilt of the Parsee prisoner; for example, he supposed that the stolen notes found upon Dorabjee might have been thrown by somebody into his house.

The judge very carefully and minutely pointed out the parts of the evidence which refuted the juror's suppositions, observing at the conclusion, that "there never was a case in which might not have been suggested the chance of perjury on the part of some of the witnesses, or some other fanciful means on which to find a verdict contrary to their evidence. I recommend you, if you value your peace of mind, and the solemn oath you have taken, not to allow any feeling of partiality to the prisoners, or either of them, to weigh on your minds in the execution of the very solemn duty you have undertaken."

The jury retired again for a few minutes, after which they returned a verdict of guilty against both prisoners.

A writer in the Bombay Telegraph relates some curious "anecdotes of a Bombay jury-room;" we extract the following, as a specimen:—

"After the trial of a Parsee for stealing certain Government property, the evidence had been so conclusive, and the property having been found in the man's possession, the jury was rather startled at finding that one or two of their number wished to retire. Retire they did, and the following dialogue was held in the jury-room.

"European Juror.—'Well, friend Cowasjee; what part of the evidence strikes you as inconclusive, or calculated to throw a doubt upon the matter?'

"Parsee Juror.—'Government people all dam rascal. This man good family. What for make tricks?'

"E. J.—'Yes, Cowasjee; but the evidence is perfectly conclusive: all the ingenuity of counsel could not shake it; and the property was found in the man's possession. What can we say to that?'

"P. J.—'Government fellow dam rogue—can't make im guilty.'

"This style of reasoning continued for some time, and all seemed prepared to settle down for the night. There were two refractory jurymen, and, in defiance of all reason, they appeared determined to hold sulkily out. When all seemed to be given up as hopeless, the European juror again drew up to his recalcitrant friend, and said, in a careless kind of way, 'O, by the way, Cowasjee, perhaps it will be better to hold out, and not to agree upon our verdict. Do you recollect that, during the trial, several of the witnesses swore that two other Parsees were with the prisoners when he committed the robbery? Why were not those two men apprehended? Will it not be better for the ends of justice that you two hold out, and let the prisoner and his two accomplices be tried and transported next sessions?' This operated like an electric shock. 'Let go,' says Cowasjee; 'better make guilty. One man go, then that better. What can do?'

The LONDON MAIL of July 24, arrived at Bombay on August the 23rd, and was followed by the later mail of August 7th, which was off Bombay on Sept. 1st.

FRAUDS IN THE OPIUM AGENT'S OFFICE.—It is commonly, and we have reason to believe correctly, reported, that extensive frauds have been discovered in the opium agent's office at this place, which appear to have been committed some years ago, and have only now been discovered. They amount to nearly seven lacs of rupees, rather a serious amount in one item of the public revenue. We believe the total amount paid into the opium agent's office here is about 80 or 90 lacs of rupees annually. The establishment consists of the collector of customs, who receives Rs. 1,000 a month as opium agent; his deputy receives 450 Rs.; a head purvoo Rs. 100, and an underwriter Rs. 30; total Rs. 1,580 a month. A very large amount of money received on account of opium is by native bondies on Mah-warries and others in Bombay. Those bondies are usually payable after thirty days' sight, or after so many days' date, and their proceeds are realized by the native employes. This matter cannot very well be attended to by the collector of customs, but the money when received should be paid into the general treasury, and a voucher signed by the opium agent to certify that it has been. It appears that some of those vouchers, actually signed, have no corresponding representatives on the files or in the books of the general treasury. It further appears that bondies for large amounts have been allowed to remain overdue for longer or shorter periods, and the interest paid by the acceptor has found its way into the wrong purse. In short, the details appear simple enough, and when we take into consideration the vast sums of money which have passed through the opium agent's office within the last ten years, and the opportunities which there must have been for realizing, we are not astonished at the amount of defalcation, though we may be a little surprised at the length of time it has been undiscovered.—Telegraph, Aug. 19.

THE NEW SMALL COURTS are still in abeyance, pending a reference we believe to the Supreme Government. What the nature of this reference is exactly we cannot say.—the following, however, is believed to be the substance of it:—The appointment of chief judge must be filled by a barrister; it has been offered to the whole of the gentlemen of the Bombay bar successively, who have all refused to accept it at the salary offered, Rs. 1,200 per month. Mr. W. Crawford, however, has agreed to accept office at a salary of Rs. 1,500, the stipend allowed to the chief judge of the Calcutta Small Cause Court.—Ibid.

THE REWARD of Rs. 10,000, offered by the Oriental Bank to the discoverer of the parties by whom were committed the late robberies at the Oriental Bank, has been given to Moonshee Ali Achar, the interpreter to Sir C. Napier throughout the whole of the Punjab war.—Ibid.

CAPTAIN HAWKINS.—We regret to have to record the death at Bombay, on the night of the 25th August, of Captain John Croft Hawkins, assistant superintendent of the Indian Navy, which occurred under very deplorable circumstances, the unfortunate gentleman having been thrown out of his curriole and killed on the spot. The night was very dark and boisterous, with heavy rain, and the lights on the esplanade having gone out, he could not see his way distinctly: one of the wheels of the curriole having got upon the low wall, which rises as it is carried on towards the fort at the Apollo Gate, caused the vehicle to overturn. Immediate assistance was rendered, from the fort, but the unfortunate gentleman was dead before it reached,—the concussion caused by his being thus violently thrown from the curriole having in all probability ruptured a blood-vessel on the brain. A Coroner's inquest was held during the day on the body, when the jury found a verdict of "Accidental death." The funeral took place on the evening of the 26th, and was attended by all the principal residents on the island. Captain Hawkins had attained the age of fifty-five years, during thirty-nine of which he had been employed in the Indian Navy, of which service he had for several years past been the senior officer in India. He was commodore of the Persian Gulf squadron when the death of the late Sir Robert Oliver made him for a time acting superintendent of the Indian Navy,—an office he continued to hold until relieved by Commodore Lushington in February, 1849: he then became flag-captain of the port, and afterwards assistant superintendent, both which appointments he continued to hold up to the time of his decease. He was a man of great simplicity and benevolence of character and kindness of disposition, and the suddenness of his removal from amongst us, especially when conjoined with the melancholy accident attending it, will form the subject of deep and general regret to the community.—Bomb. Times, Sept. 1.

At the inquest nothing was elicited to show the real cause of death, which we are inclined to attribute to a sudden attack of apoplexy, a disease not unexpected by his medical advisers. Some years ago, while in the Persian Gulf, Commodore Hawkins was frequently afflicted with sudden and severe affections, which, on one or two occasions, threatened a termination to his existence; and a few days before his death he complained to his physician of certain sensations of oppression and giddiness in the head, with other faint apoplectic symptoms. On Monday evening (Aug. 25), he dined, apparently in robust health and in high spirits, with two friends, Major French and Captain Parr, the former of whom he drove in his curriole to Government House at Parell, where the Viscountess Falkland held the first reception of the season. After the ceremonials of the evening were concluded, the Commodore drove his friend back to his residence upon the Esplanade, and thence started in the direction of his own house in Colaba. No more was seen of him until his body was found lifeless and underneath his curriole, which had been capsized by the horses running against a bank some 300 yards out of his way.—Telegraph, Sept. 1.

THE BOMBAY STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY, under able and energetic management, and at some sacrifice to the shareholders, has at last been brought into a promising and active state. A large sum has been written off the capital of the firm, equal to one-fifth of the whole of the sums paid up on the shares; and by this means the Company have been able to declare a dividend of Rs 24 per share.—Telegraph, Sept. 1.

SIR R. SHAKESPEAR AND CAPT. CLOSE.—The Governor-General of India has marked his displeasure with the conduct of Sir Richard Shakespear, with reference to the court martial brought by him against Capt. Close, commanding 2nd regiment, cavalry—by his removal to Joudpour.—Ibid.

DEATH OF ASSIST. SURG. BALLANTINE.—We regret to have to announce the death, on Monday morning at the presidency, of Assist. Surg. Thomas Ballantine, 29th N.I. The deceased gentleman entered the service in Jan. 1844. He served with the 2nd Scinde Horse during the siege and capture of Mooltan in Dec. 1849 and Jan. 1849; was present at the battle of Goojrat on the 21st Feb. same year; accompanied the Bombay column of the army in the pursuit of Shere Singh's force, and was present at the time of their surrender: was also engaged with the same force in the occupation of Peshawur and pursuit of the Affghan army into the Khyber Pass, for which services he, in common with the whole of those who shared in them, received a medal and two bars. He had been ailing for some time, and only arrived in Bombay from Surat on Saturday for change, and with the intention of proceeding home so soon as sufficiently recovered to be able to undertake the voyage. The deceased was a most gentlemanly man, and was held in high estimation by his brother officers.—Bom. Times, Aug. 27.

DEATH OF C. G. PRENDERGAST, ESQ.—It is with much regret we have to announce the death of Charles George Prendergast, Esq., C. S., collector and magistrate of Broach, which occurred at that station on the 16th August. The deceased gentleman came to India in May 1831: in 1846 he appears to have proceeded home on furlough, and returned in February 1849. He was appointed to the collectorship of Broach in May of the present year, in succession to Mr. J. M. Davies, appointed to Surat: he was greatly esteemed by all to whom he was known, as a man of sterling worth and uprightness of character, and his death will be deeply lamented by them.—Bom. Times, Aug. 23.

BRIBERY.—Letters received by our Colaba cotemporary from Baroda state "that Nursoo Punt, late native agent to the residency, and at present dutifardar to the collector of Ahmedabad, has been found guilty of accepting bribes from friends of Hurree Bhuttee to the extent of upwards of Rs. 20,000—the recompense of false representations of the petition of the Settanee Joetabhooy to the resident, who was by this means misled altogether as to her wrongs. He has besides this been convicted of receiving Rs. 28,000 for having stolen the Settanee's child, and the commissioner has likewise discovered the misappropriation of Rs. 60,000, expended, as it is supposed, in bribes in Bombay. The commissioner is understood to have forwarded to Bombay a list of queries, which he desires the Government to put to various parties here, whose names have come before them."—Telegraph, Sept. 1.

MR. WILLUGHBY.—Upwards of £1,200 have been subscribed towards a testimonial to Mr. Willoughby, late member of the Council at this Presidency, and it has been entrusted to a committee formed for that purpose. £300 of this sum will be disposed of in the purchase of a service of plate to be presented to that gentleman. The remainder will be invested in Government paper, and the interest yearly given to the Educational Society here, to be disposed of as the manager of that society shall think best adapted to carry out their objects.—Ibid.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

PROMOTION TO SUPERINTENDING SURGEONCIES.

Bombay Castle, Aug. 8, 1851.—The following extracts of a despatch from the Hon. Court of Directors, dated June 11, 1851, are published by direction of the Governor in Council:—

"By the present rules of the service, a surgeon returning from sick certificate to England, although senior to a surgeon appointed in his absence to be a superintending-surgeon, must wait for a vacancy before he can be selected for the office of superintending-surgeon; but it was certainly never intended that, as a consequence of his having been temporarily absent from the loss of health, he should be permanently deprived of his standing in the service. If, therefore, a surgeon is qualified for promotion to the office of superintending-surgeon on a vacancy, we consider that, immediately on promotion, he should be placed amongst the superintending-surgeons, according to the date of his commission as surgeon, and that if, in consequence of the return from England of a senior who was entitled to resume his position, it became necessary that one of the superintending-surgeons should revert to the position of surgeon, the junior, and not the senior, in the service, should be the one to be so displaced.

"Superintending-surgeoncies and memberships of the medical board are declared to be staff appointments, in order that our governments may have the power of selecting medical officers to fill them, but in other respects those appointments have a distinctive character peculiar to the medical service. This distinction we are anxious to maintain; as otherwise the succession of well-qualified men to the higher appointments in the medical service, the only appointments open to them in the line of their profession, would be made dependent on accidents over which they have no control."

SINGAPORE.

PIRACY.—By information from Pinang we learn that piracy is flourishing on the coast of Sumatra. A fleet of prahus is said to have been committing great devastation among the Delhi and other boats trading to Pinang. It is asserted that these harmless characters carry passes from his Highness the Tumongong of Johore! The Rajah of Batu Barrah, near Assahan, lately sent information to Pinang that these prahus put in at that place, but having these passes they were not obstructed. The Chinese traders in Pinang confirm this statement, and say that several prahus have been taken and lives lost, and that the marauders were armed with passes from the Tumongong. This is a serious charge, and we have no doubt the Government will cause a searching investigation to be made.

The Chinese pirates would appear to be still plying their trade with briskness on the east coast of the Malay Peninsula. The Rajah of Tringanu has just forwarded a communication to the authorities here, in which he says that he has sent three of his people to give information of the numerous piracies committed by Chinese junks on the seas and rivers of Tringanu. He says, "These Chinese pretend to be honest and peaceful traders, and enter our ports for the purpose of traffic; but, on getting outside, they commit depredations on the prahus to and from Singapore, of whom several have been taken, some with all the crews killed, and others only wounded. They land, plunder, and destroy our seaports and villages both on the mainland and islands."—Singapore Free Press.

CHINA.

The following letter was addressed by the Superintendent of Trade to the chairman of the Canton British Chamber of Commerce:—

"Victoria, Hong Kong, July 18, 1851.

"Sir,—I am directed by her Majesty's Plenipotentiary, &c., to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 15th instant, relative to the additional duties charged and restrictions imposed upon the tea trade at Canton, by the Chinese authorities, in a proclamation of the district magistrate of Nanhai, dated the 9th of June, 1850.

"From Lord Stanley of Alderley's letter of the 27th of December last, to the address of Mr. Gregson, you have perceived that the question under consideration has for some time formed a subject of discussion between her Majesty's plenipotentiary and the Chinese commissioner, full and detailed reports of which were duly forwarded to her Majesty's Government. I have now to acquaint you that his excellency has again addressed the Imperial Commissioner at Canton, requiring, in the name of her Majesty's Government, that the arrangements contemplated in the proclamation above alluded to should forthwith be put an end to.

"As it may be interesting to the Chamber to know at once the result of this demand on the part of her Majesty's plenipotentiary, I am to state to you that the commissioner is not disposed to abolish the duties, charges, and restrictions complained of. He has, however, undertaken to forward his excellency's note to him on this subject to the Imperial Cabinet at Peking. But Sir George Bonham is of opinion that the reference in question will not have the effect desired, as well by her Majesty's Government as by the British Chamber of Commerce at Canton.

"I have, &c.,

"A. R. JOHNSTON."

Her Majesty's Consul at Canton has addressed the following letter to the Chinese Superintendent of Customs:—

"British Consulate, Canton, July 21, 1851.

"Sir—I have the honour to inform your excellency that, in consequence of instructions received from her Britannic Majesty's Government, and which have been communicated to me by the plenipotentiary, all interference of this consulate in the collection of duties in this port on articles imported or exported will cease from this time forward. I shall regularly announce to your excellency the arrival of every British ship in this port, and shall require the consignees and the captains to deposit in this consulate the ship's papers with the manifest of the cargo, and I shall retain the papers until the grand chop is produced to authorize the ship's departure.

"The situation of the British merchant will, therefore, from this day be that of every other foreign merchant established here, and, like them, he will be expected to arrange his business with your excellency's officers through his own linguist. To any complaints officially made I shall give a prompt and careful attention, asking for my countrymen no exemptions which are not enjoyed by others, but requiring that they shall be subjected to no disadvantages or restrictions which do not equally press upon all.

"I have, &c.

"JOHN BOWRING, H. B. M.'s Consul."

EGYPT.

Alexandria, Sept. 22.—"The Sublime Porte and Abbas Pasha have not yet come to an understanding with respect to the right of the former to impose on Egypt its obnoxious tanzimat, and thus qualify the authority of the Viceroy. Khair-ed-Deen Pasha, one of the delegates of the Viceroy to Constantinople, returned here some days ago, and there have since been several councils convened at Cairo, and the European consuls have also been called into conference, but nothing has as yet transpired to alter the determination of Abbas Pasha to resist the encroachments of the Sultan."—Times Correspondent.

AUSTRALIA.

The area of the gold region, according to the latest advices, appears, upon investigation, to enlarge. The following letter from Sydney, dated June 11th, affords a more satisfactory prospect of the probable effects of the discovery upon the colony than preceding accounts:—

"As regards the gold discoveries, every post from Bathurst confirms not only their extent, but their value. There are now upwards of 3,000 men at the diggings in the Summer Hill-creek, and the gold has been discovered in two or three other localities in the vicinity, in considerable quantities. The miners continue to be very orderly, and cheerfully pay the licences of 30s. per month imposed by Government. The effects of the gold discoveries on the pastoral interests are not likely to be so injurious as was at first apprehended; for as yet we have no instances of shepherds having deserted their flocks and gone to the diggings; nor indeed is it known that the rural population have been affected to any extent by the gold-hunting mania. The 'mines,' up to the present time, have been visited chiefly by mechanics, traders, and such like from this city, and the country towns, many of whom have since returned, having soon found out that the occupation of gold digging is not suited to their tastes or constitutions. There is, however, no doubt that, when the warm weather sets in, many of the pastoral and agricultural labourers will try their luck at the mines, and there may be, for a time, a scarcity of that kind of labour, unless, indeed, the loss in this way will be fully made up by the transfer of large numbers of the population of the neighbouring ports to this colony. Already hundreds are on their way from Port Phillip, and there will doubtless be large numbers from Tasmania, South Australia, and New Zealand. It is also confidently expected by those best able to judge, that the whole of the mining population of South Australia will find its way to our gold fields; and if they do, we are confident their habits and mode of living are more calculated to insure success at gold seeking than those of any other portion of the working population. It is not going beyond reasonable bounds to say, that abundance of labour and gold will engender a degree of prosperity in this colony quite beyond all previous calculations."

It appears that Mr. E. H. Hargraves, by whom the discovery was made, travelled over the district about sixteen years ago, when the scenery, and to a limited extent the geological features, of the country made an impression on his mind. Latterly he visited California, and while in the gold regions of that country was struck with their resemblance to the wilderness which he had seen in Australia so many years before. A resistless desire to return and explore for gold then took possession of him, and he "could not rest until he had satisfied it by a personal search," which he at length accomplished, under difficulties and privations, the result being, according to his words, the disclosure of "unbounded wealth" to his fellow colonists. The Rev. Mr. Clark, a local geologist, has all along contended that not only was the precious metal to be found in that locality, but throughout the principal chain of mountains which belt the Australian continent. It is added, that for some time past, a shepherd named Mc'Gregor had been in the habit of bringing gold to Sydney for sale, who maintained, however, great secrecy respecting whence he gained it.

The Legislative Council of New South Wales, before giving place to the new Legislature established by the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 59, recorded, in the shape of a Protest, their deep disappointment and dissatisfaction at the constitution conferred by that Act on this colony. After a long enumeration of the proceedings of the Imperial Government in reference to the colony, and complaints of the frustration of their reasonable expectations, the exercise of patronage at the nomination of the Colonial Minister without regard to the just claims of the colonists, and the subjection of the most ordinary legislation to the veto of the Colonial Minister, they conclude:—

"Thus circumstanced, we feel that, on the eve of the dissolution of this Council, and as the closing act of our legislative existence, no other course is open to us but to enter on our journals our declaration, protest, and remonstrance, as well against the Act of Parliament itself (13 & 14 Vict. c. 59) as against the instructions of the Minister, by which the small power of retrenchment that Act confers on the Colonial Legislature has been thus overridden; and to bequeath the redress of the grievances which we have been unable to effect by constitutional means to the Legislative Council by which we are about to be succeeded.

"We, the Legislative Council of New South Wales, do accordingly hereby solemnly protest, insist, and declare as follows:—

"1. That the Imperial Parliament has not, nor of right ought to have, any power to tax the people of this colony, or to appropriate any of the moneys levied by authority of the Colonial Legislature; that this power can only be lawfully exercised by the Colonial Legislature; and that the Imperial Parliament has solemnly disclaimed this power by the 18 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 1, which Act remains unrepealed.

"2. That the revenue arising from the public lands, derived as it is 'mainly' from the value imparted to them by the labour and capital of the people of this colony, is as much their property as the ordinary revenue, and ought therefore to be subject only to the like control and appropriation.

"3. That the customs and all other departments should be subject to the direct supervision and control of the Colonial Legislature; which should have the appropriation of the gross revenues of the colony, from whatever source arising; and, as a necessary incident to this authority, the regulation of the salaries of all colonial officers.

"4. That offices of trust and emolument should be conferred only on the settled inhabitants, the office of governor alone excepted; that this officer should be appointed and paid by the Crown; and that the whole patronage of the colony should be vested in him and the Executive Council, unfettered by instructions from the Minister for the Colonies.

"5. That plenary powers of legislation should be conferred upon and exercised by the Colonial Legislature for the time being; and that no bills should be reserved for the signification of her Majesty's pleasure, unless they affect the prerogative of the Crown, or the general interests of the empire.

"Solemnly protesting against these wrongs, and declaring and insisting upon these our undoubted rights, we leave the redress of the one and the assertion of the other to the people whom we represent, and the Legislature which shall follow us."

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

The Honolulu papers state that the two houses of parliament (!) were formally opened by the king in person on the 6th of May, at the large stone church in Honolulu. Referring to the relations of the Sandwich Islands Government with France, the king said that diplomatic relations had not been fully restored; that he had referred certain claims for indemnity to the President of the French Republic, who, he hoped, would issue such instructions as would put an end to an attitude of hostility on the part of France, which the king had not sought, and had not retaliated. "My friendly relations with Great Britain," he added, "are uninterrupted, and with the United States, continue of the most friendly kind. With all other states my relations are friendly." After references to certain treaties and other matters, the king recommends increased attention to agriculture; the markets of California, Oregon, Vancouver's Island, &c., affording a profitable outlet for more than the island can produce. Sanitary regulations are recommended, in view of the revival of the cholera in ports trading with the Sandwich Islands; and the revenue is declared to be, though small, more than sufficient for the wants of the Government, and it leaves a surplus for purposes of internal improvement.

The speech was delivered in the Hawaiian language, and afterwards read in English, for the benefit of the foreign ministers present.

A communication from an official source states that, by order of Lord Palmerston, the draught of a new commercial treaty with Great Britain had been submitted to the Hawaiian Government which had given great satisfaction.

The trading prosperity of the islands was steadily increasing, and the number of foreigners who had taken the oath of allegiance during the past year was 151, of whom 69 were natives of the United States, 37 of Great Britain, 12 of China, and 4 of France. The remainder were from various other countries of Europe, Asia, and South America.

There are at present in the Sandwich Islands 441 Protestant schools, with 12,949 scholars, and 102 Roman Catholic, with 2,359 scholars: total number of schools, 543; of scholars, 15,308. The amount paid for teachers' wages in 1850 was 20,680 Drs. The income of the island, for the year ending March 31, 1851, was 330,546 Drs.; the expenditure, 250,707 Drs.

COREA.

NARRATIVE OF THE LOSS OF THE FRENCH WHALER "NARWAL" (continued from p. 523).—The independent tone adopted towards the general, whose name was Le, had the designed effect of reducing his boisterous manner into the most deferential attention. Nevertheless they did not succeed in accomplishing the object of their visit. To repeated inquiries as to the name of the country, the island, and locality, the replies were "Tchaou-sin" (their pronunciation of the name of Corea in Chinese), and Ying-chow-san, the name of the locality; while Tsee-chow, the name of the Quelpart Island, as the visitors believed, they were told lay some hundreds of lee to the eastward.

Their host, after some time, ordered a repast to be spread, consisting of boiled rice, dried fish, slices of beef, vegetables, seaweed, and sea-slug, accompanied by samshoo, and a beverage tasting like cider. The whole was served up on small tables, of about fifteen inches in altitude (a convenient height for the posture of the natives), in bowls made of a mixture of brass and tutenague apparently, with small flat dishes of common earthenware; the chopsticks were of the same metal, and flat in shape.

They were now prepared to return on board ship, having arranged that the general should visit them on the morrow. He was a man of middle stature, olive complexion, features somewhat sharp, his eyes resembling the Japanese more than Chinese, his look intelligent and penetrating. His hands and feet were small; his hair was dressed in a knot on the top of the head, and secured by a broad band of delicate network, of black silk and hair. His hat, a light fabric, was composed of the fine outer fibres of the bamboo, woven into a gauze, the rim about two feet in diameter; the cone rising to nine inches, having a diameter at the truncated vertex of three inches, peacock's feathers being attached in a kind of swivel, forming a graceful head-dress. He had two necklaces or collars, one of large ultra-marine blue balls, apparently of porcelain; the other, fastened behind the left ear and crossing the breast, was composed of long tubular pieces, about a quarter of an inch in diameter by two inches in length, tapering at the extremes, and apparently amber; his personal dress consisted of a fine loose shirt of grass cloth, trousers and stockings in one, of white nankeen, and leathern boots of very neat workmanship, in the loose Wellington style, the upper part being of a black velvet; a loose tunic of open texture, approaching to coarse grass cloth or muslin, having the cuffs lined and turned up with scarlet silk, confined by a broad sash of blue at the waist, completed the house-dress. His hat-strings were made of fine white twilled Manchester cotton cloth. Such articles must reach the Coreans by their northern frontier, from Niew-chwang, in Leaou-tung, to which place considerable quantities are sent from Shanghai direct, in part payment for the bulky produce thence imported.

On their return on board, they lay at single anchor. About one in the morning, a most violent gale from E. S. E., accompanied by a cold and cutting rain, drove the vessel fast down upon Eden Island. All hands were on deck in a few moments, and the best anchor was let go; still she dragged, till the black rocks were frowning close. At this time the Shanghai pilot came on deck; he went to the stern, and, stamping on the deck, broke out in frantic cries, "Cut the cable, or we'll all die!" The sail was three fourths up, the lorchs quivering in every timber as it shook in the gale, and the mast in all probability would have given way, being so poorly supported by stays. But it became evident that, on cutting the cable, so light a vessel would rapidly surge to leeward, and ere the sails could draw her forward, would have struck on the rocks. The wind, which at first drove her down upon the sandy bay, changing a little, ultimately they were drifted near the south-east point of Eden Island, where a reef of rocks, a few feet above water, ended in an overhanging bluff head, about eighty feet high. From the reef three jagged pyramidal rocks shot up about thirty feet each. Luckily, the means of cutting the cables were not to be found, when the sail was hauled down, and the last inch of cable given. The strain was great, but she held her ground. The storm had reached its height, when shortly after lights were observed moving on the shore.

Next day, a note was sent on shore to the general, desiring him to visit them on board; but the messenger found he had left the tent for his fort. Towards the dusk, the wind, which was now from the south-west, increased to a gale, and blew hard, with a driving rain; but, as on the previous night, the gale was of short duration. Towards morning of Sunday, 27th April, the wind abated; but a tempestuous sea still rolled in.

A large boat appeared this forenoon, and succeeded at last in embarking the general and the other officials waiting on the rocks to come off, the boat being propelled by two great sculls, and full of men. The general, a chehëen, or district magistrate, with four others, and two subordinates, were "bundled on board," and their boat was sent astern.

From these officials they could extract little information; their sole object was to hasten their departure from the island. With the demand for a pilot they declared compliance was impossible, and would cost them their heads. They were treated to a dejeuner à la fourchette; but most of them, as the vessel was rolling heavily, soon began to feel the horrors of sea-sickness. The general was particularly affected. This state of things, perhaps, hastened their acceding to the demand for a pilot; and they transferred four of the boat's crew, with one of the secretaries; after which they took their departure.

The weather had now cleared up, and, with a fine, fresh, northerly breeze, the vessel again left the anchorage, and stood along the west coast of the island, to the southward, about half a mile from the shore. The sea was dark-coloured to the very shore, which was rocky, but not lofty, the hills in the interior rising in a gradual series to the loftiest range, an altitude of 6,500 feet. Their Korean pilots seemed to enjoy the sail, and divided their attention between the biscuits, &c. and the various, well-known objects which rapidly passed in succession along the coast. Under the south-west head, a lofty rocky bluff, rising perpendicularly from the water, they were a short time becalmed; but, gradually rounding the head, they opened up the south coast of the island, and, tacking in shore, anchored about half a mile from a fine sandy beach. The panorama was imposing. On their left was the bold head recently passed, its black rocks mingled with several masses of ironstone; before them a hill, extending nearly to the beach, bold, rugged, and nearly perpendicular on three sides, towered up to a height of about 600 feet, its flattened top, and bleak sides of grey basalt, standing out in strong relief, against the sylvan ranges and conical-shaped hills which skirted the vale behind; while on the right the sandy bay terminated at the distance of a few miles in another headland, rising like a vast wall sheer out of the water, and behind which the mountains rose to the highest summit on the island.

The sun was now well down; the blue smoke ascended in curling wreaths from the hamlets in the valley, inviting them to land. Several natives appeared on the beach as they disembarked, but offered no molestation, and they had proceeded beyond the sandy ridges which skirted the beach, when the alarm was given that the Coreans were driving away their sampan, the head men writing on the sand how very strictly their country was prohibited to strangers. They persevered in their walk, and passed several fields whose borders were marked by dikes of stone. At dusk they returned on board.

In the evening they shewed a manuscript chart of Corea to the secretary, who was a pleasant and intelligent man. They had now anchored off Tai-tsing district, the island being divided into three districts,—Tsee-chow on the north, where the chief town is situated, and Tsing-ye towards the south-east, being the other two.

The pilots had finished a bottle of whisky; the secretary, who had received a good share, for his voice was rather husky, wrote gravely, "your distilled spirit is very good, and we request some more of it." They quaffed off the fiery spirit like water, and would have finished a bottle each man.

Next morning, 28th April, they started on various excursions on shore. Two of the party tried to ascend the steep hill near the shore, but so abrupt and precipitous were its sides, that after several attempts at different places, they failed. Iron seemed to abound in the neighbourhood, and the sea-beach under the hill was at one place composed of a conglomerate in which iron formed the chief ingredient. The fields in the uplands contained young crops of wheat and barley, while the plough, a miserable implement, like the Chinese, was at work preparing the low grounds for rice. As they passed by a village, the men would run and point to them to go the other way; but finding they invariably acted just contrary to such directions, they contented themselves with shouting to their women to retire, as the barbarians were at hand. They saw many female heads peeping over the dikes; but they were evidently not given to lave their limbs in the crystal floods.

In the forenoon, one of the party was deputed to go on shore to a part of the beach where the Tai-tsing magistrate, the general protector, and many more officials, had assembled to deliver the supplies to be provided. He was furnished with various articles to be given in payment, pieces of cottons, &c., which the dignitaries received with a show of indifference; but when half a dozen bottles of the famous foreign spirit were presented, their satisfaction knew no bounds. The wind now blew from the south; the anchors were got up, and the little bark pursued her way for the Amherst Isles.

At the last celebration of Ramazan, at Madras, certain of the faithful were under the influence of the fermented juice of the palm tree. It appears that recent enlightened Mahometan commentators have discovered that the prohibition of Mahomet refers merely to red wine, and does not include pale champagne—much less toddy, which is not wine at all, and nowhere spoken ill of in the Koran.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

The following genuine Eastern tale will present a strong contrast to the spurious attempts at Oriental fictions referred to in the last number. It is found in a celebrated Indian collection, originally written in Sanscrit, entitled Vatāla Panchavinsati, which has been translated into Hindee, under the title of Belāl-Pachisi, and also into Tamul, under that of Vedūla Cadai. All these designations imply the same thing, namely, "Tales of a Vampire or Demon,"—a malevolent being, supposed to haunt cemeteries, and to reanimate corpses. The collection has been rendered into English from the Hindee, but we borrow from a version by M. Lancereau, in the Journal Asiatique, the subjoined story (in an abridged form), which is supposed to be related by ademon to the renowned king Vicrama :—

There was a king of Benares, named Pratapamukuta, who had a son, whose name was Vijramukuta. This young prince, having set out upon a hunting party, taking with him the son of the minister, penetrated to a great distance in a forest, and came upon a beautiful lake, covered with wild fowl. Baths were built upon the borders of the lake, upon whose surface the lotus blossomed, whilst trees of various kinds, vocal with the song of many birds, cast a grateful shade around. The prince and his companion, perceiving a temple of Mahadeva, secured their horses, and, entering it, performed their devotions.

Whilst they were thus employed, a princess, accompanied by attendants, came to bathe on the other side of the lake, and, having completed her bath, and concluded her meditations and prayers, she walked with her suite under the cool shadow of the trees.

The minister's son laid himself down to rest, whilst the prince, wandering about, suddenly came in view of the princess, whose beauty ravished him. "O wicked Kama," he exclaimed, "why do you torment me?" The princess, at the sight of the stranger, took a lotus-flower, which after her devotions she had attached to her head-dress, and having first put it to her ear, bit it with her teeth, and threw it under her feet; she then took it up again, and, placing it in her bosom, retired with her attendants.

The prince, in an ecstasy of love and despair, sought his companion, to whom he related the adventure, adding, "If I do not obtain this charming creature, who is entirely unknown to me, I shall die." The minister's son urged him to mount his horse, and hurried him home. There the prince became absorbed in grief; he could neither write, nor read, nor eat, nor drink, nor sleep; he was indifferent to everything, neglecting business, and incessantly drawing portraits of the young beauty who had captivated him, which he bedewed with his tears.

The son of the minister, noticing the sad condition of the prince, inquired whether the damsel had spoken to him, or whether he had said anything to her? "Neither," the prince replied. "It will be very difficult, then," observed his friend, "to discover her." "If I do not," said the prince, "I cannot live." "Did she make any sign or gesture?" asked the minister's son. "She merely," replied the prince, "took from her head a lotus flower, held it to her ear, then bit it, flung it on the ground, and, taking it up, placed it in her bosom." "I understand her signs," returned the other, "and can collect from them who she is, her name, and place of residence. In taking the flower from her head, and putting it to her ear, she wished to make you understand that she dwelt in Carnātaca; in biting it, she implied that she was the daughter of king Dantavāta; in casting it beneath her feet, she meant you to know that her name was Padmāvatī, and by depositing it in her bosom, she told you that you had taken possession of her heart." "Lead me," said the delighted Vijramukuta, "oh lead me to her!"

They mounted their horses, took their arms, provided themselves with jewels, and, departing for Carnātaca, in a few days reached the capital. Near the palace, they observed an old woman sitting sewing at her door, to whom they represented that they were merchants, who had left their commodities on the road to seek a lodging. She received them kindly, and offered her own house, which they accordingly entered, and, engaging in conversation, the old lady informed them that her son was in the service of the king, and that she had been the nurse of his daughter, Padmāvatī, whom she visited every day. The prince was overjoyed at this intelligence. "To-morrow," said he, "when you see the princess, will you deliver her a message from me?" "Why wait until to-morrow?" she asked; "give me your message, and I will carry it at once." "Tell her, then," said the prince, "that the stranger, who is a king's son, she beheld on the border of a lake, on the fifth day of the light half of the moon Jetha, has arrived here."

The old woman took a staff and hobbled to the palace. Finding the princess alone, after bestowing her benediction, she said, "Daughter, I have nursed you since the time when you were an infant; you are now a woman. The desire of my heart is to see you happy. The prince, whom you captivated on the border of the lake the fifth day of the light half of Jetha, is now residing at my house, and he has charged me to announce to you his arrival. I assure you he is worthy of you, and has as much merit as you have beauty."

At these words, the princess, with an appearance of anger, taking some sandal in her hands, slapped the old woman's face, calling her an old wretch, and telling her to begone. The poor creature, in great distress, returned to the prince, and related the manner in which his message had been received. He was confounded; but the minister's son assured him he need feel no anxiety. "You do not comprehend what all this means," he said. "By taking sandal with her ten fingers, and striking the old woman on the face therewith, she intended to say that, when the ten last days of the moon have expired, she will see you." At that time, the old woman went again to the palace, to inquire, on the part of the prince, after the health of Padmāvatī. The princess, in a passion, led the old woman to the western gate of the palace, and turned her out. She reported this disheartening news, and the prince was again in despair, which was banished when the minister's son expounded the act of the princess as an invitation to him to enter the palace that night by the western gate.

When night came, the two friends proceeded stealthily to the palace; the minister's son remained without the gate, whilst the prince entered, and was received by the princess in a tumult of delight. She conducted him into an apartment luxuriously furnished; vases set with sparkling gems exhaled the richest perfumes; attendants, dressed in gorgeous habits, waited with hands respectfully folded; on one side was a couch of flowers, with vessels of attar; on the other, rich essences in golden cups. The doors and walls were adorned with paintings; in short, the magnificence of the apartment transcended the power of description.

The princess invited the prince to sit, and caused his feet to be washed, his body to be rubbed with sandal-powder, a garland of flowers to be hung on his neck, and rose-water to be sprinkled over him, whilst with her own hand she waved a fan over him. "Your delicate hands," said the prince, "were not made to be thus employed; your presence alone refreshes me." "Nay," returned Padmāvatī, "your visit has honoured me; it is fit that I should wait upon you." The two lovers proceeded to chew betel, and soon engaged in tender conversation.

The princess concealed Vijramukuta in her apartments, and day after day passed in the enjoyment of each other's society, until, at the end of a month, the prince began to be uneasy. He reflected that he had abandoned country and throne, his family, his all, and had not even seen the friend to whose sagacity he owed the success of his adventure. The princess noticed his chagrin, and inquired the cause. "I have a very dear friend," he replied, "the son of my minister, of whom I have not heard for a month; it is by his intelligence and address that I gained access to you; he it was who explained to me your secrets." "Go to him, then," said she, "and present him from me with some rich confections, which I will prepare with my own hand; and when you have seen and consoled him, return to me with a light heart."

The princess mingled a deadly poison with those delicacies, and the prince having rejoined his companion, told him of his adventures, and of the circumstance which prompted the kind present of the princess. "There must be poison in it," said the other; "a woman never loves her lover's friend; you should not have spoken of me." "Impossible!" exclaimed the prince, who cast some of the preparation to a dog. The animal ate it, and died in convulsions.

Vijramukuta was transported with astonishment and indignation. "My lord," said the minister's son, "we must try to get the princess here. Return to her, and act as I tell you. Manifest towards her the utmost love and tenderness, and take an opportunity, when she is asleep, to bring away her jewels, and give her a blow with this trident upon her left leg."

The prince followed these directions, and brought away the jewels, which he gave to his adviser, who, having transformed himself into a yogi (religious ascetic), took up his abode in a cemetery, became a spiritual preceptor, and, choosing the prince as his disciple, said, "Go to the bazar, and sell these jewels; if any one arrests you, bring him to me."

The prince carried the jewels to a dealer who lived near the palace of Dantavāta, and who, on seeing them, recognized them as belonging to the king's daughter. The kotwal was informed, and commanded the prince to be brought before him. "How came you possessed of these jewels?" inquired the magistrate. "My spiritual preceptor employed me to sell them," replied the prince. "Let him be sent for," said the kotwal, who, when he arrived, carried the two suspected parties, with the jewels, to the king. "Master, where did you get these jewels?" said his majesty to the yogi. "Sire," replied the pretended ascetic, "on the fourteenth night of the dark half of the moon, I was in a cemetery, when a witch arrived with these jewels; I took them from her, and I marked her left leg with a trident." The king thereupon proceeded to the female apartments, whilst the yogi squatted upon his asana (skin of a wild beast): "Go," said he to the queen, "and see if there is a mark upon Padmāvatī's left leg, and if so, tell me what it is." The queen went, and, returning, reported that there was indeed a mark, and that it seemed to have been made by a trident. "Holy man," said the king, turning to the yogi, "what is the punishment allotted in the book of thy law to a female?" "Sire," replied the yogi, "if a brahmin, a cow, a woman, an infant, or a person dependant upon us, commits a perfidious act, the law prescribes the penalty of banishment."

Upon this, the king ordered Padmāvatī to be placed in a palanquin, and abandoned in a forest. The prince and the son of the minister went thither, brought the princess to Benares, and Vajramukuta and Padmāvatī lived together there in great felicity.

The Rev. Krishna Mohun Banerjee, of Calcutta, is about to publish a new and improved edition of a work held peculiarly sacred amongst the Hindus, the Markandeya Purana. It is to contain an English translation, with a collection of the various readings of the text, as given by some of the distinguished annotators.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

FRIDAY, October 3, 1851.

THERE are no political questions inviting public attention at the present moment of greater magnitude and interest than those which relate to our colonial empire. Unequivocal symptoms denote that at no distant date they will require to be closely grappled with, and since, happily, our national and international affairs, in other respects, run in a tolerably smooth current, time and opportunity are afforded for considering those questions without the agitation and precipitancy which attend discussions that come upon us unexpectedly.

The subject embraces various topics, each of which has its own peculiar incidents and difficulties. Colonization, as it affects the interests of the mother-country and those of its colonies; the administration of those distant possessions, and their political relations with the Imperial Government; these may be regarded as the grand divisions of the subject, which branch out again into subordinate matters.

A country of limited extent, like the British Isles, with a rapidly increasing population, must throw off the superfluous of that population, as it expands, somewhere, and colonies offer the most convenient outlet, enlarging the power and resources, whilst they relieve the overloaded labour-market, of the mother-country. Colonization, therefore, it would seem, can never be otherwise than beneficial to a nation except where it acts as a drain upon its industry, and this can only happen under a morbid state of circumstances. Independently of the attachment which men naturally feel for the land of their birth, another can seldom hold out social temptations sufficiently strong to countervail the risk, expense, and trouble of emigration, where the strong impulse of necessity is wanting.

The aggregate amount of the emigration now going on from the British Isles appears to be at present extremely large; but the greatest proportion of the emigrants are from Ireland, where the abnormal conditions exist to which we have referred as unduly encouraging the desertion of the country by its labourers. The social evils of that unhappy island, religious, moral, and physical, seem to have extinguished in the Irish peasantry their love of the natalis solum, and to threaten it with a new curse,—a dearth of labour, of which there has been hitherto a redundancy. The emigration from Great Britain, though considerable, is not greater, probably, than is required to balance the annual increase of the population, and the constant tendency of the improvements in machinery to abridge the demand for field labourers as well as artisans.

In our judgment, there is no ground for the apprehension entertained by some that the extent of emigration is operating as a drain; that the sinew and muscle of the country are abandoning it; that the labour-market will soon be deranged, and that, instead of two labourers competing for one master, two masters will compete for one labourer. The emigrants do not exclusively consist of the labouring class; in Ireland especially,—and this is a temporary evil,—they are, for the most part, small landlords and petty capitalists; and the amount of labour subtracted from that country will, no doubt, soon be replaced from the superabundance existing in England and Scotland.

The real evil attending the extent of emigration from these islands is, that it does not fertilize the British possessions; that the main stream, instead of being directed to Australasia, flows to the United States of America. The reasons of this preference are not difficult to discover; amongst them may be reckoned the uncertain and fluctuating character of our colonial institutions compared with the stability and supposed freedom of those of the United States. The motives which influence the Irish immigrants into the latter country are perhaps not wholly free from that spirit of bitter hostility towards England which, engendered by bad government, and fostered by religious differences, has been exasperated by selfish agitators; but at bottom we have no doubt the fascinating representations made to ignorant men about to quit their country of the character of the American government have had the greatest share in determining them "where to choose their place of rest."

In this view of the case, as well as upon abstract grounds, the importance of establishing upon a sound basis the administration of our colonies, and their relations with the mother-country, must be apparent. This is a part of the question which wears at present a very disagreeable aspect. The two chief receptacles of our emigrants are the colonies in Australasia and those in South Africa; and the state of both is not merely unsatisfactory,—it is almost alarming; both are at direct issue with the Imperial Government upon matters of vital moment to the colonists in respect to their institutions. The South Africans, whilst a war with the natives is raging upon their frontier, pregnant with topics of dispute with the Imperial Government, are denouncing the acts of that Government as tyrannical, calculated to subvert the peace of the colony, and "outstripping the longings of the most desperate abettors of despotism." The plan of government proposed by the Colonial Secretary for the Cape is likened by Sir A. Stockenström and Mr. Fairbairn to authorizing "the governor, at the head of a company of grenadiers with fixed bayonets, to seize and dispose of the money and other interests of the colonists at pleasure." The colony of the Cape of Good Hope, in short, is at this time in a state of extreme political excitement and exasperation. The Legislative Council of New South Wales, which is to be superseded by the legislature prescribed by the recent Act, has closed its functions with a protest (which will be found in another page), couched in more guarded terms than the resolutions of the Cape colonists, but remonstrating with equal vigour and determination upon their alleged grievances and wrongs, and demanding "plenary powers for the colonial legislature."

This being the condition of two of our most considerable colonies, is it wonderful that, when British subjects are compelled or induced to leave their native country to settle elsewhere, they should avoid those parts of the globe where their sympathies would otherwise lead them, thereby debarring those young settlements from the supply of population and the accession of labour which they need, and which are elements of strength? For, although hitherto we have been considering emigration chiefly as a relief to the old, overburthened country, it may be doubted whether a well-regulated system of transferring the excess of our labouring population to the colonies be not more beneficial to them than to the mother-state.

In the ensuing session of Parliament the whole subject of our colonial policy must undergo further inquiry and discussion. The principles enunciated by the First Minister of the Crown cannot now be qualified; it will not do now to dole out a parsimonious measure of free institutions to men who interpreted the terms of the Minister in their literal sense, and even gave them a more liberal construction. Self-government in the fullest sense is demanded, and it cannot be denied without exciting discontent, resentment, and at least passive resistance.

THE intelligence from Alexandria, that the difference between the Porte and the Viceroy of Egypt is becoming wider than ever; that the former insists upon the introduction of the Tanzimat without any reserve whatever on the part of the Viceroy, and especially that the Sultan highly disapproves of the construction of a railway between Alexandria and Cairo, has created some degree of alarm for the safety of our overland communication with India. It is not probable, indeed, that the Viceroy will surrender his authority without compulsion; it is not very likely that the Sultan will resort to force, or that he will be permitted to do so; still a dispute of this kind between powers standing in such peculiar relations to each other produces a sense of insecurity which is not removed when we bear in mind the peculiar views of some of the great European powers towards Egypt, especially France, whose policy it has been for many years to maintain an ascendancy in that country.

A pamphlet before us* professes to show that intrigues are on foot, at the instigation of the French, to subvert the independence of Egypt established by the settlement of 1841, upon the maintenance of which the arrangements for our rapid intercourse with India mainly depend. The writer ascribes to French influence the abandonment by Mahomed Ali of the railway; the fortifying of Alexandria and the whole sea-coast of Egypt, planned and carried out by French engineers sent specially by the government of France, and the breaking up of the English company formed for the transit of passengers and goods through Egypt, between Alexandria and Suez. When Abbas Pasha succeeded to the viceroyalty, he endeavoured to get rid of this Gallic influence; he pensioned off the Frenchmen in his service, and quietly removed those of his own officers who had been gained over to the views of France,—with one important exception. This was Artin Bey, the Minister of Commerce and of Foreign Affairs, an Armenian by birth, but educated in France, who, according to this writer, had for years identified himself with French policy in Egypt: "artful and cunning, deeply versed in chicane, and an adept in the petty intrigues of an oriental court." When the French fell into disgrace, it is said, he affected to desert their cause; but Abbas Pasha, having some reason to doubt the fidelity of this minister, ordered an inquiry, whereupon Artin Bey fled the country, and openly joined the opposition party at Constantinople, where his talent for intrigue and his knowledge of the affairs of Egypt afforded him means of promoting the acts of hostility levelled against the government of his former master. In this course of proceeding, it is said, the French party at Constantinople co-operates.

These allegations are supported by facts, as well as the probabilities of the case. That the Porte can be ever thoroughly reconciled to the loss of power it suffered when the Pashalik of Egypt was made hereditary and independent, and patient under humiliation, is contrary to all we know of the temper and policy of rulers; that France will look with indifference or equanimity upon the frustration of its long-cherished hopes regarding Egypt, is equally repugnant to political experience; and that two powers, whose views are coincident in respect to a third, should coalesce in their course of action, is consistent with all we read in the history of nations. The facts, of the curtailment of French influence in Egypt, the flight of Artin Bey, and the hostile policy of the Porte, countenanced by France, are all in unison with this speculation. Another fact, which strongly corroborates the reasonings of the writer and the position of Egyptian politics to which we have adverted, is the opposition now made by the Porte to the construction of the railroad between Alexandria and Cairo. The Sultan had given his consent to the work; France had withdrawn her opposition; Mr. Stephenson had arrived with his engineers; the rails had been purchased, and the letters from Egypt announced that "all the arrangements had been completed." In this state of things the writer warned the public not to be too sanguine, "for, so long as the Porte is allowed to keep up a spirit of agitation in Egypt hostile to the local government, Abbas may have his rails in the country and the engineers ready to place them; but he will find the accomplishment of the work impossible." The result proves the soundness of his conclusion.

In any other condition of the political world than the present, we might, perhaps, give way to apprehension in this matter; but the interest of all nations to maintain peace is too strong to be overcome by Turkish cupidity and French jealousy combined, whilst the advantages of an overland communication between Europe and India are becoming daily more and more cosmopolitan. We have, therefore, no dread of witnessing the "panic," anticipated by the writer we have quoted, occasioned by "an announcement in one of the morning journals, in portentous capitals, 'STOPPAGE OF THE OVERLAND COMMUNICATION WITH INDIA.'"

ONE of the most useful functions of a journalist, if discreetly and impartially exercised,—and he is subjected to a severe responsibility,—is that of commenting upon the misconduct of individuals brought in a distinct and formal shape before the public. The tribunals which take cognizance of such matters, either in a civil or criminal form, cannot accurately adjust the exact measure of punishment; public opinion, in most cases, augments or mitigates the odium which is an incident of the penalty, and the journals are the vehicles in which the sentence is conveyed. If this supplementary inquisition is wholesome in England, it is much more so with reference to Europeans in British India, where Christian morals are held up as the standard by which the natives are to regulate their own. Whenever a European there, whether in the service of Government or not, renders himself amenable to judicial censure by any manifest aberration from the path of morality, the people of the country should be taught that it is discountenanced not merely by the tribunals, but by the nation to which he belongs.

We make these observations, not as an apology, for none is needed, but by way of preface to some comments upon the case of a Mr. Cornelius Traveller, which recently occurred in the Insolvent Debtors Court at Madras.*

This person, it appears from his own statements, went to India as a missionary, in connection with the London Mission Society; in 1819, he left the Mission, and opened a school; he came to England, and returned to Madras in 1838; lost his money in building speculations, again opened a school, and began to deal in rice; for the last thirteen years he had been editor of various newspapers in Madras; and, without having any professional connection with the courts of law, as vakeel or otherwise, and without being acquainted with the mode of proceeding in the Sudder Court, he drew petitions for suitors in civil and criminal cases, from which he derived emolument.

In the year 1847, according to the evidence, a native woman, named Oochema, whose son was in prison, sentenced "unjustly," as she alleged, to be transported, having unsuccessfully petitioned the Sudder Court for his release, Mr. Traveller's dubash, Rungasawmy, told her to come to his master; that "whatever he said, the Court would accede to." She went accordingly, accompanied by a relation, named Vencata Rama Govindur, when Mr. Traveller, after hearing her statement read, said, "I will cause his liberty if you will give me Rs. 4,000." The poor creature replied she had not so much; whereupon he consented to take Rs. 3,000, pledging himself to return all but Rs. 200 if he did not succeed. Oochema and her friend departed to their village in order to raise the money, and in about two months they returned with Rs. 1,000, which they paid into Mr. Traveller's hands, praying that he would commence proceedings, but he refused until the whole sum was paid. They accordingly, in ten days, brought Rs. 2,000 more, which, by Mr. Traveller's order, they gave to his dubash, receiving a note of hand from the former for Rs. 2,000, and a Tamil note for Rs. 1,000 from the latter. Afterwards, a bond for Rs. 3,000 was given in their joint names. A petition, it appears, was presented, but dismissed by the Court, and the son, on hearing this news, died in prison. Application was made by the parties for the return of the money; but it was not forthcoming, and Mr. Traveller, having assigned his property for division amongst his creditors, applied to the Insolvent Court for his discharge, when these facts came out on the testimony of the woman Oochema and her friend and agent Vencata Rama.

The defence or explanation of Mr. Traveller was to this effect:—the whole transaction passed between Vencata and his dubash, who acted as interpreter, though Mr. Traveller admits that he understood Tamil, in which the parties spoke, and that he was in the same room with them. He acknowledges the receipt of the Rs. 1,000, and that he did not draw the petition until the Rs. 2,000 had been paid to his dubash; but he says he had none of this latter sum, and that he knew nothing of the Rs. 3,000 until he was applied to for its repayment. He states that the agreement was, to repay all but Rs. 500 if he did not succeed in procuring the son's release, and that, if he did, he should have Rs. 2,000.

Three bonds, one for Rs. 2,000, signed by Mr. Traveller; one for Rs. 1,000, signed by Rungasawmy, and one for Rs. 3,000, signed by both, were produced in the Court. The latter, Mr. Traveller said, was signed by him without reading it, on a representation by his dubash that it was a mere Tamil copy of the note for Rs. 2,000. Oochema, however, distinctly deposed that Mr. Traveller ordered his dubash to write it; that the latter, when he had written it, read it first in Tamil and then in English, and that Mr. Traveller read it himself before he signed it. The Court most justly held that such a plea, that he did not know the contents of an instrument of this kind to which he set his hand, was inadmissible.

The judge of the Insolvent Debtors Court (Sir W. Burton) was of opinion that Mr. Traveller had, in conjunction with his dubash, obtained this sum of Rs. 3,000 from the poor woman by false pretences, and sentenced him to twelve months' imprisonment. It will be seen in our present issue, that the insolvent appealed against this sentence to the Supreme Court, which unhesitatingly affirmed it.

We can scarcely aggravate the enormity of this case by any comment or animadversion. It was a gross and unfeeling fraud committed upon a poor native female in distress, who was led to believe that Mr. Traveller had influence enough with a court of justice to secure the release of her son. The woman herself swore that "he assured her of her son's return in three months." Mr. Traveller denies that he said so. But his dubash, with whom he was evidently in collusion, may have given the assurance in his presence, and it is highly improbable that she and her relative would have risked so large a sum to secure the mere intervention of a vakeel, and the filing of a petition. And the perpetrator of this fraud, who, upon its discovery, attempts dishonestly to fasten it upon his dubash, was once a missionary, then an instructor of the young, and is now the editor of a public journal!

EAST-INDIA HOUSE.

A Quarterly General Court of Proprietors was held on Wednesday, the 24th September, at the Company's house in Leadenhall Street.

The chair was taken by John Shepherd, Esq., chairman of the Court of Directors.

The secretary commenced reading the minutes of the last general court, when

Mr. P. Gordon rose, and claimed the right of being heard before the minutes were read.

The Chairman called the hon. proprietor to order, and requested him not to interrupt the proceedings.

Mr. P. Gordon said he was perfectly in order; that was the proper time for him to speak. The Directors were not now in their room, from which the public were excluded; they were in the presence of the public press, and what they were then about to say would, in the course of six weeks time, be published and in the hands of the Mahrattas. (Laughter.) They kept the proceedings of the Company secret as long as they could. Among men of every description, civilized or uncivilized, wherever a Court was held, it was the first duty and right of every proprietor to elect a chairman. What was a chairman? Was he a partizan? No. In the north they called him the moderator. But did they behold a moderator in that Court? Anything but that.

Mr. Twining rose to order. What the hon. proprietor was saying had no reference to the subject before the Court.

The Chairman asked Mr. Gordon whether it was his intention to give notice of a motion.

Mr. Gordon replied that he should move, "That it is the right of this Court to elect its own chairman;" and, in doing so, he should make a remark or two on the minutes.

The Chairman.—No! no!

Mr. Gordon.—There was no court in the whole world entrusted with such important duties as that Court was.

The Chairman.—Are you speaking with reference to the minutes?

Mr. Gordon thought it important, when speaking of the minutes of the Court, to remind them of their obligations and high trusts; trusts which had devolved upon each of them by their own voluntary act. They were not an elected body; they bought their stock, and the condition on which they drew their dividends was, that they would watch over the interests of the people of India. Their duty was not confined to that Court. Between 100,000,000 and 200,000,000 of human beings had their temporal welfare and future destiny dependent upon the acts of that Court.

The Chairman.—I must call you to order. You may correct the minutes if you like; but you have no right to make a speech. The general impression of the Court is, that you are out of order.

Mr. Gordon was speaking of the journals of the Court. It was essential that they should know the number of persons to whom their minutes were available. He asked, as soon as he became a proprietor, if he could have access to the names of his fellow proprietors, to know who were entitled to sit in the body of the Court and vote. In pursuance of his duty, he had come to the house to read the minutes of the previous Court, but up to the very eve of the next Court day, and nearly three months after the Court had been held, he, on arriving at the proprietors' room, had been told that the minutes were not entered. However, he must do that justice to the officer the house, that on every application he had been favoured with a sight of the minutes themselves. (Hear, hear!) But was one single copy of the minutes sufficient? What he was about to propose was, that, considering the number of proprietors of India Stock might amount to 5,000 persons, that Court earnestly invited the Court of Directors to facilitate the means of access to the minutes of the General Court, whether printed or otherwise.

The motion, not being seconded, fell to the ground.

The secretary then read the minutes, which were confirmed, and also the titles of certain papers which had been laid before Parliament since the last general court-day.

The Chairman laid before the Court returns of superannuations granted to certain servants of the East-India Company, in pursuance of the bye-laws; also certain returns relating to Haileybury and Addiscombe Colleges; the titles of all which were read.

PUBLIC ROADS IN GUZERAT.

Col. Dickenson, having given notice of his intention to submit the following motion to the Court,—"That annual statements of the sums expended upon the construction and repair of the public roads in Guzerat, with the exception of those at the chief civil and military stations, since the expiration of the last Charter, be laid before the Court of Proprietors,"—rose and said, that at the last general court-day it devolved on him to solicit the attention of the Court to the hardships which the inhabitants of Guzerat, and more especially those engaged in agricultural and commercial pursuits, had long suffered, in consequence of the insufficient state of the roads in that province. The object of the motion of which he had given notice was simply that he might possibly remove from the minds of a great many proprietors what he conceived to be a very erroneous impression, owing to the statement made by the Chairman last court-day, that he (Col. Dickenson) had, in his view of the subject, omitted to estimate the sums of money expended by the Government in Guzerat for facilitating commercial communication. He had, since the last court-day, received from India a document, the contents of which, he felt assured, would satisfy every member of the Court that the Chairman laboured under a very serious misconception as to the real condition of the roads in the province of Guzerat. When they took into consideration that that province, from one single insignificant port, that of Dholera, supplied, last year, 90,000 bales, or more than half the cotton annually sent from India to this country; and when they bore in mind, also, the fact that there was three times as much cotton produced in Guzerat as came to Bombay from Candeish, Berar, and the Southern Mahratta Country, they must at once acknowledge the importance of that market, and admit that there should be no misunderstanding with regard to facilitating the means of transit of so valuable a produce from that province. The Chairman, on the last occasion, objected to the proposal which he (Col. Dickenson) made, that a per-centage of the revenue of the province should be expended for making and repairing the roads, and founded his objection on the ground of the proposition being at variance with usage, and that it would be very injurious to countenance such a principle. The impression on his (Col. Dickenson's) mind was, that there was nothing new in his proposal. He had since referred to different authorities, by which it appeared that it had been the usage in India to act upon the principle of his proposition, and that it had received the sanction of several successive governors-general. Lord Auckland, in 1839, had allowed the appropriation of a portion of the revenue for the general improvement of the north-west provinces of India. In the year 1837, Sir Robert Grant, when at the head of the Bombay Government, in forwarding to the Governor-General of India a memorial from the merchants and others of that province, making application for the appropriation of a portion of the revenues for the repair of roads and for other public works, advocated the principle. The reply to that application was, that the Governor in Council entertained a friendly feeling towards the proposed measure, and that he had long since recommended such a course to the Court of Directors. In addition to these authorities, was that of Lord Hardinge, who specifically appropriated a portion of the revenues of the Jullundur Doab to local improvements in the Punjab. Therefore, when the Chairman said that the plan was contrary to principle, he could not have been aware that the system had been acted upon and recognized by these eminent statesmen. When the natives of Guzerat saw that such a system had been adopted by those eminent men in other parts of India, it seemed hard, when the same system was proposed to be applied in their favour, that they should be told that it was at variance with usage, and that such a principle could not be countenanced. When he looked at the populous cities of Surat and Broach, he considered that the natives of that portion of our Indian territories were peculiarly entitled to the consideration of the Indian Government. Guzerat had never been under any system, but had been entirely lost sight of. He believed that not 1,000*l.* had been spent upon the roads in that part of our territory for the last twenty-five or thirty years. Without good roads, all efforts for improving the growth and quality of cotton in Guzerat must fail. He could conscientiously declare to the Court, that there was not a single commercial road communicating with the coast from any part of the interior of Bombay. There were no means of transporting cotton from the cotton-growing districts of that presidency. He hoped, therefore, the claims of Guzerat would engage the attention of the Court of Directors, and that they would allot to it a liberal share of that expenditure which the Chairman announced last Court-day had been sanctioned for the improvement of the roads and highways in the west of India. After due consideration, he would not now submit the motion of which he had given notice; but, instead thereof, would substitute for it another motion, which he would bring on at the next quarterly Court. The hon. and gallant proprietor then withdrew his motion, and gave notice of the following motion:—

"That it be suggested, for the consideration of the Bombay Government, whether the same systematic arrangement which has so long been acted upon in the north-west provinces of the Bengal Presidency, for the repair and extension of the communications in the interior of districts, by a cess on the amount of the Government jumma, or tax, levied and appropriated exclusively for that purpose, the disbursement of this cess being managed by a local committee, might not with advantage to the public be introduced into General."

After a few words from Mr. Gordon, which the Chairman said had no application whatever to the subject that had just engaged their attention, the Court, on motion, adjourned.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FAMILY COLONIZATION LOAN SOCIETY.—A public meeting of emigrants about to proceed to Australia by the Athenian, a vessel chartered by this Society, was held, on the 22nd Sept., on board the ship in the East-India Docks, whence she started on her voyage for Adelaide and Port Phillip on the 24th. The Society was originated by Mrs. Chisholm, and has for its object the foundation of a self-supporting system of colonization. One-third of the passage-money has been advanced to the emigrants, the loan to be repaid within two years; but the more remarkable feature of the Society is the arrangement under which emigrants are formed into groups, each member of which is, to a certain extent, responsible for every other, no one being admitted except after due inquiry. The plan is as follows:—Persons belonging to the working classes disposed to emigrate are advised to lay by money, weekly or otherwise, till it amounts to two-thirds of their passage-money; the remainder is to be lent to them, without interest, to be repaid in the colony within two years after their arrival. But in order that they should know something of one another, the emigrants are formed into groups of not less than nine individuals. Every applicant is referred to one of these groups, and the group make themselves acquainted with him, and ascertain whether his promise to repay the loan might be relied on, every member of each group being liable to pay 10s. for any member of it who should make default in repayment.

LOSS OF THE "RANDOLPH."—This vessel, Mr. Dale, master, on her outward passage to Calcutta, was cast ashore on a reef of rocks off the north-east part of the Mauritius, on the night of the 25th of July, a day or so after she had taken her departure from Port Louis for Calcutta. She had received on board at that port 250 steerage passengers, natives, consisting of men, women, and children, for Calcutta; also Lieut. Holland and Ens. Scott, of the 48th regiment, who occupied the chief cabin. The cargo comprised sugar, rum, and other produce of the island. Of the passengers between twenty and thirty perished, and two of the crew were also lost. Among the former was Ens. Charles H. Scott, of the 48th regiment. He was in his 21st year, and was the only son of Mr. Charles Scott, surgeon in the Bombay.

ADULTERATION OF TEA.—According to the Lancet, a publication which has rendered much service by its detection of the sophistications and adulterations of coffee and other articles of food, tea is by no means exempt from these dishonest practices, which commence in China, where other leaves than those of the tea-plant are prepared by being "faced" with black-lead, indigo, turmeric, Prussian blue, and China clay. The scented pekoe, caper, and chulan are the sorts chiefly adulterated: twelve samples, tested on their arrival from China, had been thus treated. Congous, souchongs, and the bulk of the black teas, were found to be genuine; but most of the scented teas, and all the greens, were sophisticated. The "manufacture" of tea in this country is likewise carried on to some extent, by dressing up exhausted tea leaves, as well as those of sloe, hawthorn, &c., with catechu, and various mixtures. Some of these ingredients, as Prussian blue, are dangerous.

DEATH OF MR. RICHARDSON, THE AFRICAN TRAVELLER.—It is with deep regret that we have to announce the death of Mr. James Richardson, the enterprising African traveller, which took place on the 4th of March last, at a small village called Ungurutua, six days distant from Kouka, the capital of Bornou. Early in January he and the companions of his mission, Drs. Barth and Overweg, arrived at the immense plain of Damergou (see p. 493), where, after remaining a few days, they separated; Dr. Barth proceeding to Kanu, Dr. Overweg to Guber, and Mr. Richardson taking the direct route to Kouka by Zindar. There it would seem his strength began to give way, and before he had arrived twelve days' distance from Kouka he became seriously ill, suffering much from the oppressive heat of the sun. Having reached a large town called Kangarrua, he halted for three days, and feeling himself rather refreshed, he renewed his journey. After two days' more travelling, during which his weakness greatly increased, they arrived at the Wady Mellaha. Leaving this place on the 3rd of March, they reached in two hours the village of Ungurutua, when Mr. Richardson became so weak that he was unable to proceed. In the evening he took a little food and tried to sleep; but became very restless, and left his tent supported by his servant. He then took some tea and threw himself again on the bed, but did not sleep. His attendants having made some coffee, he asked for a cup; but had not strength to hold it. He repeated several times, "I have no strength," and after having pronounced the name of his wife, sighed deeply, and expired without a struggle about two hours after midnight. Early in the morning the body, wrapped in linen and covered with a carpet, was borne to a grave which was dug four feet deep under the shade of a large tree close to the village, followed by all the principal sheiks and people of the district. The Sultan of Bornou has given orders that all respect and honour shall be paid to the grave of the ill-fated British traveller. —Malta Times, Sept. 9.

CALAMITOUS LOSS OF THE "PASHA" STEAM SHIP.—The Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company's steam ship Pasha was totally lost, in the night of the 21st July, by coming in collision with another of the Company's vessels, the Erin, in the Straits of Malacca. The vessels came together with such force, that the Pasha went down within seven or eight minutes. The Erin sustained considerable damage, and her preservation is attributed to her water-tight compartments. The loss of life was most serious. Sixteen persons perished, including Dr. Briscoe, of the 59th; M. Hardouin; two Chinese (deck passengers); Mr. Greysdale, third officer; R. Orton, clerk in charge; T. Cooper, and R. Wilkins, stewards; M. Johnson and T. Williamson, able seamen; C. Rose, J. Lawlor, Deane, and Robinson, stokers; E. Silverthorn, butcher; and Leech, officer's servant. The cargo comprised 42 boxes of gold, 45 boxes of dollars, 6 boxes of sycee, 1 case of diamond rings, 1 case of silver ware, 21 pieces of silk goods, and other valuable merchandize, the whole valued at Drs. 600,000. This accident will not cause any interruption to the line of steam communication recently established by the company between Calcutta, Penang, Singapore, and China. The company's steamer Pekin was some time since ordered to proceed from Bombay (where she would be superseded by the Ganges new steamer) to Calcutta, from which port the Pekin and the Erin will maintain a monthly communication with Penang, Singapore, Hong-Kong, and Shanghai. The Pasha was intended to open a communication between Hong-Kong and Manila, and although that measure will be necessarily delayed for a short time by her loss, the line will soon be opened by another vessel.

PRIZE ESSAYS.—Mr. W. Parker Hammond, of the firm of Messrs. Hammond and Co., London, offers premiums of £50 each for the best essays on the two following subjects:—"£50 for the best essay on China, embracing the following points:—The capabilities of that empire to consume the manufactures of Britain, and existing impediments thereto. The effect of the present British duties on tea on its consumption, and on the China trade generally, and the probable influence thereon of a reduction of duty. The opium trade, and its effect on the commerce and morals of China and India. General remarks on the empire of Japan, and prospects of trade therewith. Suggestions as to the most efficient mode of extending Christianity in China. £50 for the best essay on the Eastern Archipelago, including the Philippines and the Gulf of Siam, embracing the following points:—Piracy, its extent and effect on the price of Straits' produce and the consumption of British manufactures. The best means of suppression or prevention. The commercial capabilities of the countries alluded to, and existing impediments to their expansion. Christianity, the best means of its extension therein." The object of Mr. Hammond in offering these premiums is to promote the interests of religion and commerce in the China Seas and Eastern Archipelago in connection with the design of the Great Exhibition, and he proposes that the rewards should be given in cash or in gold medals of equal value, at the option of the successful competitors. Three or more competent and disinterested judges are to be appointed to decide upon the merits of the essay, and the last day of next June is fixed upon as the limit within which manuscripts must be sent in.

EAST-INDIA TEA.—The first sale by public auction of the tea grown in the territories of the East-India Company took place on the 23rd Sept., at the Commercial Sale-rooms, Mincing-lane. The whole, comprising most sorts of both black and green kinds, went at full market rates.

THE QUICKEST VOYAGE TO CHINA.—The Chrysolite, a clipper ship, built at Aberdeen, by the Messrs. Hall, for the Liverpool and China trade, has made the voyage from Liverpool to Amoy in 80 days. This is the quickest voyage on record. The Oriental made the same passage out in 89 days, and that was without precedent. This ship was built expressly to contest the voyage with the Oriental, and no expense was spared on her to make her worthy of the British name. She is of 500 tons burden, per register, but carries nearly 900 tons of tea, and this is the desideratum which this new build has realized, and which promises soon to be generally adopted.

BOOKS.

Ancient and Modern India. By the late W. COOKE TAYLOR, LL.D. Revised and continued to the present Time, by P. J. MACKENNA, Esq. Second edition. Madden.

History of British India. (Edinburgh Cabinet Library). By HUGH MURRAY, Esq., F.R.S.E. With Continuation, comprising the Afghan War, the Conquest of Scinde and Gwalior, War in the Punjab, &c. &c. Nelson.

BOTH these works are new editions, in which the narratives are brought down to the present date. Both were originally sketches, rather than histories; their continuations are still more so.

The continuation of the first, though fuller, is far inferior to the other. Dr. Taylor was a clever and well-informed, but a somewhat hasty writer, and his continuator,—the late editor of the Bombay Gentleman's Gazette,—has eclipsed him in rapidity of execution: his additions furnish specimens of the slap-dash style, as well as of incorrect narrative. The concluding chapters contain a jumble of heterogeneous subjects, separately treated, in a loose and superficial manner. Under the head of "Improvement of the Finances," we have the following extraordinary statement:—

"To the East-India Company and to the British Government, the question of improvement in finance is one of vital moment. To the former, every improvement must be of paramount importance, especially now, when it is publicly said that, in consequence of the Company's treasury being unable to meet all the demands for ameliorations in India, many beneficial measures contemplated by the Court of Directors and by the different Indian Governments are in a state of abeyance. To meet the exigencies of this period, a plan, based on the clearest and strictest principles of the science of finance, has been proposed by the writer of these lines, who has, as he trusts, proved in this book that he understands the actual state of India, to the consideration of various of the leading personages of the British Legislature, to Lord John Russell, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, to the Right Hon. Sir George Grey, the Right Hon. J. Milner Gibson, and to Messrs. Cobden, Bright, Hume, and even to the House of Commons. The opportunity is alone wanted to enable the author of the plan to increase the revenues of India, without any oppression whatsoever, to treble their present amount, and thereby to afford to the East-India Company the most ample means of doing to the natives of India all the good they desire. The sound principles of science on which this plan is based, demonstrate that to other efficient measure can ever be discovered for relieving the distress of British subjects, as well in India as in Europe. This notice of the plan is introduced into this history in order that posterity may hereafter learn that there exists at the beginning of the second half of the nineteenth century one man who, being thoroughly aware of the wants and wishes of his fellow-subjects in India and throughout the British empire, understands how, and is willing, nay more, is anxious and eager, if adequately supported, to promote, by efficient means, the welfare of all those who are subject to the British sovereign,—that is, including the inhabitants of the East Indies, to [sic] at least one-fourth of the whole human race."

To propound this grand financial scheme was, it appears, the motive which induced Mr. Mackenna to undertake to "develop the history of India," for he thus ends his concluding chapters:—

"Here this labour must close. Yet, before I lay down the pen, I may explain that the object of this work is to solve a problem,—doubted by many,—that is, whether the finances of Great Britain can be augmented and improved? I hold the doctrine that they are capable of being raised to an extent never hitherto thought of. To prove this doctrine, I undertook to develop the history of India, and I hope that I have satisfied the reader that the system of finance, on which depends the happiness of millions in the East, may be ameliorated.... The details and the means of performing that task must be explained elsewhere."

Mr. Murray's work has been continued by a pen much superior to Mr. Mackenna's; but there are marks of great haste visible in this narrative. The writer tells us that his additions "have been compiled with the utmost care from official documents and the narratives of individuals who bore a part in the scenes they have described." Truth obliges us to say, however, that the last chapter in particular, on the "War in Moulton and the Punjab," is almost wholly made up of matter taken directly from the summaries and leading articles in this paper, whole pages being transferred verbatim, without that distinct acknowledgment which would have shown the extent of the obligation. We are duly sensible of the compliment thus paid to us; but are bound to confess that this mode of doing a book savours of haste, and we suspect that, for some reason or other, the two continuators have been running a race of speed. This is not the way in which history should be written.

ACTUARY.—David Jones, Esq.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 14th of May, 1851, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.
20	On or before 14th of May, 1846.	£1,000	£19 6 8	£10 12 8
30		1,000	24 8 4	13 8 7
40		1,000	31 10 0	17 6 6
50	14th of May, 1846.	1,000	42 15 0	23 10 3
60		1,000	66 11 8	36 12 5

. The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assurers to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS a most excellent REMEDY for ABSCESSSES and OLD WOUNDS.—Thomas Edwards, a labourer in Portsmouth Dockyard, received a severe hurt in his thigh, about four years back, by a piece of timber falling on him. An abscess formed in consequence of the injury, which defied the most eminent surgeons to heal, and he was, consequently, pronounced incurable, and put on the superannuated list, with a pension. Being now at liberty to try other remedies, he commenced using Holloway's Ointment and Pills, which have so effectually cured him, that he enjoys good health, and is as well able to work as any man.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

In the Simla declaration of 1838, amongst the reasons alleged for sending a British force across the Indus, was the fact of the siege of Herat by the Shah of Persia, which was characterized as "a most unjustifiable and cruel aggression;" and one of the objects of the expedition was to secure the "integrity" of Herat, and its possession by the ruling family. It is reported in some of the accounts brought by the present mail, that this strong fortress, considered to be the key of India, is now in the possession of Persian troops, nominally auxiliaries of the Sirdars of Candahar. The Delhi paper states, on the authority of a letter from Cabul, that "Yar Mahommed Khan, when on his death-bed, strongly advised his son to apply for aid to the King of Persia, to enable him to keep possession of the Fort of Herat; that the Sirdars of Candahar have, however, placed themselves under the protection of the Shah-in-Shah, and it is stated that 12,000 Persian troops are at present in Herat." Other reports, indeed, speak of this event as in prospect only. The next advices will probably furnish more precise and authentic information upon a matter of importance to the welfare of our Eastern empire. In the mean time, we have in a succeeding page inserted an account of the political history of this principality, which will inform some of our readers and refresh the memory of others.

The Lahore Chronicle has received "from trust-worthy sources" the following particulars of the operations of Maharajah Golab Sing against his refractory subjects:—

He had organized a considerable force, variously reported at from 6,000 to 8,000 men, for the purpose of punishing the people of Chelas and Gilgit, inhabiting the left and right banks of the Indus, and placed the same under the command of Dewan Huree Chund. Of the formation and object of this force the Maharajah gave early and ample information to the agent of the Governor-General. The force left Sreenugur the 24th June, and proceeded, accompanied or followed by the Maharajah and his son Runbeer Sing, as far as Shopoor, on the banks of the Oolur lake, about thirty miles from Sreenugur. Here the Maharajah intimated his intention of sending only a part of his armament to the north-west under Huree Chund, and his determination to depute his son Runbeer Sing into the country of the Kuka-Bumbas, with more than half the force, to coerce the people to the north and west of Mozufurabad, who had refused to pay him allegiance. It is asserted that the intention of the Maharajah with regard to them was not communicated to the Governor-General's agent. Runbeer Sing soon found his way into the country, difficult as it is, and the people, driven to distraction by the exactions of his soldiery, sent vakeels to Major Abbott, deputy commissioner at Hazara, to implore his interference and aid to relieve them from their oppressors; and there the matter stands at present, Major Abbott having communicated with the Lahore authorities on the subject.

While Runbeer Sing was thus engaged, Dewan Huree Chund moved on towards Chelas, and having laid siege to the small fort of that name, which is close on the left bank of the Indus, soon reduced the garrison to extremities, in consequence of the want of water. Raja Eesa Khan, the chief, sent a message to the Dewan, to the effect that if he chose, he (the Khan) would move out of the fort, with some of his followers, during the following night, and that on his doing so, the Dogras might enter and overpower the remainder of the garrison. Huree Chund did not approve of this plan, but returned for answer that if Eesa Khan thought proper to surrender, he, and such of his followers as chose to accompany him, should be treated with all due consideration. The Raja believed in the sincerity of the professions of the Dewan, and left the fort with the female members of his family, and some attendants, about fifty persons in all. On entering the Dewan's camp, their united cry was for water, as they were dying of thirst. The Dewan ordered that water should be supplied to them; but they had no sooner satisfied themselves, than the whole, men, women, and children, were made prisoners of, and thrown into irons. This occurred on the 8th of August. It was believed by Huree Chund that the remainder of the garrison, not more than 200 strong, could not hold out longer than five or six days.

Reports were in circulation that the Maharajah, upon whose life the pacification of the Punjab is said greatly to depend, was dangerously ill, and had requested Sir H. Lawrence to send him an European physician,—the last resource of natives. The latest accounts, however, state that, with the exception of a rezish, or cold, his highness was in good health.

The Delhi Gazette mentions, as a current report, that an expedition is seriously contemplated against the hill tribes near Peshawur. "Rendered wiser by the reverses experienced on the last occasion, the Government has, it is believed, devised a plan of operations so extensive, and at the same time so well combined, that there seems little reason to augur anything but the most complete success."

About this time two years ago, we announced an outbreak in Malabar, of a set of desperate fanatics, called Moplahs, in which a detachment of sepoy misbehaved, and the services of a party of Europeans were required to put down a handful of determined men. A similar occurrence has taken place nearly in the same locality, the result being the same, except that the misconduct of the native troops was more disgraceful, inasmuch as the Moplahs were fewer than on the other occasion. It appears that about twenty Moplahs, belonging to a Mahomedan sect, numerous in Malabar,* and addicted to gang-robbery, having killed a village police-officer, took up their position at Kollatour, 40 miles from Calicut, in one of the houses which, in that part of the country, are from their peculiar structure admirably adapted to purposes of defence, where, armed with only knives and spears, they waited the arrival of the military. A company of sepoy, sixty-five in number, belonging to the 39th Madras N.L., under the command of Ensign Turner, was immediately despatched to capture the rebels; but on the latter sallying out, the sepoy made a precipitate movement to the rear, some of them throwing away their arms. The ensign, finding all his efforts to rally the fugitives ineffectual, joined in the flight. The Moplahs possessed themselves of the muskets of the sepoy, and retired to their stronghold. A party of H.M.'s 94th Foot was sent for from Calicut, and the Grenadier company of the 39th; which force, consisting of upwards of 100 disciplined soldiers, achieved a glorious victory over the score of half-naked fanatics, whom they exterminated. The loss on our side consists of four European soldiers, three sepoy, and one native commissioned officer, killed. The Madras Athenæum says:—

Much uncertainty still hangs over the cause of these periodical and disastrous disturbances, and various hypotheses have been framed to clear up the obscurity. Some wish to buckle the greatest share of the culpability on the shoulders of Mr. Conolly, the collector of the district, under whose regime three several insurrections of the Moplahs have occurred. Others denounce a Hajee, a Mahomedan priest, as the instigator of the risings. Against this man suspicion was so strong on the occasion of the affair of 1849 that his dwelling was ordered to be searched, but the threats of the Moplah population, it is said, prevented the execution of the order. According to report, this Hajee leads the life of an ascetic in the jungle; has great influence over the Moplahs; and encourages them to murder their unbelieving neighbours by holding out the highest rewards of Paradise to all who happen to fall martyrs to their zeal for the faith.

The Nizam's new minister, Suraj-ool-Moolk, had fulfilled his stipulations to the letter, having paid the first instalment of 40 lacs, in liquidation of the debt, and it was fully expected that he would be able to pay the remainder when due. A letter from Hyderabad, dated 21st August, published in the Bombay Telegraph, says:—

Punctual to the very day of his engagement for the payment of the half of the large sum due by the Nizam to the British Government, the Minister, on the 15th inst., completed the payment of forty lacs into the Resident's treasury, and carried the receipt for that sum to his master, who, well pleased by the accomplishment of his arduous engagement, placed his hand upon his minister's head, in token of his complete satisfaction, and bestowed unbounded praise upon him. The vigour, skill, promptitude, and punctuality with which the minister has commenced, prosecuted, and completed this transaction, have evinced much tact, have manifested the confidence in his ministry with which he has inspired the capitalists, and have brought forth resources never dreamt of by others.

The Englishman's correspondent adds:—

The money was realized without calling for the exercise of severity towards any person, and seemingly, though that can be only apparently so, with the willing consent of the payers. It is not to be supposed that so large a sum of money could be procured on advantageous terms; and the Nizam's government drained by forged coinage of the better currency, which alone the Resident receives in his treasury, has been compelled to pay its debts in hoondies, the exchange on which, in consequence of the large demand, has risen from 26 to 38 per cent. for sicca rupees. The Resident again receives the money at the rate on which he drew for it for the use of the Nizam, making the transaction still more unfavourable to the Nizam's government. This is not to be complained of, it was a necessary incident in the fluctuations of the market, when there was a large adventitious demand for hoondies, and the British Government, which lent the money, had a right to claim the full value of its disbursement.

From Lucknow we hear that the cholera is raging to a fearful extent in that city. The king, it is said, is, "as usual, immersed in ease and luxury." His time is principally spent in the Zenana, or in his Purristan, or Garden of Angels, represented by lightly-habited women, in listening to music, looking at nautches, dancing himself at times (a thing abominated by the Mahomedans), and composing poetry and Hindustani airs. The Lucknow authorities, it is said, have been thrown into great tribulation at the prospect of the Governor-General's visit to that state, the royal finances being in too low a condition to allow of his reception after the approved style of oriental extravagance.

Lamentable accounts are contained in the journals of the sickness at Lahore, Agra, and Peshawur. At the latter station, Europeans and natives, officers and privates, all suffered alike from fever and ague, and the hospitals were, in consequence, crowded with patients. According to the latest advices, with cooler weather, the sickness had abated.

The Lahore Chronicle represents the sickness as not confined to that city and its immediate vicinity; many of the inhabitants of Umritsur had been attacked, and Jullundur was not exempt from the visitation, as was the case last year. "From across the Indus we have also disastrous accounts of the effects of the fever. The whole of the Dherajat is suffering, more or less. Fortunately the frontier tribes cannot move, or they would find our existing posts not in the most efficient condition for resistance." The same paper of August 30 says:—

We alluded in our last to the mortality in H.M.'s 96th foot as having been considerable during the present week. We regret much to learn that eleven men have been committed to the grave since Saturday last; we learn also that 238 patients have been admitted into the regimental hospital during the same period, and that 152 only have been discharged. There were yesterday 244 on the sick list, being a slight improvement on the return three days before, when the number of patients under medical treatment was 286.

The latest issue of that journal (the 3rd September) publishes a table, showing the sanitary state of the troops, European and Native, stationed at Lahore, on the 29th of August. From this document it appears that an increase of 400 sick took place between the 22nd and 24th August, and that, although the horse artillery at Meean Meer continued more healthy than the foot artillery at Anarkulee (having better barrack accommodation), there was scarcely any perceptible difference between the sickness in the native corps at Anarkulee and two of those at Meean Meer. In the irregular cavalry, the difference is shown to be in favour of the old cantonment. In H.M.'s 96th regiment the increase had been eighty-six, taking deaths into consideration, and was at one time much larger.

The Governor-General, it is now stated, would leave Simla about the 25th October, via Pinjore. The time of his arrival in Calcutta is uncertain. A letter from Simla mentions that Col. Low, the Governor-General's agent in Rajpootana, was expected at Simla. Important business of a public nature, is said to have rendered necessary the colonel's presence there before the Governor-General proceeded to the plains.

The Commander-in-Chief, it is reported, would move towards Peshawur at the commencement of the cold weather, and, it is supposed, direct the operations against the hill tribes on the Cabul frontier.

A correspondent of the Englishman mentions a rumour in the Patna bazar, of an attempt at revolution in Nepaul, which is not, however, credited. Letters from Muscat, to the 16th of August, bring intelligence of a hostile movement on the part of the Wahabees. The Imaum had sent off an armed force to the place, distant twelve miles from Muscat, to stop their advance.

Letters received from Persia by the Bombay papers state that cholera had broken out in its most virulent form in Bussorah and the provinces bordering on the Euphrates, and had been for some months fast extending its fatal influence to the villages and towns on the shores of the Persian Gulf. The British agent at Bussorah had been carried off by the disease.

The Supreme Court at Calcutta, it will be seen, has sentenced Mr. Lang, the advocate of Jotee Persaud, to two months' imprisonment, and a fine of Rs. 1,000, for a libel upon Colonel Mactier, conveyed in a printed report of his speech in defence of the Lala, the libellous passage having been not delivered in the court, but inserted by him subsequently in the published report. Opinions differ, as usual, as to the result of this trial. The Hurkaru says:—

Considering that the libel was groundless, needless, unprovoked, and that it was not uttered in the heat of forensic discussion, but, as was shown at the trial, deliberately foisted into the printed report of Mr. Lang's speech by Mr. Lang himself, the punishment awarded must appear hardly commensurate with the offence for which it is awarded.

The Friend of India likewise observes:—"It appears to be the universal opinion in society, that the sentence, when compared with the aggravated circumstances of the attack, is singularly mild." On the other hand, the Englishman, arguing upon the assumption that Colonel Mactier, on the trial, shrank from meeting the accusation of cowardice,— though in fact the Court refused to allow Mr. Lang to put the question as to the colonel's behaviour at Kotah,—states that Mr. Lang is looked upon as a victim to the defects of the libel law, and the caprice of the judges. It adds:—

It ought also to be remarked, that the original attack was not wholly unprovoked. The infamous prosecution of Jotee Persaud was instigated by this officer, and urged upon the Governor-General by unfounded representations from the military board, of which Lieut.-Col. Mactier was the active member. It will hardly be believed in England, that while forcing upon government a prosecution for fraud, in which the short supply of bullocks constituted the prominent charge, this Lieut.-Col. Mactier had in his possession the contract with Jotee Persaud, dated the 15th of October, 1848, in which he stipulated to supply 50,000 bullocks, without advances, and with an engagement to make good the value of any government property damaged or lost in carrying. Yet with the full knowledge that the contractor had not been paid, this lieut. colonel causes him to be prosecuted as a felon for asking for payment, now acknowledged by this most contemptible board to be his just due. Surely the counsel of a man so persecuted as this banker might be excused for inquiring a little too minutely into the character of his prosecutor, who has heaped such shame upon the government which employs him.

The Eastern Star says:—"Much interest has been excited in Calcutta by the news of the final formation of the great new steam company for the navigation of the eastern seas, and great benefit is expected to result from the competition with the present holders of the steam navigation of Asia. The Calcutta community are anxiously hoping that in the midst of the changes and improvements that will ensue, some arrangement will be made to put an end to the overland route from Bombay for letters from Europe, as it has become a nuisance by its irregularity and slowness."

The Ceylon papers mention the arrival of Lord Stanley at Colombo.

From China we learn that the insurrection in Kwang-si province was on the increase; that the rebels had decoyed a force of imperialists into an ambuscade, and put the greater part to death. The Peking Gazette publishes various particulars respecting the movements of the insurgents, over whom several victories are claimed. On the other hand, a native letter, published in the Friend of China, states that the rebel forces had taken the strong city of Kwei-sing, in Seang-chow, and that the imperialists, although they had a commissioner, a Tartar general, and many high military officers, had not been successful in a single encounter.

ACCOUNT OF HERAT.

The city of Herat, formerly Hari, considered to be "the key of the gates of India," is one of the most ancient cities in the East, and in the time of Alexander's expedition was the capital of the extensive province of Aria. Tradition assigns its foundation to Lohrasp, an ante-Mohamedan king of Persia, of the Caianian dynasty. It is well fortified, and situated in a fertile valley, thirty miles from east to west, and fifteen broad, surrounded by high mountains, and watered by the river Hari.

The province of Herat, which was once the channel of an extensive trade, extended 130 miles, from Obbeh, or Aobuh, on the east, to Ghoryan on the west, and 100 miles, from Kooshk, or Kusakh, on the north, to Sabzawur on the south, and contained 450 towns and villages.

Thirty-two sovereigns of Herat, of the Khorgan, Salvi, and Affghan dynasties, are enumerated before Nadir Shah, of Persia, at whose violent death, in 1747, his vast empire became dismembered, and Ahmed Khan, head of the great Abdali or Durani clan of Sadozyes, included Herat in the portion he carved out for the Affghan monarchy. At his death, in 1773, he bequeathed a territory reaching from Khorasan to Sirhind, and from the Oxus to the sea, to his son Timur, who, in 1793, was succeeded by Zeman Shah, one of his youngest sons, through the influence of Sirafratz Khan, head of the powerful family of the Barukzyes. The dependent provinces, however, were seized by the other sons of Timur, all of whom were pretenders to the imperial throne. Mahmood, an elder brother of Zeman, seized upon Herat, and consenting to acknowledge the supremacy of Zeman, was allowed to rule that province as hakim or governor. Nevertheless, he made repeated attempts upon the throne of Cabul, but, failing, in 1799, he fled into Persia. Meanwhile, Zeman Shah having displeased the Duranis, a conspiracy, headed by Sirafratz Khan, was formed to depose him and elevate his younger brother Shooja-ool-Moolk, which was detected before it was ripe for execution, and Zeman put six of his nobles, including Sirafratz Khan, to death. Futteh Khan, the son of Sirafratz, now head of the Barukzyes, thereupon opened a negotiation with Mahmood, and, the troops of Zeman Shah deserting him, that unfortunate prince fell into the hands of Futteh Khan, was blinded, and cast into prison. Shooja-ool-Moolk, resolving to try his chance for the throne, in 1801, collected a body of troops, but, encountering Futteh Khan, he was defeated, and forced to fly.

Mahmood was now seated upon the imperial throne; but his weakness and indolence, and the exorbitant power of Futteh Khan, rendered the latter the virtual ruler of the empire. Mr. Elphinstone describes this person as gentle and modest, his manners forming a strong contrast to his conduct, which was exempt from the influence of shame, fear, and compassion. In 1803, Futteh Khan having left the capital to quell an insurrection, the partisans of Shooja-ool-Moolk brought that prince to Cabul, where he was hailed as king. He immediately liberated his blind brother, Zeman, and consigned Mahmood to prison.

Shooja, as his subsequent career has demonstrated, was utterly unfit to manage a people like the Affghans; the government was disorganized, his own partisans were dissatisfied, whilst Prince Kamran, son of Mahmood, and Futteh Khan, incited insurrections. In 1808, Shah Mahmood escaped from prison, and, joining Futteh Khan, obtained possession of Cabul. In the following year, Futteh Khan defeated Shah Shooja in two engagements, and the latter, after various efforts and misfortunes, became a fugitive, and took refuge in the British territories.

During these transactions, Herat had been well governed by Ferooz-ood-deen (commonly named Haji Ferooz), a younger son of Timur Shah; but the Shah of Persia, who claimed the sovereignty of Herat, repeatedly threatened it, and had succeeded in exacting tribute from the prince, who, in 1818, was formally required by the governor of Khorasan to acknowledge the authority of Persia. Haji Ferooz despatched notice of this demand, which was enforced by the presence of an army, to Shah Mahmood at Cabul, requesting assistance. Futteh Khan accordingly marched to Herat, defeated the Persians, and, by stratagem, seized the city, as well as the person and treasures of Haji Ferooz. Success, whilst it augmented the power, inflated the pride of Futteh Khan, and Shah Mahmood, at the instigation of his son, Prince Kamran, determined to destroy him. On his return to Cabul, Futteh Khan was blinded by Kamran, and cast into a dungeon.

This barbarous act roused the vengeance of all the Barukzye brothers, and Dost Mahomed Khan getting possession of Cabul, Mahmood and his son Kamran fled, carrying with them Futteh Khan, who, for some reflection upon their cruelty, was deliberately cut to pieces before their eyes. This atrocious deed appears to have exasperated even the army of Mahmood, who took shelter from their vengeance in Herat, the government of which he retained for a few years, when he resigned it to Kamran, dying there in 1829.

Kamran, who, like his father, acknowledged the nominal supremacy of Persia, did not until some years after assume the title of "Shah." He was cruel, treacherous, and debauched, being almost constantly intoxicated with spirits, or stupified with opium and bhong. He appointed as his vizier Yar Mahomed Khan, said to be an Affghan, of the tribe of Populzaees, who has been characterized as "the most accomplished villain in Central Asia," and who appears to have soon plotted the overthrow of his master, entering into intrigues for that purpose with the Persian Court, which had, however, views of its own regarding Herat. So early as 1835, it commenced those preparations for the attack upon the city, which was made in 1838, and which, by giving occasion to the expedition across the Indus, led to such important consequences.

The ostensible grounds for this attack, on the part of the Persians, were the failure of Prince Kamran to fulfil certain stipulations in his treaty with Persia; the non-payment of tribute, but chiefly the inroads made by the Heratees into the Persian dominions, whence they had carried off and sold as slaves no fewer than 12,000 persons. The ulterior object was, no doubt, to assert the claim of the Shah of Persia to the sovereignty of Herat. In his despatch to Lord Palmerston, dated in February, 1837, Mr. McNeill, our minister in Persia, says, "there cannot, I think, be a doubt that the Shah is fully justified in making war on Prince Kamran; and though the capture of Herat would certainly be an evil of great magnitude, we could not wonder if the Shah were to disregard our remonstrances, and assert his right to make war on an enemy who has given him the greatest provocation, and whom he may regard himself as bound in duty to his subjects to punish, or even put down."

The success with which Prince Kamran, or rather his vizier, Yar Mahomed Khan, with the powerful aid derived from the skill of the gallant Eldred Pottinger, withstood the assaults of the Persians, assisted by Russian engineers, need not be detailed. It is sufficient to say that the Shah was compelled to retreat, and Herat was thus secured to the savage rule of Shah Kamran and his vizier.

When the Persians raised the siege, they had ruined and depopulated the country; the villages were deserted, and the inhabitants of the city had been reduced from 60,000 to 6,000. This was the condition of Herat when Major Todd, the British envoy, arrived there in July, 1839. He induced the fugitive inhabitants to return; he expended, with the sanction of our Government, large sums to repair the mischiefs occasioned by the invasion (Kamran's treasury being empty), and, at a very heavy outlay, he restored the fortifications, and even increased their strength. Kamran and his vizier manifested their gratitude by forcing Major Todd, in October, 1840, to quit the city.

In May, 1842, Yar Mahomed Khan succeeded in realizing his ambitious views. Shah Kamran was dethroned by him, and died, it is reported, by violence; his sons (ten in number) were driven into exile, and Yar Mahomed Khan assumed the supreme authority, though he does not appear to have adopted the title of Shah. The sons of Kamran made sundry efforts to wrest the authority from the usurper, but without effect. One applied for succour to the British Government; another implored the aid of the Persian court; others endeavoured unsuccessfully to excite the mountaineers to the eastward of Herat. Prince Jehangir, the eldest son of Shah Kamran (who is now upwards of fifty years of age, and is said to resemble his father in character), became ultimately a pensioner upon the bounty of the Shah of Persia.

Of the manner in which Yar Mahomed Khan administered the government of Herat, since he supplanted his master, we have no authentic information, all direct intercourse between Herat and India having ceased; but if the statement that "he was greatly beloved by his subjects" be correct, we must conclude that he atoned, in some degree, by the mode in which he exercised his usurped authority, for the crimes by which he acquired it.

BENGAL.

SIR R. SHAKESPEAR AND CAPTAIN CLOSE.

The Lahore Chronicle publishes an official letter from Sir H. Elliot, secretary to Government, to Mr. Busby, agent for the affairs of Sindia's dominions, dated "Simla, 22nd August," which, referring to his letter, submitting the proceedings of the court appointed to inquire into the charges brought by Sir Richmond Shakespear, his assistant, against Capt. Close, commanding 2nd regiment of cavalry, Sindia's Contingent, states that the finding of the court appeared to the Governor-General to be correct and just, but, in a case so grave, he was desirous of proceeding with all caution, and of fortifying or correcting his judgment by the authority of the Judge Advocate-General, who had submitted a report, in which he is of opinion, that there is no ground whatever for the first charge against Capt. Close, namely, that he had unjustly excluded Jemadar Fazil Khan from promotion; that the charge against Capt. Close, of having threatened the jemadar with a whip, is not substantiated, and that a similar charge of striking a trooper, Surmust Khan, has been refuted; that, with regard to the 4th charge, in which it was alleged that Capt. Close intentionally furnished an incorrect roll of Rissaldar Sahibdad Khan to the court-martial which tried Jemadar Fazil Khan, the Judge Advocate-General considers that the "charge is utterly groundless, and quite unjustifiable;" that there was "no ground whatever for the very grave charge" brought by Sir R. Shakespear against Capt. Close, that he had suppressed a letter at the court-martial,—thereby imputing to Capt. Close falsehood and fraud; and the Judge Advocate-General observes that Sir R. Shakespear "has very greatly exceeded the bounds of propriety, both in bringing forward, and in his manner of attempting to establish, his charges against Capt. Close, whose honour and integrity he has most gravely impugned, and in my opinion very wantonly and without justification. In the opinion thus expressed by the Judge Advocate-General, his lordship entirely concurs; adding that no officer can be permitted wantonly and unjustifiably to bring forward charges affecting the honour and integrity of a brother officer, without being made to pay a severe and public penalty for the act he has done. Sir H. Elliot observes:—"Allusion has frequently been made, in the documents before his lordship, to the natural zeal with which Sir R. Shakespear has espoused the cause of a man who served him faithfully in peril, and to the generosity which has impelled him to support one whom he supposed to have been wronged. Gratitude towards a devoted follower, and a generous defence of his interests, are feelings very laudable in themselves. But no warmth of natural zeal, no generous impulse, can rightly be pleaded in justification, hardly in extenuation, of a man who, with no sufficient cause, unjustifiably alleges, and obstinately persists in, charges against his brother officer, which directly and grossly assail his honesty and his honour. His lordship, therefore, can find no palliation for Sir R. Shakespear's conduct in the circumstances of his connection with Jemadar Fazil Khan. Were it not for the distinguished services and high character of Sir R. Shakespear himself, his lordship would have felt bound to remove that officer altogether from political employment. Having regard to those services, his lordship feels himself justified in not resorting to this extreme measure; but a reprimand is inadequate to the fault which Sir R. Shakespear has committed. His lordship thinks it his duty to remove Sir R. Shakespear from his present office, and to transfer him to the inferior charge of Joudpoor. There is not much difference in the salaries attached to the two offices, but Joudpoor is inferior in importance, in consideration, and the scale of public employment. Removal to the office will be a public mark of the displeasure of the Supreme Government, and his lordship has no doubt will be severely felt by Sir R. Shakespear."

Sir R. Shakespear has made the following communication to the Bombay Times, dated Gwalior, August 25th:—

"I believe that I owe, in a great measure, my escape from the fate of Conolly and Stoddart, or the suffering of Major Abbott, to the fidelity of Fazil Khan; and I know that fidelity to have been put to the test by bribes vainly offered to him. I believe I owe my success also, in a great measure, to him. When I took up my case, I told my friends that my obligations to Fazil Khan were so great that I could not allow any earthly consideration to deter me from prosecuting a thorough inquiry; because I fully believed that I could, by so doing, restore Fazil Khan to the service. But I bound myself to make every possible reparation to Capt. Close, should it appear that I had done him wrong. The investigation has been most carefully and impartially made; and Capt. Close has most fully and most honourably cleared his character of the unjust accusations which I have had the misfortune to make against him. I declare that the only portion of these proceedings that has not caused me pain, is the perusal of the following paper to Capt. Close, before all the officers assembled this day in the mess-house. I will only add, that there never passed an unkind, much less an angry, word between Capt. Close and me until Fazil Khan had been deprived of his commission.

"R. SHAKESPEAR.

"Captain Close,—I have brought charges against you of the gravest nature. They have been carefully investigated by a Court of Inquiry, and you have been most fully and honourably acquitted. This decision has been confirmed by the most noble the Governor-General. No apology from me can be of any value to you; but, as a satisfaction to myself, I have begged that your brother officers may be assembled, in order that I may, in the most formal public manner, retract my accusations, and tender you this my most humble apology. I have done you great wrong in believing you capable of such conduct. The result has been deservedly disastrous to me; and it will be ever to me a source of the deepest regret that I should have done you such an injustice.

"R. SHAKESPEAR, Lieut. colonel."

LAW.

SUPREME COURT, AUGUST 19.

The Queen, on the Prosecution of Col. Mactier, v. John Lang.—The defendant was charged in the indictment as follows:—"That W. Mactier was, at the time, a brevet-major and lieutenant-colonel in the military service of the East-India Company, and a member of the Military Board, and in 1821, when a lieutenant in the said service, was in action at Mungrowl, near Kotah; that J. Lang was proprietor of the Mofussilite newspaper, and that he composed and published, on the 18th April, 1830, at Meerut, a libel concerning W. Mactier, containing the following words:—"The Military Board has not a high character for liberality, but such were its sentiments; one member alone of that Board, a person distinguished for cowardice at Kotah, Col. Mactier (belonging to some regiment of light cavalry, I forget its number at present), differed from the rest, and became the sole parent of that disgraceful mischief."

The defendant pleaded "not guilty."

Mr. Morton, with Mr. Welsh, appeared for the prosecution; Mr. Lang supported his own case, assisted by Mr. Bell.

Mr. Morton said the prosecutor, lieut.-colonel of the 4th regt. of light cavalry, was a member of the Military Board; the defendant was the sole proprietor, and formerly editor, of the Mofussilite newspaper, published at Meerut; also a barrister-at-law, and an advocate of this Court. One Jotee Persaud had been prosecuted, some months ago, by order of the Government, for alleged frauds connected with the commissariat, and tried in the Court of the Sessions Judge at Agra. Mr. Lang was his counsel, and, in the ordinary course, addressed the Court for the defence. He was not indicted for anything he had uttered in that speech. It often became essential to make strong observations upon parties to a cause, or the witnesses on whose evidence the case of one or the other depended. In the present instance, however, the libel related to one who was neither a party to the cause nor a witness; and, moreover, the libellous passage was not contained in the spoken speech. Mr. Lang was indicted for subsequently publishing what purported to be a report of his own speech, in which he had deliberately interpolated, or caused to be interpolated, the libellous paragraph complained of. It seemed a serious aggravation of the offence, to have published this libel in a report purporting to be a correct report of his speech, when, in point of fact, it was never uttered at all. The libel, though brief, contained cruel aspersions on Col. Mactier's character. The paragraph charged the prosecutor with "cowardice" in action. It also implied that, for some purposes of his (Col. Mactier's) own, or with some improper motive, he procured Jotee Persaud's trial, or, in the words of the libel, "he was the sole parent of that disgraceful mischief." To explain the allusions in the first portion of the libel, he (Mr. Morton) would merely state that, in the year 1821, the Rajah of Kotah, an independent but tributary territory, had applied to the Indian Government for aid against certain insurgents. Assistance was granted, and an action took place in October, 1821, at Mungrowl, in the territory of Kotah, between the regular Kotah forces, aided by some of the Company's troops, and the insurgents, under Kissore Sing. The prosecutor, then a lieutenant in the 4th cavalry, and quarter-master of the regiment, was engaged in this action. It was to this that allusion was made—a matter of exactly thirty years ago. This proceeding was not instituted to clear Col. Mactier's character, which required it not. He had served in his profession long and honourably. In vindication of his character, he (Mr. Morton) had only to point to the General Orders in which Col. Mactier was named, to the distinctions he had earned, and to the position he now held. The proceeding was instituted in order to vindicate public justice, and bring his libeller to punishment.

Lieut.-col. Wm. Mactier, sworn.—I am a major in the 4th cavalry, and a brevet lieutenant-colonel in the army, in which I have been nearly forty years. In 1821 I was lieutenant in the same regiment, and quarter-master. In October, 1821, an engagement took place at Kotah, an independent state. I was present at that action. I am now a member of the Military Board. This paper, the Mofussilite, of 18th April, 1851, I received in due course in the month of April. I subscribed to the paper. I have no doubt I am the person mentioned in the libel.

To Mr. Lang.—I arrived in India in October, 1810. I was first appointed to do duty with the 4th light cavalry. Two officers were killed, Lieuts. Reid and Clarke, at Kotah, in the engagement. There was no other Mactier present on the occasion. Mr. Lang here proposed the following question:—"Now, Col. Mactier, you were present at the action of Kotah, and have you no remembrance of a Lieut. Mactier, on that occasion, showing the white feather, ordering threes about, when it was not at all necessary? in fact, he ran away?"

His lordship objected to this offensive mode of questioning, at which Mr. Lang appeared highly indignant, and repeated it nearly in the same words, which was objected to again.

Cross-examination continued.—Q. Did you not leave India immediately after the affair at Kotah? A. No; I left India on sick certificate in May, 1823.

Mr. G. R. Wilby, sworn.—I am editor of the Mofussilite. I have been the editor for nearly a year. I have come down from Meerut on subpoena in this case. I first became editor in August, last year. I entered into a written agreement with Mr. Lang. I have not that agreement; I gave it to Mr. Lang, after having written on it, "cancelled at my request." This cancellation was at Mr. Lang's suggestion. Subsequently, I entered into a verbal arrangement, under which I have acted as editor ever since. Mr. Lang was described as proprietor in the written agreement. I do not think that the cancellation was made in consequence of any change in the proprietorship. I was editor of the Mofussilite at the time of the close of the trial of Jotee Persaud, at Agra. Mr. Lang came to Meerut some short time subsequently. He never told me for what purpose he came to Meerut; I understood, however, from what took place, it was to superintend the publication of the report of the trial. This is a copy of the Mofussilite in which the report of the trial is published. I cannot say who corrected the press with regard to the report of the trial. Such a report I would not have corrected myself; it was the duty of the printer. I saw Mr. Lang in the house of the printer. I think it was about the time the report was published. I saw Mr. Lang either on the 16th or 17th April, about 3 or 4 o'clock p.m. He left Meerut that evening, either on the 16th or 17th. Mr. Lang never interfered in the business of the paper whenever he came to Meerut; he never then wrote for the paper, to my recollection. From my own knowledge I cannot say whether the report was taken from the Agra Messenger, or whether it was an independent report of the Mofussilite. I have been subpoenaed to produce the notes and proofs of the speech.

I produce none. I made search, and asked the printer. There have been many manuscripts and proofs destroyed. I have destroyed some myself. It is not the regular custom of the office to preserve them.

To Mr. Lang.—I was formerly employed by Mr. S. Smith as a writer for the Hurkaru. Mr. Peterson brought the subject first to my notice about the arrangement for editing the Mofussilite, but I entered into an agreement with you. You frequently went to Meerut, and sometimes to the hills. You did not generally take up your abode on the press premises when you came to Meerut. I recollect your taking some books from the press library on the last occasion you were there. Mr. Gibbons conducts the whole business of the press at Meerut; he has done this for a year. Payments of salary always came through the hands of Mr. Gibbons. I have never received any from you—[answer corrected]—the letter which brought the written contract also brought one month's salary from Mr. Lang; this was from Simlah. I had much trouble in receiving remittances of money, and published an advertisement, directing payment to the printer, signing it, "John Lang, sole proprietor," without any authority. I had no permission from you; it was done merely as a matter of convenience.

To Mr. Morton.—I cannot say whether Mr. Lang took the paper in; to my knowledge he never objected to the advertisement.

[The following is the agreement referred to:—

"Agreement.—I, John Lang, proprietor of the Mofussilite newspaper, do hereby engage the services of G. R. Wilby, Esq., on the following terms:—First, that, in consideration of the said G. R. Wilby discharging and performing the duties of the editor of the said newspaper, I agree to pay him the sum of Rs. 600 per mensem for the period of two years certain; and, in the event of my not requiring the services of the said G. R. Wilby in such capacity, as editor, for a third year, I bind myself to give the said G. R. Wilby three months' notice of my intention. I further agree to find the said G. R. Wilby a furnished house during the period that he is editor of the Mofussilite newspaper, or give him Rs. 100 per mensem in lieu thereof. This agreement to commence and be in force from and after the 1st of October, 1850. Dated at Simlah this 7th day of August, 1850.

(Signed) "JOHN LANG."]

Mr. E. G. Fraser, sworn.—I was employed by the Delhi Gazette to take notes of Jotee Persaud's trial. I took notes of Mr. Lang's oration on that occasion. I did not give the original notes to Mr. Lang, but I gave him a transcript. In the course of the trial, Mr. Lang mentioned to me that he would like to see anything that I was reporting which he might address to the Court. His reason for this was, that he did not care what was printed, but he thought it due to his professional reputation. I had nothing whatever to do with the publishing the report of the speech. I sent Mr. Lang the transcript of my notes in several portions; I have no doubt they all came to hand to Mr. Lang. This sentence [the alleged libel], I believe, was not uttered; it certainly was not in my notes. Nothing was uttered, to my knowledge, charging Col. Mactier with cowardice. Had such been uttered, I should have noted it. I did not read the report in the Mofussilite, but in the Agra Messenger. (It was admitted on both sides that the reports were identical.)

To Mr. Lang.—Without reference to the libel, the report published is decidedly a fair one. The conclusion of the report is not so exact as that part which precedes the libel. The conclusion is more abbreviated, and not improved. I do not think that the printed report is an improvement upon the speech delivered.

To Mr. Morton.—I have not the least doubt that the notes I gave Mr. Lang were used in the preparation of the printed report.

To the Court.—I was never employed by Mr. Lang, but by the Agra Messenger, nominally for the Delhi Gazette.

Mr. J. Newmarch, sworn.—I am one of the solicitors for the prosecution. We subpoenaed Mr. J. Spankie; he came down, and returned again immediately, on account of severe illness. Mr. Lang, in my presence, made the following admission, which I might give in evidence; that, after he had made his speech, he had spoken to Mr. Spankie as follows:—"It is a pity I forgot to allude to Col. Mactier's cowardice in my speech for the defence; but it is no matter, as it will be made all right in my published speech." At Col. Mactier's request, I wrote a letter to Mr. Lang soon after the speech appeared in the Calcutta papers, and Mr. Lang wrote a reply.

[Read, as follows:—

"Sir,—In your address to the Court at Agra, in defence of Jotee Persaud, as reported in the Agra Messenger, and thence transferred to the columns of the Mofussilite, of which you are the proprietor, you appear to have uttered the following words:

'Sir, the Military Board has not a high character for liberality, but such were its sentiments; one member alone of that Board, a person distinguished for cowardice at Kotah, Col. Mactier (belonging to some regiment of light cavalry, I forget its number at present), differed from the rest, and became the sole parent of this disgraceful mischief.' We are instructed by Col. Mactier to write to you, to require you to retract, fully and without reservation or qualification, the imputation of cowardice which you have thus cast upon him, and to acknowledge your conviction that it is entirely without foundation and fact, and to express your regret that you should have been betrayed into making so injurious and erroneous an assertion. This apology, if made in a frank and unqualified manner, Col. Mactier is willing to accept as a reparation for the deep injury which you have done him; of course, reserving to himself the right of giving to the apology the same publicity which the original slander has obtained."

The reply:—

"Gentlemen,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of this day's date. I am pained to think that Col. Mactier should have been so exceedingly ill-advised as to place the matter to which you refer in the hands of his attorneys. Messrs. Smout and Hedger will receive 'process' for me, and I have to request you will not write to me any more on this subject."

Capt. G. Gaynor, sworn.—I am a captain in the Company's service. I was present at Jotee Persaud's trial. After the trial was over, I accompanied Mr. Lang to Meerut from Agra, on the 15th April, and reached Meerut on the 17th. I do know Mr. Lang had notes of his speech, but not his own notes; I could not say that I saw them. From my own personal position, I object to answer for what special purpose this journey was made. (The Judge thought he could not object to answer it.) The object of going to Meerut was, that Mr. Lang might assist in preparing his own speech, and correcting it, which he did. I have not much knowledge, however, of what Mr. Lang did at Meerut, for I was living in a different direction. I recollect, upon seeing a printed report of the speech, I objected to the impropriety of the paragraph, as a general remark to Mr. Lang, that it would have been better had the libel not appeared. Mr. Lang replied that it should stand; or words to that effect. I did not know whether the offensive paragraph was uttered in the speech. I cannot swear as to the report being published in the Mofussilite or the Agra Messenger first.

This ended the case for the prosecution.

At this stage of the proceedings, the Deputy-Governor of Bengal (who had been subpoenaed by Mr. Lang) appeared in Court; upon which his lordship asked Mr. Lang whether he would call upon his honour as a witness. Mr. Lang replied, "No; he would not detain his honour; he would not call him as a witness."

Mr. Lang then addressed the Court, in the first instance, upon certain points of law. He contended there was not sufficient evidence to send the case to the jury. There was not the slightest evidence to prove that he was the proprietor of the Mofussilite in April last, or that he published or composed the speech in question; the whole matter was founded on inference. As regarded the indictment, the first count alleged that he was the proprietor of a newspaper called the Mofussilite; but it did not allege that he published the speech in question as the proprietor of the Mofussilite, nor that Col. Mactier was libelled in his character as a soldier. These points he thought most material. He could produce a variety of authorities touching upon this point in his favour. He contended there was nothing in the words of the libel themselves unexplained, written or spoken, that could render this an offence punishable by the criminal law. (He quoted Comyns's Digest in support of his argument.) It must be shown, if he were alleged to be the publisher, that he did so as proprietor at the time. These objections were urged with reference to the two counts constituting the whole of the indictment. There was another objection, that the newspaper had been admitted as evidence against him, and not the original manuscript. Mr. Fraser had not produced his notes, although he had told the Court that he had them in his possession. (He cited Adams v. Kelly, R. and M.'s Rep.)

Mr. Morton, in reply, said, with respect to the objection that the original MS. of the libel had not been produced, there was some evidence that it had been lost or destroyed; but, independently of this, the publication of the newspaper itself was brought home, by circumstantial evidence, to the defendant. This distinguished the present case from that of Adams v. Kelly. If Mr. Lang himself superintended the correcting of the press, there was no rule of evidence which required that the original manuscript should be either produced or accounted for. He (Mr. Morton) thought his learned friend, who delighted occasionally in saying strange and startling things, must have been jesting in arguing that there was no evidence to go to the jury. There was abundant prima facie evidence, both of proprietorship and of publication in fact by the defendant, whether proprietor or not.

Mr. Justice Buller thought there was evidence on both points.

Mr. Lang then proceeded to address the jury, and alluded to the custom in England regarding criminal prosecutions for libel, and the three particular modes of redress. There was an Act in England which did not extend to this country; that Act did not tie up hands and tongue, as his had been during the day. Not one of the questions which he had put to Col. Mactier would have been objected to by any of the judges of the Queen's Bench in England. In prosecutions of this kind, the character of the libeller as well as the libelled should be taken in consideration, and for this reason he had wished to question Col. Mactier in his own and a legitimate way. He, however, was stopped in his examination of Col. Mactier and Mr. Wilby by his lordship himself, who, perhaps, knew no more of the law on that point than he (Mr. Lang) did. Mr. Wilby had been brought down to prove his (Mr. Lang's) proprietorship; but he had proved nothing, and there was no evidence whatever elicited to show that he was the proprietor. In that country there was nothing but a Press Act, which did not allude to the proprietor, but provided that the printer and publisher be the parties charged. Again; as regards the proprietorship, an editor may not be conscious that a transfer of the proprietary right had taken place; an employer may sell out without its coming immediately to the knowledge of the employés. There was, indeed, a written agreement between himself and Mr. Wilby; but that agreement had been cancelled some months previous to the publication of the libel. He then alluded to reports in newspapers generally, and the influence those reports possess on the minds of the most respectable of the community; then to the attorney for the prosecution, who had been an editor of a newspaper, and in that newspaper had set forth the most slanderous reports concerning himself. Such reports were likely to operate to his prejudice, and doubtless were spread in order to bias the minds of people on his trial this day. Then, again, what was Mr. Wilby brought down to Calcutta for? There was a report that a proof sheet of the trial was in existence, with his (Mr. Lang's) interpolations in his own handwriting; and why was this not produced? He also understood that Mr. Gibbons, the printer and publisher of the Mofussilite, was coming down to Calcutta, who could afford them every information required. This was not done, but Mr. Wilby was brought down,—a person who could tell them nothing. There was Mr. Fraser also, who, it was said, had given his notes to himself (Mr. Lang); but where was the connecting link that he was the publisher of those notes? There was no identification whatever between the notes of Mr. Fraser given to Mr. Lang and the published report in the paper. Neither was there any proof of the libel being published, nor had any one been proved to be the publisher. Capt. Gaynor had not spoken a syllable to criminate him; there was not a tittle of direct evidence that he was the person who delivered those notes to the printer or the publisher. There was nothing more common than what was called the correction of the dāk edition; this edition was perhaps very different from the paper published in the morning, and who could say to the contrary that this copy of the Mofussilite containing the libel was not a dāk edition, or a wholly spurious one? Again; Mr. Wilby had said that he had inserted a notice in the Mofussilite, signing it "John Lang, sole proprietor;" but he also stated that he had done so without his (Mr. Lang's) permission. Those connected with the press could tell them that occasionally a particular copy of a newspaper might be different from the whole of the others. Then for the admission,—"I will make it all right in my own notes,"—supposing he had altered the notes, who published them? The report in question was originally published in the Agra Messenger, and it was in the Mofussilite only as a reprint. His object in asking Mr. Fraser whether or not the report was correctly published was, that if a barrister had corrected his own speech, he would naturally have improved upon it, instead of abbreviating, as Mr. Fraser said it was. Was it at all likely that he would have abbreviated his own speech? Would he not, like any other man placed in similar circumstances, have made additions, alterations for the better, and rounded and smoothed the sentences? But this was not the case; the published report had been sworn to be no improvement at all upon the speech delivered. He saw many military officers in court, who knew him well, and who could say that he had erased from the Army List many rogues, rascals, and rascallions; but, at the same time, he was the last person in the world to cast aspersions upon the character of a brave man. How many officers of high standing, who had been assailed by the cloud of disfavour, had he assisted, and by his means dispelled the cloud that enveloped them! After a further remarks, he left his fate entirely in the hands of the jury, declining to call any witnesses.

Sir A. Buller, in summing up, told the jury that they had three points to consider: firstly, whether the words in question amounted to a libel; secondly, whether they related to Col. Mactier, the prosecutor; and, thirdly, whether, supposing the two first points proved to their satisfaction, the defendant was guilty of the publication. In the first count, he was averred to be the proprietor of the Mofussilite at the time of the publication, and, to find the defendant guilty upon that count, it would be necessary that the jury should be satisfied with the proof of such proprietorship. In the second count, he was charged generally with the publication; and that count would be satisfied in the proof of his having in any capacity published the libel, or having caused or procured it to be published. Sir Arthur read the definition of a criminal libel, as given by Hawkins, viz. "A malicious defamation, expressed either in printing or writing, and tending either to blacken the memory of one that is dead, or the reputation of one that is alive, and expose him to public ridicule, hatred, or contempt;" and left it to the jury to say whether the words in question fell within this definition. Sir Arthur then referred to the evidence, which tended clearly to point out the prosecutor as the Col. Mactier named in the alleged libel. He then came to the more difficult question of the proof of the publication. This he intimated had become a mere question to judge of from the evidence. He himself should offer no further opinion than that there was sufficient evidence on the counts to support the indictment; that is to say, to go to the jury. Of the sufficiency of that evidence to convict the defendant, they alone were the judges.

The jury retired for nearly two hours, and returned a verdict of guilty on both counts.

Many objections were made by the defendant during the trial, but were over-ruled; in consequence of which, he moved for an arrest of judgment. The defendant was bound over in his own recognizances, himself in Rs. 2,000, and two sureties in Rs. 1,000 each, to enter appearance on the 23rd.

AUGUST 23.

(Before Sir L. Peel and Sir A. Buller.)

Mr. Lang moved for a rule nisi for a new trial on the following grounds: first, the conduct of the judge in stopping the defendant in his cross-examination of the witnesses, Col. Mactier and Mr. Wilby, thus throwing difficulties in the way of the defence; second, a misdirection as to there being evidence of publication by the defendant; third, that Mr. Fraser's evidence was improperly received without the production of his original notes, which he stated to have in his possession at the time of the trial; fourth, a misdirection as to there being evidence as to the paper being published at the Mofussilite press; fifth, a misdirection as to the defendant's being proprietor of the Mofussilite press, so as to render him liable, as such, for the libel published; and, sixth, misdirection in telling the jury what verdict they were to find if they believed the whole evidence.

AUGUST 25.

The whole of these objections were overruled by the Court, and the rule was refused.

Mr. Justice Buller pronounced sentence as follows:

John Lang, you have been found guilty of the offence of libel; and in determining the amount of your punishment, the Court, as is usual in such cases, directs its main attention to these ingredients of your offence—the amount of malice shown on your part—and the degree of the danger of a breach of the peace, from the provoking quality of a libel.

The libel for which you have to answer imputes to Col. Mactier cowardice in action—and the authorship of a disgraceful prosecution. It is difficult to imagine a charge more galling to a military man than that of cowardice in action—one more calculated to "excite him to wrath," or one therefore more obnoxious to the criminal law, the province of which is to prevent the order and decent conduct of society from being disturbed by outrages of this description.

It is always however some extenuation of libellous or slanderous words—that they are mere repetitions of what is in every body's mouth, or that they arise out of some great and recent provocation, or that the occasion which calls them forth, although it cannot justify them, still holds out temptations to which ordinary excitability, or a love of the ludicrous, are too prone to yield in moments where there is no time for reflection.

But in your case none of these circumstances of extenuation are to be found. The imputation, so far from being a common subject of public gossip, had been buried and forgotten for thirty years.

The supposed occasion was a speech at the trial of Jotee Persaud, and the only imaginable provocation—the alleged recommendation by Colonel Mactier, in opposition to his colleagues, of a further inquiry into the charges against your client.

It appears, however, that the words in question have not the excuse, such as it would have been, of having burst impatiently from the lips of an excited advocate. They were intended to be uttered at the trial, but they were forgotten, and were supplied in the cool moments of after-thought, and in opposition to the remonstrances of a friend.

The fact of their having been so forgotten sufficiently shows the feebleness of the alleged provocation.

In addition to the obvious tendency of every libel of this description to provoke a breach of the peace, this particular libel is marked by another evil tendency of a public character—namely, a tendency to deter public servants from doing their duty to the state, by the dread of having past events of their life raked up and made food for the calumnious.

In your address to the jury, you appealed to the new libel law of England, and triumphantly asked how different your position would then have been, if you had been at liberty to plead the justification of truth, which that law allows. I did not think it necessary at the trial to notice your observations on that point, but as they tend to convey an incorrect notion of the enactment to which you appealed, and of the feeling of the English legislature and the English public on the subject of private libels, I will now refer to the Act. It is the 6th and 7th Vict., cap. 96, and by the 6th clause it is enacted that "if, on the trial of any indictment or information for a defamatory libel, the defendant have pleaded such plea as hereinafter mentioned, the truth of the matters charged may be inquired into, but shall not amount to a defence, unless it was for the public benefit that the said matters charged should be published; and that to entitle the defendant to give evidence of the truth of such matters charged as a defence to such indictment or information, it shall be necessary for the defendant, in pleading to the said indictment or information, to allege the truth of the said matters charged in the manner now required, in pleading a justification to an action for defamation, and further to allege that it was for the public benefit that the said matters charged should be published, and the particular fact or facts by reason whereof it was for the public benefit that the said matters charged should be published, to which plea the prosecutor shall be at liberty to reply generally, denying the whole thereof; that if after such plea the defendant shall be convicted on such indictment or information, it shall be competent to the Court, in pronouncing sentence, to consider whether the guilt of the defendant is aggravated or mitigated by the said plea, and by the evidence given to prove or disprove the same: Provided always, that the truth of the matters charged in the alleged libel complained of by such indictment or information, shall in no case be inquired into without such plea of justification."

It would be ridiculous to suppose that you could have persuaded any jurymen that it was for the public benefit that the matters charged by you against Col. Mactier should be published, and the only effect of your having availed yourself of the power of pleading any such justification, would have been to throw upon the Court the necessity of declaring that your guilt was aggravated by the plea.

The sentence of the Court is, that you be imprisoned in the common jail of Calcutta for the space of two calendar months; that you do pay a fine of one thousand rupees to her Majesty the Queen, and that you be further imprisoned until that sum be paid.

Apart from the question of legal guilt or innocence, we can scarcely conceive any position poorer and more pitiable in the eyes of the public than the present position of the defendant in the recent prosecution for libel. It now appears proven, beyond the shadow of a doubt (indeed, admitted, as we understand it, by the defendant himself), that the entire paragraph relating to Col. Mactier was a subsequent fabrication! No part of it was contained in the speech as spoken. The whole was subsequently interpolated by Mr. Lang himself, and the speech, thus deliberately garbled, published to the world as a true version of what had been uttered by that distinguished advocate. And mark the affectation and artful semblance which this precious paragraph exhibits. In speaking of Col. Mactier's status, the words used are, "Belonging to some regiment of light cavalry, of which I forget the number at present!" This is manifestly intended to convey the idea that the brilliant speaker was hurried away by the intensity of his feelings, and poured forth his crushing philippics in the heat of Demosthenic eloquence and argument. And when called to account on behalf of him whom he had thus magnanimously libelled, he takes his stand on the high grounds of an advocate's privilege, and the rights of the public press! Alas! in prosaic pitiful contrast, now comes out the damning fact,—proved and admitted,—that the whole was a subsequent concoction,—an unprecedented compound of audacity and folly. Those who heard the defendant's address to the jury declare it the most miserable exhibition ever witnessed within the walls of the Supreme Court,—the forcible-feeble in style,—loud and violent, without the most distant approach to eloquence,—coarse and scurrilous, without the smallest particle of wit,—one confused incoherent rant, bald and disjointed in language, and utterly puerile in argument.—Hurkaru, Aug. 21.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LONDON MAIL of July 24 arrived at Calcutta on the 2nd of Sept.

MANGOLD-WURZEL has been introduced into the Punjab, from English seed, and grows luxuriantly: one root measured 2 feet 3 inches round. It is expected that this root will succeed extensively as a field crop in the Punjab. Turnips, sliced and dried, are kept throughout the year, and much relished by the Punjabees; and the very peculiar knobbed mushroom of the Punjab, known as khoomb, is also dried and preserved similarly; in this condition it is considered a great dainty by them.

IRRIGATION IN THE PUNJAB.—It has been proposed to apply a system of tanks, in connection with, and as an auxiliary to, the Baree Doab Canal, to store up surplus water in the lower districts, that in dry seasons the inhabitants may not be entirely dependent on the supply then afforded by the canal.

INFANTICIDE.—We had heard of the accidental discovery of this crime, fifteen years ago, by the officer now at the head of the local government, amongst the Rajpoots of Jounpore and Azimghur, and we should not have been surprised had some lingering traces of the long-standing evil been brought to light at this period by the local authorities in that quarter. But we confess our astonishment and regret at receiving evidence, clear as daylight, that the practice still exists in Mynpoory and Etawah,—two districts situate within a short day's ride from the ostensible seat of the local government. It is amongst the Chouhan Thakoors that this remnant of barbarism is still cherished,—the descendants of a tribe of Rajpoots originally from Sambhur and Ajmeer, distributed over these provinces, but chiefly found at Bloonghoo in the district of Mynpoory, and on the high lands of the Jumna in Etawah. The cause which nourishes this blot on human nature is pride, that curse of caste which renders it disreputable for one of high descent to betroth his daughter to an inferior, while the poverty of the race denies the power of making ceremonial gifts, indispensable, in their opinion, where the child is affianced to one of equal rank. To this first cause, it may be added, that the Chouhan holds in detestation all relatives through marriage, the very names of whom are with him terms irritating and opprobrious. It is, however, pleasing to find amongst these dark features hope from the example of influential men. The late Raja of Mynpoory, himself a Chouhan of illustrious birth, tracing his descent from Pirthee Raj, and therefore connected with the regal stem of Neemrana, preserved his infant grand-daughter, probably the only female child which has been born and continued to live within the Chouhan fortress since its erection. But prior to the raja's decease the child's father died, and with the raja has terminated the direct ancestral line,—a circumstance which, coupled with his humane interference, has not failed to encourage the superstitious feeling predominant with the less enlightened amongst his followers. It is due to the local authorities to state that they have not been wanting in effort to suppress the practice.—Mofussilite.

THE IMPORT OF SALT from Great Britain to India, on an average of four years,—1838-39, 1839-40, 1840-41, and 1841-42,—was only 2,630 maunds, or about 100 tons in each year; in the last year, the imports from Great Britain were 10,12,968 maunds, or 37,500 tons! The only objection to the monopoly, as it is called in England, has thus been effectually removed. It is a singular fact that, in the last year, the quantity of salt imported by sea amounted to about 24,00,000 maunds, which has generally been considered as one half the consumption of the lower provinces. The duty received by Government in the last year on the salt imported was 61 lakhs of rupees.—Friend of India.

BUYING OUT.—An appeal has been made to the Commander-in-Chief between the officers of the 70th B.N.I. and Major Harris, of the same regiment, who commands an irregular corps. The 70th wished to buy out Major Hill, and assessed Major Harris's share of the purchase-money at Rs. 5,000, without at all consulting him on the matter. He refuses to pay.

THE REFORMS IN THE MADRASSA (see p. 319), which lately created an émule in that College, according to a native paper, have been abandoned, at least partially, and the students are now allowed time for performing their devotions five times a day, as before.

Lines of Dawk are shortly to be established between Dhera Ghazee Kahn, and Mithenkote, Dhera Ghazee Khan and Kam-pore in the Bhawalpore territory, and between that station and Leia.—Mofussilite.

CONFIDENTIAL REPORTS.—The Eastern Star learns from good authority that the confidential reports at present sent in by the commanding officers of regiments to the head of the army are for the future to be done away with.

ABSENTEEISM OF OFFICERS.—As a proof how much either an increase of officers, or a revised system of absenteeism, is required in the Bengal army, we need only turn to the 44th N.I., at Barrackpore, which, by the death of Major John Anderson, is now officered, or rather denuded of officers, as follows:—No colonel, no lieutenant colonel, no major, no captain. Four lieutenants and five ensigns, including the regimental staff, are present with the head-quarters, so that, deducting Lieut. Clarkson, commanding, and two subalterns for the regimental staff, there remain available for general duties, station and regimental, connected with the charge and supervision of a thousand men, two lieutenants and four ensigns, one of the latter not being of sufficient service to hold a company! Barrackpore has long been noted as a station from which, if possible, officers run home; but we fancy it could never show a regiment with fewer officers than those now present at the head-quarters of the 44th N.I.—Englishman, Aug. 7.

BRIDGE OF LIVING WOOD.—In the valley of Musmai, about three miles from Cherra Punji (in the Cossya Hills), is a bridge of a remarkable kind. On the top of a huge boulder by the river side, grows a large India-rubber tree, clasping the stone in its multitudinous roots. Two or three of the long fibrous roots, whilst still easily pliable, have been stretched across the stream, and their free ends tied on the other bank. These roots have struck firmly into the earth, and now form a living bridge, of great and yearly increasing strength. The two great roots run directly one over the other, and the secondary shoots from the upper have been bound round and grown into the lower, so that the upper forms at once a handrail and suspending chain, the lower a footway. Other roots have been laced and twisted into a sort of ladder, forming an ascent from the bank to the bridge. The greatest thickness of the upper root is about eleven inches, from which it decreases to six. The length of the bridge is not much, if at all, under 100 feet, and its height above the water (in April) from 25 to 30 feet. The bridge was constructed by the people of the village of Ringhot, in the valley, and forms their communication with Cherra during the rains. There are two other similar bridges in the vicinity of Cherra, besides some remarkable cane suspension bridges. One of the latter is at least 200 feet between the points of suspension (two large trees), and 40 to 50 feet above the water. The Hill Cossyas are afraid to trust themselves on it; but the Uwars, or men of the valleys, cross, drunk or sober, light or laden, with great indifference.—Eastern Star.

OUNZ.—Extract of a letter from Lucknow:—"Let us take a view of the condition of Oude as it now is. No business can be transacted at court without passing, not only the minister's, but also Rajah Balkissun's, Kunialoll's, and other official offices no order can be obtained without having passed through them all. Not only must the officers themselves be bribed, but chuprassees and chobdars participate in the plunder, which is considered their right. The minister is careless, and his negligence and ignorance combined will no doubt be represented by our excellent Resident to the Governor-General. Another and more able minister should be appointed. If we take a look into the district, we find wretchedness and misery everywhere. Often must a man travel several koss before he meets with a single individual. Notwithstanding the fertility of the soil, one can often fancy oneself in a desert,—whole villages are deserted. The roofs of the huts, and everything that can be taken away, are carried off by the villagers, who fly on the approach of troops. Murder is common, and the punishment,—unless the thuggee magistrate takes the case in hand, which of course he cannot always do,—is trifling, even if ever inflicted."—Englishman, Aug. 19.

MEDICAL RETIRING FUND.—A singular discovery has been made at the Treasury, showing how carelessly the public accounts are kept. The Medical Retiring Fund, which is partly under Government management, and which is allowed 6 per cent. for the money deposited with Government, has been credited on a part of its accumulations with 12 per cent. per annum, instead of 6, until overpayments of two lakhs of interest have taken place. The error has been going on for ten years, without being detected either by the officers of Government or those of the Fund. Fortunately, the Medical Fund is in a flourishing condition, and can bear the deduction of £20,000 without injury to the prospects of the subscribers.—Ibid.

THE NEW FORT GLOSTER MILLS COMPANY have declared a dividend for the past half year at the rate of 20 per cent. per annum.

EFFECT OF IRRIGATION UPON HEALTH.—The Delhi Gazette with reference to an apprehension expressed by Lord Ellenborough, in the House of Lords, a short time back, as to the effects of canals upon the public health in India, has the following remarks and statements: "There certainly have been rumours about, that the Ganges and Jumna canals have produced very great unhealthiness in the parts adjacent to their courses, and though the Lieut. Governor of these provinces may have entertained a pardonable unwillingness to believe anything unfavourable of his favourite schemes, yet he should not, and we think would not, now object to a scientific and medical inquiry into the effects, as to health, of these vast undertakings, which might prove a guide in the carrying out of future projects elsewhere. Should the inquiry prove unfavourable to the canals, with regard to themselves, it would be too late now to complain; nothing more could be done than to make the best of a bad job, and to mitigate, as far as possible, an inevitable evil; but with regard to the Punjab, such an unfavourable result to the inquiry should lead on to a second investigation, as to whether the evils attendant upon canals would be likely to attend other modes of irrigation. A correspondent at Agra has informed us of a curious circumstance which has occurred in that district, connected with the subject in point. The late collector, Mr. Coverley Jackson, constructed some works for irrigation in the pergunnah of Futtehpore Sikri. In his own pamphlet, entitled, 'Statistics of Agra,' he says, 'The Ootungun Nuddee flows through the Bhurtpoor territory, and enters the district at the village of Suhenpore, pergunnah Futtehpore Sikri. At this place it was proposed to cut a canal, which should bring the water into the old bed of the Kharee Nuddee, and supply irrigation to the villages in the neighbourhood.' And again he says, speaking of the Kharee Nuddee, 'A bund of masonry formerly stopped its waters, extending from the rocks at Futtehpore to the opposite ridge of the valley, and formed a lake: this might be repaired with great advantage.' The former of these proposals was, we understand, carried out in a certain degree, and the result, if measured by the increased fertility of the adjacent lands, has been highly successful. But, alas! with fertility came fever, and that, too, of a most malignant kind; and no sooner had the hopeful villagers began to gather in their magnificent crops, than reaper Death appeared, and began to gather in his harvest too. We are assured that the village of Futtehpore itself is quite a melancholy sight; wives and children, as far as circumstances will permit, have been sent away to distant places; the artisan sits shivering and moping at his stall, and the labourer stands about in his now rich and verdant fields, with disease stamped on his haggard countenance. With the blessing has come a curse, and with the plenty, the pestilence."

COTTON CLEANING MACHINES.—We perceive by an advertisement in the Hurkaru, that Messrs. Mackenzie, Lyall, and Co. have been directed to offer for sale sixty-seven of the cotton cleaning machines, constructed by Mr. Mather, on account of Government. These machines are made according to the model which lately gained the prize of a gold medal, offered by the Agricultural and Horticultural Society. We suppose, from their sale, that the experiment has not succeeded, or that Government finds it impossible to introduce them among the native community.

THE KILLED IN THE PUNJAB CAMPAIGN.—A correspondent of the Calcutta Morning Chronicle, writing from Simla, states that a committee has been formed at head-quarters, in connection with the monumental church at Ferozepore, and lists have been called for of all the soldiers, officers, and privates who were killed in the Punjab campaigns. Tablets inscribed with their names are to be erected for each campaign, and regiments or private individuals are at liberty to cause others to be erected in the same building.

MERCHANT SEAMEN.—We are informed that the Government has under consideration the extension of the late Merchant Seamen's Act, 13 & 14 Vict. to India, which, if accomplished, will be of considerable advantage to the commerce of this port. The only difficulty in its application to this country is, as regards native seamen, for whom some modifications in the Act will be necessary.—Englishman, Sept. 5.

JOTEE PERSAUD.—In Mr. Lang's new paper it is stated that Jotee Persaud "had enough powdered diamond in his cummerbund, on the last day of his trial, to have destroyed an elephant, or a rhinoceros. He might have died in the Agra jail, but he was quite resolved not to live there many hours. It was the man's life, and not his liberty, that his advocate was contending for, and to this the Lalla not unfrequently alluded. What a frightful disgrace the Government narrowly escaped!"

SHIP-BURNING.—The committee of inquiry into the causes of ship-burning have closed their investigation, and we understand that they have prepared a very elaborate report for immediate submission to Government. They have arrived at the conclusion that a majority of the cases have been the result of incendiarism, for which they have suggested certain remedies, both legislative and administrative.

A MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT occurred at Wuzzeerabad on the 18th August. The roof of the house in which were Capt. J. H. Clay, Paymaster of the 3rd Light Dragoons, and his wife, suddenly fell in, the beams of the house having been destroyed by the dry rot. Capt. Clay was at the further end of the room, and escaped, but although every possible exertion was made to rescue Mrs. Clay from the heaps of rubbish which surrounded her, they were unavailing. She had, it is presumed, been suffocated, as there were no bones broken.

A PROJECT has been started at Calcutta to fish up the treasures and valuables from the wreck of the Pasha in the straits of Malacca.

FEATS OF MEMORY.—There is a man now living at Santipore, who has been blind from his birth, and who can repeat the greater portion of the Ramayun, while there are men in Calcutta, who can, we believe, go through the whole work without a mistake. We have ourselves seen one of the Bengalee "kothoks" go on for six evenings together from the Mubaharat, without once looking at a paper.—Friend of India.

ROADS IN PESHAWUR.—A correspondent of the Lahore Chronicle states, that the Governor-General has given his permission for the roads in Peshawur being made "pukha," that is, metalled, a measure which, it is believed, will add greatly to the salubrity of the station.

MOORSHEDABAD.—The Morning Chronicle states, that there is every probability of the city of Moorshedabad being washed away by the river. Government, however, have directed Capt. Layard to keep an eye on the doings of the river in that quarter, and in the event of fresh encroachments, to take prompt measures to put it under arrest.

MALIGNANT CHOLERA is raging in the city and jail of Agra, and people are dying in thousands. It is to be hoped the epidemic will not reach the lines, and all due precautions have been taken. The disease is supposed to have made its appearance from the malaria and filth on the banks of the river.—Morn. Chron.

UMBALLAH.—"Major Jacob, commanding the Scinde Horse, sent in a short time since a strong representation to the Governor-General, against applying the late order as to 'unpassed' officers to the officers of his corps. He stated that his officers had proved themselves good soldiers, and had done excellent service for their country and the government they are paid by; and he thought it would be ridiculous, and a very great hardship, if they were to lose their appointments merely because they are not au fait at the Oriental languages. He further stated that they had used every endeavour to fulfil the provisions of the Government order, but that they could not get a moonshree, though they had offered even Rs. 300 a month. The Governor-General has replied, saying, that Major Jacob should not have presumed to criticise a Government order, but that under the peculiar circumstances of the case, a reference would be made to the Honourable Court."—Morn. Chron.

THE LATE MR. BETHUNE.—A meeting of the native gentlemen of Calcutta was held in the Medical College on the 22nd August, to consider the propriety of opening a subscription to preserve amongst the native community some personal memorial of the late Mr. Bethune. The meeting was well attended, and after some eulogiums had been passed upon Mr. Bethune, the gentlemen present resolved, that a subscription should be raised to purchase a portrait and bust of that gentleman, the surplus, if any, to be devoted to the cause of native education. Fifteen hundred rupees were put down on the spot.

THE BAPTISM OF A MOULAVI, at the Free Church, is mentioned by the Calcutta Christian Advocate.

MEDICAL UNIFORM.—We understand that it has been decided that the new uniform to be worn by the medical branch of the service shall resemble in every respect that worn by officers on the general staff of the army; the undress frock, as well as the full-dress coat, being a portion of this agreeable change.—Delhi Gazette, Aug. 27.

THE DHOON GRANTS.—We are glad to learn that Government has been instructed by the Court of Directors to grant an indemnity to the gentlemen in the services who took the Dhoon grants. It will be recollected that premium was given by the local Government, and that the grantees were afterwards obliged by the Court to dispose of the lands within a limited period of time, as the home Government would not permit the rule laid down prohibiting officers holding lands to be evaded on any terms.—Ibid.

DR. PATON.—The Court of Directors have issued imperative orders for the removal of Dr. Paton from the post-office department, N. W. P. The post-master-general, the lieutenant-governor, and even the Governor General, have deemed it requisite for the due carrying on of the duties with which Dr. Paton is intrusted, strongly to remonstrate against the order, and obedience has been delayed pending a second reference to the home authorities.—Lahore Chron. Aug. 20.

THE SHAREHOLDERS OF THE BENARES BANK have received another dividend in liquidation to the amount of ten per cent., making their gross receipts amount to sixty per cent. of their paid-up capital. When the remaining outstandings are realized, it is expected that an ultimate loss of only ten per cent. will be sustained.

THE FEMALE SCHOOL.—It is with great satisfaction we announce that Lord Dalhousie for himself and his marchioness has promptly undertaken the maintenance of the Hindu Female School, founded and supported by the late Mr. Bethune. That lamented gentleman had secured it against immediate dissolution, by a legacy sufficient to meet its expenses for six months, besides another bequest of thirty thousand rupees for the completion of the school-house now building. But the immediate patronage and aid of the Governor-General and his lady will further ensure it against injury from the loss of its founder and zealous supporter, and from the assaults of those enemies who seemed disposed to take every advantage of its supposed unprotected and helpless condition. Of course Lord Dalhousie takes charge of the institution pending its adoption by the Government with the sanction of the Court of Directors.—Hurkaru, Sept. 6.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

BENGAL DIVISIONAL COMMANDS.

Simla, Aug. 11th, 1851.—The Honourable the Court of Directors having directed that advantage be taken of the first vacancy in the Bengal Divisional Commands, for transferring to it Major-General C. W. Hamilton, now commanding at Saugor, the Most Noble the Governor-General of India is pleased to relieve Major-General Hamilton from his present duty, and to transfer him to the divisional staff of the Bengal army, vice Major-General Battine, c.b., deceased.

The command at Saugor will henceforth, as ordered by the Honourable the Court of Directors, be exercised by a brigadier of the first class, and the Government of Fort Saint George are requested to appoint an officer to that situation to relieve Major-General Hamilton.

STATIONS OF FEROEPORE AND LOODIANA.

Simla, Aug. 12th, 1851.—The Governor General is pleased to re-transfer the stations of Ferozepore and Loodiana, and their dependencies, comprising the western sirhind division department of public works, from the Punjab to the N. W. Provinces circle of superintendence.

The divisions of the grand trunk road from Kurnaul via Umballa and Loodiana to Ferozepore, under Lieutenants Hyde and Gulliver, of engineers, are placed under the superintendence of Major Willis, superintendent of the grand trunk road.

Notification, Aug. 16th, 1851.—The Hon. the Deputy-Governor of Bengal has been pleased on a recommendation from the Board of Revenue, to determine that the present title of the revenue surveys of the Bengal provinces shall be changed as follows:—

The Bhaugulpore survey under Mr. W. G. Young as officiating superintendent, and Mr. Pemberton as surveyor, to 1st or North Division.

The 24-Pergunnah survey under Mr. H. M. Reid as superintendent, and Captain Smyth as surveyor, to 2nd or South Division.

The Mymensing survey under Mr. C. S. Belli as officiating superintendent, and Mr. Wyatt as surveyor, to 3rd or East Division.

OUTBREAK OF MOPLAS.

The following is an extract of a letter respecting the outbreak at Kollatoor, just received:—"A party of about seventy sepoy from Major Wilkinson's detachment 39th, from Malliappooram, was sent, under the command of Ensign Turner, to the scene of disturbance. They proceeded to the spot where the rebels (fourteen in number) were. Ensign Turner and six men advanced in front, as they saw a few of the fanatics coming to meet them, and in a scuffle that ensued, one naigue, a bugler, and a private were killed; one Mopla, it is said, was killed and another wounded by Ensign Turner, and the sepoy behind, or at least some of them, after firing a volley, threw down their muskets and took to their heels! Ensign Turner, seeing that the sepoy ran off, had no other alternative than to gallop away himself! Shameful affair this. Why did not Major Wilkinson go himself with the party, instead of sending Ensign Turner, a young and totally inexperienced officer? It is said that the sepoy came back to their encamping ground, and the assistant collector, Mr. Collet, seeing they were so panic-stricken, directed their remaining there until the detachment of Europeans and the other company from Calicut arrive, when the whole will proceed to the scene of action. The collector, Mr. Conolly, has gone along with the detachment. The house which the insurgents took possession of belongs to a numboory, and is situated on a high ground rather difficult of access."—Athenæum, Sept. 2.

The following are our latest advices from the scene of action:—"I daresay you are now aware of an outbreak at Kollatoor, in the vicinity of the former scene of rebellion, Munjerri. The rebels, about twenty Moplas, after killing an adhiyary, or village police officer, on the 22nd August, and a few others, took possession of a brahmin's house, a good substantial building, standing on an elevated favourable position. A party of sixty-five sepoy, under Ensign Turner, of the 39th N.I., from Malliappooram, were sent to attack them. The party fired, and having done so, while the rebels did their part, a general panic struck the sepoy, who, throwing down their arms and ammunition, took to flight! with the loss of two sepoy and a drummer, and on the side of the rebels a similar loss. Of course the rebels now came by the sepoy's fire-arms, and had additional courage, armed as they were before with war-knives only. It was useless to try the sepoy, forming the reserve body of the 39th, under Brevet Major Wilkinson, of the same corps. This shameful affair took place on Saturday the 23rd. The detachment of H.M.'s 94th, mustering about forty-five men, and the grenadier company 39th N.I., stationed at Calicut, under Capt. G. Rhodes and Lieut. McCarthy of H.M. 94th, and Ensign Shaw of the 39th, marched off to the scene of disturbance on Monday morning. On the 27th, the Europeans settled the whole of the rebels, though unfortunately with the loss on their side of four poor European soldiers, and a brave old subadar of the detachment 39th that marched from hence. It seems that had not the rebels come by the sepoy's fire-arms, the loss of the European soldiers' lives would have been spared, and it is a pity that our soldiers should be shot by their companions' fire-arms. This is the fourth outbreak attended with bloodshed and loss of valuable lives. The last one, in which poor Ensign Wyse, of the 43rd N.I., was hacked, and two brave soldiers of the same gallant 94th lost their lives, having been but in August, 1849. In that affair, too, the sepoy brought shame on themselves. In the one before that, when Capt. Leader (now Major of the Invalids), of the 5th N.I. with his company, attacked a few moplas, the sepoy most shamefully ran away."

We have obtained from a source on which we can place the most implicit reliance, a detail of the cause which led to the present, and indeed to all the previous outbreaks of the moplas. So far from the acts of Mr. Conolly having influenced the conduct of the fanatics, it appears that political motives have had no share whatever in rousing them to murder. They profess to be prompted by a more intractable impulse, which is not evoked by tyranny, and not to be crushed except by death.

The history of the cause in a few words is this. For some years past, a sect has arisen among the Moplas, in which the virtue of killing an idolater and the immediate reward of heaven to those who die in the cause of religion, is preached up as that part of the Mahomedan creed most profitable to learn because most certain and immediate in its result if boldly acted up to. This doctrine has gained strength of late years from the preaching of a tongul (bishop), who, returning from a pilgrimage to Mecca, and having the powerful prestige of a father, who, in the same sacred office, was all but worshipped by the Moplas of Malabar, has gained unbounded influence over his congregation, the sect we speak of. It is in the immediate neighbourhood of this man's residence, in a very out-of-the-way part of Malabar—inasmuch as it is near no great town, and having no great thoroughfare through it—that this peculiar sect is to be found, and though the tongue cannot be convicted of taking part in the outrages committed, it is known that he supports the doctrine, and it is said has more than once given his blessing to those about to earn the crown of martyrdom by murder and death in the cause of Mahomed.

The usual course pursued by the fanatics is this, to resolve on taking their places amongst the saints, sometimes singly, sometimes in a party; barely more than two or three combine at first, and the act is so immediate that no intelligence is gained of the intention. A mile from where the plan is made, some idolater has to die, and as more ecclat follows the death of a great man, usually some rich nair is chosen for the victim, and as such men frequently hold the office of adihary or potel, no more fit subject can be found than such a man as was the sacrifice on this occasion. So completely has this been usually the case, that who the victim was, was not a matter of importance, that in no one instance has any good reason been alleged for the original murder, and on one occasion some years ago, when two or three men had resolved upon a murder, a request was made to them to kill a wealthy nair, to whom another mopl owed a grudge.

We have letters from the scene of action dated the 30th Aug. It appears that a detachment of H. M. 94th, and a company of the 39th N.I., reached Kollatoo on the 27th. The men were much knocked up with the march, but after resting for a while, and taking a little refreshment, they proceeded to the work assigned them. The Moplas, 17 in number, had taken possession of a strong house, situated in the middle of Purdy's field, which could only be approached by a narrow pathway. They had in their possession the muskets abandoned by Ensign Turner's party. The compound was surrounded by a mud wall, which was further strengthened by a deep ditch. The Europeans advanced, and delivered a volley, which apparently had no effect, but the second discharge killed seven of the enemy. The Moplas now rushed out, and were met by a well-directed fire from the sepoy, which staggered them, and before they could recover themselves, the 94th had reloaded and again fired. The survivors now threw down their muskets and dashed in amongst their foes, who in a very few minutes disposed of the whole party, but not until they had killed four Europeans, and Subadar Syed Meer of the 39th. The men of the 94th were interred in one grave at Kollatoo, and the gallant Syed Meer was conveyed to Malliaporam. The blame which has been cast on the sepoy with reference to this affair, is wholly undeserved. The bravest European would avoid a mad dog or an infuriated Malay. The sailor dreads to mount a spirited horse, and the soldier to go up aloft in a tempest. A fight with moplas is a war of extermination which the best of soldiers may be excused for disliking. We hope that in future a strong force of Europeans will be stationed permanently at the head quarters of the fanatic crew.—Ibid., Sept. 4.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CAPT. PRIESTLEY, H.M.'s 25th K.O.B., ordered into arrest for refusing to obey Gen. Aitchison's order to "go and be d—d," has been set at large.—Athenæum.

LIEUT. COL. COTTON, of the Madras engineers, has submitted a plan to Government for creating a water communication, 500 miles in length, which shall be navigable during the whole year, and connect the richest and most important districts of the presidency. The cost will be but Rs. 3,000 a mile, or a total expenditure of 15 lacs.—Ibid.

THE NAWAB OF THE CARNATIC has offered a prize of Rs. 3,000 for a good translation, into Hindoostanee, either of Wilson's Vade Mecum, or of the last edition of the Dublin Dissector, or of Quain and Sharpey's edition of Quain's Anatomy.

LIEUT. JOHNSTONE.—A letter from Jaulnah states that a smashed carbine or short gun-barrel, cut into inch bits, had been found buried in the house of the party suspected as the murderer of the late Lieut. Johnstone—a reduced havildar of the 3rd cavalry, by name Khadur Khan. The ball found in the body of the unfortunate young officer exactly fitted the bore of the barrel thus discovered, and the two circumstances had given rise to the belief that the murderer had at length been discovered.—The ROMAN CATHOLICS AND THE GOVERNMENT.—The Madras Circulator understands, that "the Right Rev. Dr. Fenelly, Roman Catholic Bishop of Madras, starts this day on a tour of visitation, at the request of Government, who have undertaken to defray the expense. This prelate will visit all those stations under this presidency, where European troops are located."

JOTEE PERSAUD sent Mr. John Lang £10,000, on the evening of his acquittal, and the modest barrister, who had scarcely ever held a brief in Calcutta, returned it, as not being sufficient, and was only pacified by the promise of an additional Rs. 10,000.—

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The LONDON MAIL of August the 7th arrived at Bombay on Sept. 1st (per steamer Feroze), being the quickest voyage on record.

SUKKUR.—We have letters from Sukkur to the 31st ult. One of our correspondents writes:—"Sickness is making rapid strides here.—The 22nd N.I. have betwixt 80 and 90 in hospital with fever, and about half as many laid up in quarters. There is scarcely an European in the fort of Bukkur of the ordnance department but is laid up with the same complaint; and even the natives in the bazaar are suffering in numbers from it."—Ibid.

DONATION.—The Court of Directors have granted a donation of Rs. 1,000 to Lieut. F. W. Mackenzie, of the 8th Bombay N.I. for having passed in four native languages.

SUTTEE.—We hear from Kamptee that there has been a suttee there. The authorities had taken into custody seven of the unfortunate Hindoo widow's relations and servants, and having ascertained to what extent they encouraged and assisted this poor woman in carrying out her views, they were each sentenced to three years' imprisonment.—Telegraph.

THE COTTON CROP.—A letter from Dhoolla says: "We shall have a very early cotton season, and I fancy about the heaviest crop on record. The monsoon has been most favourable, and the cultivators are very koosh."—Ibid.

COMMODORE LUSHINGTON has tendered his resignation, and returns home about the end of the year,—late changes in the Royal Navy rendering it expedient for him to rejoin his own service.—Bombay Times, Sept. 17.

SIR J. JEEJEEHOY.—The Bombay Gazette notices that the libel case at Bombay, between Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy and a Parsee merchant (see p. 519), has been compromised, without a reference to the Supreme Court.

ROADS IN BROACH.—A Guzerat correspondent of the Telegraph states, that in the Broach pergunnah,—the most productive district in India with respect to cotton, and containing 2,000 square miles of territory,—there is not one solitary inch of made road, not one ditch, or one bridge.

A GANG OF SCOUNDRELS has been detected at Bombay, whose occupation, is, it appears, to inflict wounds on themselves with the view of indicting others for transportable offences. Several parties have, of late, been brought up to the police office and the sessions, charged with having attempted to cut the throats of various parties, and in several cases the presumed sufferers have been traced to this gang.

THE INSURRECTION.—A few days after the last mail left, Commissioner General Seu took his departure from Canton, avowedly determined on reaching the seat of war in the Kwang-si province.

We learn that, at Woo-chow-foo,* in Kwang-si, the rebels are daily becoming more numerous, on which account Seu, the Governor-General, is staying at Shaou-king, to report progress to the Emperor, this being the adjoining district to Woo-chow. It has been ascertained, that he has received money from all the civil and military officers, in addition to the large sums voluntarily offered, so that it is proposed to plunder him, and an opportunity is earnestly sought for capturing his person, as it is hoped that he may be enticed to an interview.

Orders have been issued to collect as speedily as possible 4,000 men, to go before and prepare an entrenchment, whilst the Tartar general of Kwang-si has hastily contrived a scheme to collect soldiers, and run on to Woo-chow, and at once exterminate the rebels.

One of the rebel chiefs, named Choo-luh-taou, is at Leen-chow-foo, and having heard that Seu is staying at Shaou-king-foo, he dares not proceed any further, but has sent a letter by one of the general officers to be handed to Seu, but the Major-general first gave it to an inferior officer to present. Seu having opened the letter, found as follows:—"Having heard that your Excellency has brought troops to subjugate and exterminate us, how will you escape for a single day? You dare not come to fight us; you are manifestly without power and without courage, having set your troops in order, and on the point of action, you are afraid and confused. If you really believe in your own strength and riches, in the midst of absolute weakness, and think you are adequate to sustain a single battle, then appoint an early day for the fight, that it may be at once decided who shall win or lose, and thereby save the soldiers from certain destruction." On reading this, Seu was greatly enraged, and immediately ordered his troops to advance, but they only went as far as Sin-hing, which is but a little way from Shaou-king. He is now again loitering about instead of advancing, and has come to the very depth of fear and confusion. He has voluntarily disgraced himself, and become a laughing-stock to the rebels.

We have several reports of the merciless manner in which the rebels treat the Imperialists when they once fall into their hands. A detachment of 500 men sent from Heangshan, near Macao, together with 3,000 men from Kwei-lin-foo, were enticed into an ambuscade, and out of the 500 Heangshan men, only ten escaped to return to their homes alive. Recently we heard that, falling in with a Commissary-General, with a large quantity of grain, they decapitated him, and made booty of the whole of the stores he was conveying. The Canton people have quite disabused themselves of the idea that Tartar generals possess greater courage than people of their own race.—Friend of China, Aug. 24.

DEATH OF DR. GUTZLAFF.—In our columns will be found recorded the death of the Rev. C. Gutzlaff, D. D., for many years chief Chinese translator to the British Government in this country, and more generally known throughout the world as the indefatigable and zealous disseminator of Christian knowledge among the inhabitants of the great heathen nation with whom he had such a lengthened intercourse. Possessed of a highly sanguine disposition, his every leisure moment was given to the work in which he was heart and soul engaged. He wasted but little time in correspondence on subjects having relation to things with which denizens of the world are more or less obliged to deal;—he paid social visits to but few. The dawn of day found him deep in study, or earnest in prayer with the Chinese converts he had drawn about him. The hours in which it was necessary for him to attend the Government offices being concluded, with hardly a moment's rest, his remaining energies were immediately bent to the all-glorious work of spreading Christian truth. Dr. Gutzlaff has died comparatively a young man, having entered on his forty-ninth year only a few days before his decease. He suffered, for more than a fortnight, from rheumatic gout, which, ultimately affecting the kidneys, produced general dropsy. His burial, in the Wong-nei-chung, was attended by the Governor and the Hon. Mr. David Jardine (as chief mourners), the Hon. the Lieut.-Governor, the Hon. the secretary to the plenipotentiary, the colonial secretary, and all the principal government functionaries who were able to attend. At the close of the English service, the Rev. Mr. Genachir, of the Rhenish Missionary Society, delivered an address to the large body of Chinese who were present; the whole service concluding with the performance of an anthem by a party of Chinese youths, who, for some time, have been under Mr. Genachir's tuition.—Ibid.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

SATURDAY, October 18, 1851.

THE long absence of the Governor-General of India from the appointed seat of the supreme authority has been repeatedly complained of in the Indian journals, and it cannot be denied that, as respects the public interests, it is an evil. Lord Dalhousie left Calcutta on the 15th of April, 1850,—having arrived there, after his long sea-voyage, only in the preceding month,—and he is not expected to revisit the presidency until the end of February, 1852, making a period of nearly two years. During his absence, the administrative functions appertaining peculiarly to the head of the Government must have been altogether in abeyance, or delegated to the President in Council, or the measures proposed, including matters of legislation, must have been delayed until they could receive the sanction of the Governor-General, whose whereabouts might be uncertain.

We are far from intending to found upon these facts any charge against the distinguished nobleman who now fills with so much ability the high post in question. We are quite sensible that his occupations during his absence from Calcutta have in other respects been of singular benefit to British India; and we should be ashamed to grudge him that portion of the time which has been devoted chiefly to the repair of his health. Our business is with the facts themselves.

When Lord Ellenborough, in March 1844, after the termination of the Gwalior campaign, returned to Calcutta, which he had left only three months before, the address, congratulating him upon the accomplishment of the objects which had called him to Upper Hindustan, contained the following paragraph:—

The presence of the head of this colonial empire at the seat of government is so essential in every way to its prosperity as to make it but natural that we should bear even his necessary absence with something like impatience, and hail his return with the warmest expression of satisfaction. That your Lordship's residence amongst us may be continued; that no state emergency may again demand your personal care in other parts of this wide territory, must always be our earnest desire. It will be our study to make that residence as much a matter of choice as it is of public expediency.

His Lordship, in his reply, observed that "it is necessary that the head of the Government should place himself wherever his presence may, at the time, appear to be calculated to produce most benefit to the general interests of the empire."

Although it is impossible to quarrel with this proposition, it really evades the question. If the presence at the seat of government of the head of our Indian empire be essential in every way to its prosperity, reasons of overwhelming weight and moment can alone justify his absence even for the shortest period.

It must be borne in mind that the Governor-General of India unites in his own person functions which at home, in imperial matters, are divided between the sovereign and her ministers; that he is in fact the prime agent in the legislative as well as the executive department of the Government; and that, consequently, its whole machinery depends upon his personal movements. The Queen of England might be ubiquitous in this country during most of the year, yet all the departments of her government, which are stationary in London, as well as the two Houses of the Legislature, might carry on their several functions without let or impediment. It is owing to the large powers confided to a Governor-General of India, and which are expected to be exercised by him upon his own personal responsibility, that his isolation from the seat of the Supreme Government, where his constitutional advisers and the departmental officers are located, is considered to be so prejudicial to the public interests.

The occasional retreat of the high functionaries in British India to some cool sanitarium during the hot season, if not at too great a distance from the seat of authority, can be excused and even justified on the ground that the public have a direct interest in their rulers' possession of not only the mens sana, but the corpus sanum. Sir Charles Napier, indeed, seems to condemn all flying from the climate. In his celebrated "Leave of Absence" Order,* he censures officers for "scampering off to the hills the moment heat begins," which he says "is very like deserting posts from fear of climate." It is true that Sir Charles went to Simla himself, and seemed to enjoy it; but then he says "the Commander-in-chief does not go to Simla for pleasure, nor to avoid heat; he goes much against his will, because all the head-quarters' establishments are located at Simla. If he followed his own wishes," he adds, "he would establish his head-quarters at one of the large stations, where he would be among the troops:" and we have the fullest confidence in the sincerity of this declaration.

However, we exclude from consideration short absences on account of health, or to escape a season likely to impair the energies of a governor-general. The question we have mooted is, whether it is absolutely necessary that this high officer should examine the remote provinces of his government with his own eyes; and whether the injury which the public interests must sustain through his continued absence from Calcutta for two years, at distances which render communication with him difficult and dilatory, does not more than counterbalance the good which such personal inspection is unquestionably calculated to produce. We are strongly disposed to think that the balance of disadvantages is against these protracted absences, and we should not be surprised if, in the next Charter Act, some provision is made, either by changing the seat of government to a more central locality, or by enlarging the Governor-General's powers of delegating his authority, to remedy a source of evils which are not mere matter of speculation, but are felt and deplored.

UPON a late occasion† we remarked that, "if Asiatics should visit this country in sufficient numbers, and of a suitable quality, at this juncture, to give a new direction to European taste in the matter of dress, it will be a happy event should we condescend to become their pupils." It would have been presumptuous to have indulged a hope of seeing this salutary reform introduced not only by the lessons but by the example of the sex which, as the originators of costume, may justly be allowed to prescribe its laws; yet even this prospect is likely to be realized. Bloomerism has appeared amongst us : fair forms have displayed the elegance and decency of the Oriental attire, and the persuasive eloquence of female lips has reinforced its attractions. The superiority of that attire, in all the essentials of ease, gracefulness, and propriety, has been long acknowledged. Lady Mary Wortley Montague bore her testimony to the becomingness of the Turkish dress for females, having adopted it when abroad. "The first part of my dress," she says, in one of her letters, "is a pair of drawers, very full, that reaches to my shoes, and conceals the legs more modestly than your petticoats," &c. But, sensible that female apparel is a topic of some delicacy, we reverentially abstain from further pursuit of it, and, leaving the Bloomers to pioneer the way to improvements in their garb, and, as we hope, we add a few further reflections upon the coarser subject of our masculine raiment.

Bloom in their colours for a thousand years,

To disengage the mind from the trammels of habit and custom is at all times difficult. Man is confessed to be the creature of habit; he has been termed "a bundle of habits." Hume* rightly observes that we are acted upon, in the whole conduct of life, unknown to ourselves, by a species of instinct, or mechanical power, the chief operations of which are not directed by any such relations or comparisons of ideas as are the proper objects of our intellectual faculties. It is for this reason that we are reluctant to abandon anything to which we have been long accustomed, and in matters which concern the senses, the body unwillingly accommodates itself to changes. Fashion, a law originating in caprice, and which owes its authority to vanity and the imitative propensity of man, is more frequently the author of all such changes, than reason or reflection; in respect to dress, it is always so; yet this law is by many slowly obeyed: so intractable is habit. To attempt, therefore, to convince mankind, by dint of argument, that their costume, to which they have been so long habituated that they almost regard it as part of themselves, is inconvenient, ugly, and absurd, must be a nearly hopeless task.

There are two facts, however, which tell with great force against the whole scheme of the modern European dress: one is, that its unseemliness is so glaring that artists, unless constrained by despotical circumstances, in draping their figures, commonly repudiate all such costume, and adopt, often with an obvious incongruity, that of Greece or Rome, or else draw upon their own imaginations. Let any one compare the statue of Mr. Canning, in Palace Yard, with that of George III., near the Haymarket, and he will be at once struck by the conspicuous deformity of our male attire. The other fact is, that this attire, though it has been radically the same for several centuries, has varied in its details, and that all its fluctuations, antecedent to this very moment, appear to the present generation almost equally ridiculous. Leaving out of consideration, for the reason before suggested, the hoops, and stomachers, and toupées of the belles, and going no further back than the time of Hogarth, we defy the gravest face to look unmoved upon the grotesque male garments of the different classes at that day, depicted with so much fidelity by that inimitable humorist. We laugh at them because the dresses are so unlike our own; but the difference is in the species, not in the genus, and in less than a century, our costume will appear to our successors equally extravagant. Mutato nomine, de nobis fabula.

Has the Asiatic attire undergone these whimsical variations? Would the dresses of the Arabs and the Turks, of the Persians and the Hindus, 500 years ago, appear to their descendants so preposterous as those of our ancestors in the reign of Queen Anne appear to us? By no means. But it is said the Asiatics are slaves to custom, and that fashion has no influence amongst them. This is a mistake. Whilst the fundamental form of their garments remains unaltered, the Orientals vary the material, the colour, the mode of wearing, and even the subordinate details of shape and figure. The secret of their invariableness consists in this, that the principle of their dress is a reasonable one, and cannot be departed from without deviating into error.

Assuming, and we boldly assume, that, in point of beauty and elegance,—to which, indeed, the European costume has no pretensions,—the Asiatic enjoys pre-eminence, the next question regards their comparative convenience; and here the superiority lies also on that side. Comfort, health, facility of robing and disrobing, all the essential objects of dress, appear to be expressly consulted in the Oriental, and studiously rejected in the European, habiliments, which seem contrived in order to confine the limbs and obstruct the free circulation of the fluids, whilst for the adjustment of the several pieces an exorbitant demand is made upon our time. If the portion of our lives superfluously spent in the mere operations of dressing and undressing were accurately calculated, its dimensions would startle many who lament a want of time for legitimate and useful occupations.

Were it possible to prevail upon some good-natured member of the Legislature, who had ample leisure, and desired, in the language of the advertisements, to make himself useful, to move for a Select Committee to take this subject into consideration; and if (the present Ministers being friendly to all reforms) such Committee were appointed, we have little doubt that they would report their unanimous opinion, that each separate article of that graceless integument by which the noble form of man is disguised throughout Christendom,—from the awkward, unsightly hat, to the clumsy and crippling shoe,—is a disgrace to the age, and calls loudly for reform.

THE case of Lutchmee Ummal, to which we adverted in a former article,* has assumed an entirely new aspect. The leading facts of the case, as it originally appeared, were these.

A young Brahmin of high caste, Streenavassa Charry, becoming a convert to Christianity, sought the interposition of the Supreme Court at Madras for the recovery of his wife, who was detained by her Hindu relatives. The wife, a girl of fifteen, was brought into Court, in obedience to a writ of Habeas Corpus, and the judge (Sir W. Burton) decided that, under the Act of 1850,—which he termed "the charter of religious freedom,"—she was bound to cohabit with her husband, who, on his part, was inhibited from forcing her to take any food, or to do any act that would cause her to forfeit caste. The wife, when ordered by the judge to go to her husband, refused to stir, "twitching herself in the way young girls do when offended," and, entreaties failing, she was, by the judge's direction, carried by a constable. The relatives shrieked and yelled, the Brahmins clamoured and cursed; but Streenavassa obtained possession of his wife.

The propriety of this decision was in several quarters seriously questioned. It was argued that, by the Hindu law, the loss of caste, which Streenavassa had incurred, practically abrogated the marriage; that to enforce cohabitation was to subject the wife to a contamination which not only involved social incapacities and penalties, but, as she believed, destroyed her hopes of happiness in a future state; and that the rights of the Hindu wife were as much entitled to protection as those of the Christian husband. But, on the other hand, a different decision would have been in the very teeth of the Act of 1850; by the Hindu law itself, a woman, after marriage, ceases to belong to her own family, and becomes part of her husband's; and although the Hindus profess to consider the breach of caste obligations, on the part of the husband, as virtually dissolving the marriage-contract, they would not permit the wife to marry again; but would condemn her, at fifteen, to the perils and degradation of perpetual widowhood.

In our last issue it will have been seen that this poor girl, like Miss Talbot, has narrowly escaped being made a victim to an unscrupulous priesthood. Her relatives had the audacity to apply to the Court to reverse its decree, upon affidavits setting forth that she was under duress, and subjected, in defiance of the decree, to treatment which worked a forfeiture of caste; that she desired to leave her husband, and had declared her determination to do so. In short, a prima facie case of harshness, if not cruelty, was set up in these affidavits against the husband and the Rev. Mr. Symonds. Upon further investigation, however, it has turned out that the allegations in the native affidavits were a tissue of falsehoods. Lutchmee Ummal herself declared to certain gentlemen appointed by the Court to visit her, that she was under no restraint; that she was well treated, perfectly happy, and desired to remain with her husband. Further, she has expressly denied, upon oath, the allegations in the affidavits of her father and mother; and in making this deposition, she refused to be sworn in the Hindu form, but desired to be sworn upon the Holy Bible, as the only mode of binding her conscience, and she was so sworn accordingly.

It is, we think, very plain that Lutchmee Ummal from the first participated in her husband's rejection of the creed in which they had been educated; and that her repugnance to returning to cohabitation, after his conversion, was feigned, in compliance with the wishes or the commands of her relatives.

But had the fact been otherwise, and the wife had clung to Hinduism, it would be impossible to maintain that the judgment of the Madras Court was wrong, without rendering the inestimable law of 1850 a dead letter.

TO THE EDITOR.

Sir,—Many people, I dare say, like myself, have frequently seen and heard Pope's "leather or prunella" misquoted, misapplied, and misunderstood; but I hardly imagined that Lord Byron could commit so vulgar an error, and miss the true meaning;—the man whose love for and admiration of Pope led him to an almost savage animadversion on Bowles' edition of the poet's works. Yet so it is. Happening the other day to take up English Bards and Scotch Reviewers, I was surprised to find, in a note, an example of the unlooked-for misquotation and misapplication mentioned. The noble author there says, "Lord Carlisle's works, most resplendently bound, form a conspicuous ornament to his bookshelves:—

"The rest is all but leather and prunella."

That is, something trifling and insignificant, the "floci, pili, nihili," of Horace.

Now, Pope's line has no such sense, as will at once be seen when correctly quoted along with the context: e.g.

"You'll find, if once the monarch acts the monk,
Or, cobbler-like, the parson will be drunk,
Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow;
The rest is all but leather or prunella."

That is, the cobbler's apron, or the parson's gown.

CLOSE OF THE GREAT EXHIBITION.

The Great Exhibition of the Industry of All Nations closed on the 15th October. On a spacious platform, erected on the site of the crystal fountain, and covered with scarlet cloth, was placed a large table, with chairs around it for the members of the Royal Commission; the splendid ivory throne presented by the Rajah of Travancore to her Majesty being appropriated to Prince Albert. The area of the transept was reserved for the foreign and local exhibitors, the jurors, and others entitled to a special privilege of entry. These seats were occupied by a numerous and distinguished company, including Lord J. Russell, Sir C. Wood, the Earl of Carlisle, Sir George Grey, Mr. Labouchere, and other members of the Government. Several of the diplomatic corps were also present. The nave and galleries were crowded with spectators.

At twelve o'clock the Royal Commissioners, headed by the Executive Committee, moved from their apartments to the platform, accompanied by the Bishop of London, the choir performing the first verse of the National Anthem.

Lord Viscount Canning, as President of the Council of Chairmen of the Juries, read a report of their proceedings, the number of acting juries being thirty-four, each consisting of an equal number of British subjects and foreigners. The report stated the principle upon which the juries had been constituted, and their course of action. The medals were of two kinds; one (the prize medal), to be awarded by the juries, subject to confirmation by their groups, was given where a certain standard of excellence in production or workmanship had been attained—utility, beauty, cheapness, adaptation to particular markets, and other elements of merit being taken into consideration, according to the nature of the object. The other and larger medal, awarded by the Council of Chairmen, upon the recommendation of a jury, approved by its group, was the reward of some important novelty of invention or application, either in material or processes of manufacture, or originality combined with great beauty of design; not on account of excellence of production or workmanship alone. The reward of a council medal does not necessarily stamp its recipient as a better manufacturer or producer than others who have received a prize medal; it is rather a mark of such invention, ingenuity, or originality, as may be expected to exercise an influence upon industry more extended and more important than could be produced by mere excellence of manufacture. The number of prize medals awarded is 2,918; that of council medals, 170.

His Lordship then presented to the Prince a list of the names of the exhibitors held to be entitled to rewards, with the reports of the juries.

His Royal Highness, in the name of the Royal Commissioners, delivered a long reply, in which he thanked the juries for the zeal and ability with which they had fulfilled their arduous task, concluding in the following terms: "In now taking leave of all those who have so materially aided us in their respective characters of jurors and associates, foreign and local commissioners, members and secretaries of local and sectional committees, members of the Society of Arts and exhibitors, I cannot refrain from remarking, with heartfelt pleasure, the singular harmony which has prevailed among the eminent men representing so many national interests—a harmony which cannot end with the event which produced it. Let us receive it as an auspicious omen for the future; and, while we return our humble and hearty thanks to Almighty God for the blessing he has vouchsafed to our labours, let us all earnestly pray that that Divine Providence which has so benignantly watched over and shielded this illustration of nature's productions, conceived by human intellect and fashioned by human skill, may still protect us, and may grant that this interchange of knowledge, resulting from the meeting of enlightened people in friendly rivalry, may be dispersed far and wide over distant lands; and thus, by showing our mutual dependence upon each other, be a happy means of promoting unity among nations, and peace and goodwill among the various races of mankind."

At the close of the Prince's reply, the second verse of the National Anthem was performed, and the Bishop of London offered up a prayer of thanksgiving.

The Hallelujah Chorus terminated the proceedings, when the Prince and the Royal Commissioners took their departure amidst the cheers of the assemblage.

THE PORTE AND THE PASHA OF EGYPT.

A public meeting of merchants and others interested in the overland communication with India was held on the 14th inst., at the London Tavern, to consider and adopt measures for averting the danger which menaces the important British interests connected with the East, owing to the state of political affairs in Egypt.

Mr. Gregson, chairman of the East-India and China Association, who presided, opened the business by stating the object of the meeting. He observed that any interruption of the communication with our Eastern possessions through Egypt would be calamitous to the commercial interests of this country, prejudicial to the government of British India, embarrassing to the home authorities, and distressing to thousands of families; whilst it would check the progress of international intercourse, which promoted civilization and tended to prolong the peace of the world.

Mr. Briggs, in moving the first resolution, that a safe, speedy, and commodious transit through Egypt is essential to the interests of all nations, said that the communication through Egypt had been brought to great perfection under the present ruler of that country. He had macadamized a part of the road between Cairo and Suez in the Desert; he had increased the number of station-houses in the Desert, and had multiplied greatly the means of conveyance for passengers, both upon the Nile and the canal. He was willing to undertake, at his own expense, the projected railway between Alexandria and Cairo, and to increase, by every means in his power, the facilities for passing through Egypt; thus cementing more closely, not only the interests of India with England and Egypt, but, in a political point of view, promoting the highest interests of this country as well as Egypt. Abbas Pasha had, however, met with great difficulties since he succeeded to his present position, and now the climax of opposition had appeared against this railway; and if this opposition was not successfully encountered by those most interested in preserving this line of communication to India, Egypt would lose its trade, and would no longer be able to restrain the Bedouin Arabs of the Desert. If anarchy was introduced once again into that country, the communication through it would be subject to interruption and great danger; it was, therefore, imperative on those interested in the conveyance to make application to Government, to see that the convention of 1841 was strictly adhered to. If Abbas Pasha lost his authority and his interest with the natives, there could be no answering for the consequences.

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

Mr. A. Anderson, M. P., moved the second resolution, which was as follows:—

"That the interference of the Ottoman Porte in the internal administration of Egypt, as recently manifested by its assumption of the power to prevent the construction of the Egyptian railway, and to divest the Pasha of Egypt of the necessary authority to maintain order in that country, is calculated to injure the important British interests involved in the facility and safety of the transit through Egypt of the mails, passengers, and goods, to and from the East. That it is therefore expedient to press upon her Majesty's Government the necessity of a prompt and active interposition to prevent the Porte from proceeding further in the course which she has in this respect pursued; and that, with this view, the memorial to the Prime Minister now read be adopted, and put in course of signature."

This resolution, which was supported by the mover in a long speech, the motion being seconded by Mr. Larking, was likewise agreed to, as well as the memorial.

By another resolution, a committee was appointed to carry out the object of the meeting.

Mr. MacGregor, M. P., moved a vote, conveying to the Viceroy of Egypt an assurance of the sympathy of the meeting, and of their support by every legitimate means in the present position of his affairs.

This motion was seconded by General Briggs, and carried unanimously.

MISCELLANEOUS.

AUSTRALIAN GOLD.—By the Thomas Arbuthnot, the first consignment of Australian gold was received on the 8th inst. Its total value is about 1,000*l*. It includes several pieces of upwards of a pound weight, in addition to one of 46½ ounces, which is believed to be the largest specimen ever found in any part of the British dominions.

ILL-TREATMENT OF COOLIES IN THE WEST INDIES.—A letter from Trinidad, dated the 12th September, says:—"The Eliza has sailed for the East Indies, with 352 Coolies, who have taken away 18,000 dollars in bills of exchange, and specie to a similar or greater amount; thus abstracting from the colony, not only the services of 352 expert labourers, but cash to the amount of nearly 40,000 dollars, as the fruits of their toil."

A MARTYR IN JAPAN.—The Pope has conferred Beatification upon Father Juan de Bretto, who died a martyr in Japan.

An Indian paper describes the following mode of driving "a trade in summonses," which was at one time detected and suppressed in the Calcutta police court, and which illustrates the habits of native employes: A. applied for a summons against B. upon a charge of assault, and having obtained it, went to B. and demanded two or three rupees. B., a respectable native, being unable to quit his shop, or unwilling to expose himself to the annoyance of entering a court, paid the money, and the summons was destroyed.

BOOKS.

Sindh, and the Races that inhabit the Valley of the Indus; with Notices of the Topography and History of the Province. By RICHARD F. BURTON, Lieutenant Bombay Army. W. H. Allen and Co.

THIS is by far the best account we have had of "Young Egypt." It is evidently the fruit of very close and diligent observation and research during the five years' residence of the author in Sindh, the descriptions of which and of its inhabitants, hitherto published, he says, he found of little use. The country, as he observes, is one which will be, for two principal reasons, an important portion of our eastern empire: "it may be made the common commercial depôt of Central Asia; and it is an advanced line of posts thrown out to protect India from her natural enemies, the turbulent, warlike, and powerful trans-Indine nations."

According to Lieutenant Burton, the province is at present in an impoverished condition, wanting population and capital. The natives further complain of the absence of facilities for education. All classes seem to have suffered from the transition state which our rule initiated. The better classes are dissatisfied,—the Government officials at reductions, the jaghirdars at loss of emoluments; the middle classes lament the difficulty of finding employment; traders talk of the decay of manufactures, and the ryots of a scarcity of money. Mr. Burton looks upon these sufferings as temporary. Our policy is based upon the sound principle, that agriculture and commerce are the only sources of wealth to a country like Sindh; in time, he says, this principle will work there, and the wants of the Sindhians as regards education "will be eventually ministered to." A work which furnishes an accurate description of the country and the people will contribute no trifling aid to their progress, material and moral.

Beginning with a delineation of the general aspect of Sindh, its topography and history,—the latter presents few attractions to the archaeologist,—the author touches upon its economical incidents. The means of ameliorating the present state of Sindh, he says, must be sought in its canal irrigation, the imperfect system of excavation under the native rulers being one great cause of the land's decline. A sketch of the system of taxation under those rulers is given, which proves that the husbandman and merchant were by no means lightly assessed. Under our rule, the system has been assimilated to that of India, which the people, it seems, disapprove of, erroneously attributing their poverty to our mode of raising the revenue.

Mr. Burton supplies a very copious account of the dialects and the literature of Sindh, his notices of which, the first ever printed in Europe, are highly curious. As regards the literature, he asserts that no vernacular dialect in India, at the time of our taking the country, possessed more, and few so much, original composition. Its principal wealth, however, consists in translations, chiefly from the Arabic. In prose are versions of annals, and almost all the religious sciences of the Moslems, with tales, sometimes profane, but generally borrowed from sacred history. The poetical literature is much more valuable; it "yields not in importance either to the Maharrati, or the original compositions in the Hindi and Braj dialect." The specimens of Sindhi literature, chiefly poetical, given by Mr. Burton, are preceded by biographical notices of some of the most celebrated authors.

He next details the course of education in Sindh, amongst both Moslems and Hindus, under the native princes, and under our rule, which appears to afford the former fewer opportunities of study than the latter. There has been, Mr. Burton states, much unprofitable discussion amongst the present rulers of the province, as to the language which should be selected for literary and official purposes; some preferring Sindhi, others Persian, and others again Hindustani. The former, he presumes will succeed eventually, "as they are in the right."

The most interesting, perhaps the most important, portion of the work, is that which treats, in considerable detail, of the state of society in Sindh,—the native habits and customs, manners and ceremonies, and especially the peculiarity of the national faith, which acts strongly upon the general state of society. All these matters are discussed with fullness, and evidently by one perfectly familiar with them.

The concluding chapters are devoted to the stranger tribes of Sindh, to the Sindhis proper, and to the Hindu portion of the community, which occupies in Sindh the same social position as the Musulmans in India. The present race of Hindus in Sindh is of Punjabi origin, and they show a general tendency towards the faith of Nanuk, many castes having so intermingled the religion of the Sikh with their original Hinduism that the line of distinction can scarcely be discerned.

We can honestly recommend this work, not merely on account of its valuable materials, but of the judicious manner in which they have been used. It supplies a deficiency which the works of Pottinger, Burnes, and Postans left in our information respecting this part of our eastern territories.

MURRAY'S READING FOR THE RAIL:

OR CHEAP BOOKS IN A LARGE READABLE TYPE, to be Published occasionally, and varying in Prices from One Shilling and upwards.

The aim and object of the Publisher, in this Series, is to disseminate sound and entertaining information and innocent amusement, instead of the trivial, and often immoral, publications which are for the most part offered to the notice of RAILWAY READERS. He designs to introduce a class of works at once cheap, valuable, and instructive, not merely to be read on the Railway, and thrown aside at the end of the journey, but such as shall deserve a permanent place on the shelves of the library.

It will thus form an appropriate sequel to the HOME AND COLONIAL LIBRARY.

ACTUARY.—David Jones, Esq.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 14th of May, 1851, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.
20		£1,000	£19 6 8	£10 12 8
30	On or before	1,000	24 8 4	13 8 7
40		1,000	31 10 0	17 6 6
50	14th of May,	1,000	42 15 0	23 10 3
60	1846.	1,000	66 11 8	36 12 5

. The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assurers to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS a most excellent REMEDY for ABSCESSES and OLD WOUNDS.—Thomas Edwards, a labourer in Portsmouth Dockyard, received a severe hurt in his thigh, about four years back, by a piece of timber falling on him. An abscess formed in consequence of the injury, which defied the most eminent surgeons to heal, and he was, consequently, pronounced incurable, and put on the superannuated list, with a pension. Being now at liberty to try other remedies, he commenced using Holloway's Ointment and Pills, which have so effectually cured him, that he enjoys good health, and is as well able to work as any man.

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE monotony of a long succession of mails, bringing tidings of continued peace, is at length interrupted by intelligence of prospective warlike operations in the territory of our old enemy Dost Mahomed Khan, with the view of taking possession of the Valley of Dour, situated to the north-westward of the Wuzerees country, and adjacent to the districts occupied by the Afreedees and other hill-tribes, who have caused so much annoyance to our troops at Peshawur and Kohat.

The Bombay Telegraph, expressing some surprise that intimation of this projected movement had not been received from other quarters, quotes the following announcement from the Delhi Gazette :—

News of the gravest import has reached us from the North-west. In itself, perhaps, it is not much, but in the consequences that may ensue even a dimly prophetic eye may discern further conquests,—it may be, further disasters. The valley of the Dour, beyond the mountain range that forms the western boundary of the district of the Wuzerees, lies within the territories of Dost Mahomed. This valley has been annexed. We know not if the ameer has consented to this arrangement: we know not if he has been even consulted on the subject. Its annexation has been pronounced expedient, and it is annexed accordingly. As soon as the troops can be moved,—for sickness stands in no awe of discipline,—possession will be formally taken of the district, and a strong outpost probably established at the head of the Koorum river, so as to command the supply of water to the Bunnoo valleys. Setting aside the moral—or rather the immoral—view of the question, there can be no doubt as to the desirable nature of the acquisition. It lies exactly in the rear of the Wuzerees, the Afreedees, and the other hill-tribes, who can only be brought under a wholesome degree of restraint by main force.

The valley of Dour and the Dourees form very prominent topics in Major Edwardes's narrative of his doings in the Bunnoo country. He describes the former as about 18 miles long by $7\frac{1}{2}$ broad, surrounded by mountains, the river Tochee running through its centre; as richly cultivated, and containing no fewer than 150 fortified villages. The Dourees, whom he represents as claiming perfect independence of Cabul, he says "are great blackguards,—perhaps the most vicious and degraded tribe of the Affghan nation."

This measure, assuming the report to be correct, is probably a part of a plan in preparation for controlling the hill-tribes, who seem determined to provoke their fate. At Asnee they had made a dashing foray, and driven off the cattle grazing in the fields; and they are also said to be collecting in some force in the neighbourhood of Dera Ismael Khan. The approaching cold season, when there are no crops ripening, is the time when the parties of Afreedee and Khyberie robbers recommence their operations. They are a cunning, fierce, and merciless race, remorselessly taking human life on the most trivial occasions, deeming robbery and murder lawful occupation, not justly entailing punishment even when discovered,—as La Fontaine said of a certain failing of another kind :

Quand on le sait, c'est peu de chose,
Quand on l'ignore, ce n'est rien.

H.M.'s 60th and 22nd, it is said, are to form part of the force against the Afreedees, and that they will march towards Kohat previous to the relief of the Peshawur regiments. It appears likewise that there have been disturbances in the Eusofzye country, and that the commandant of the Guides has applied to the Government for assistance to keep these people in order, who are a very powerful tribe, and have a high opinion of their own strength and resources.

Afghanistan is represented to be in an unquiet state. The Delhi editor hears that Bahram Khan, son of Ursula Khan, had gone to Samet: that Syed Ukhbar, chief of Samet, was daily enrolling horse and foot, and that, as soon as he could muster 12,000 men, he proposed to march towards the Eusofzye country. From Cabul it is reported that Dost Mahomed Khan had presented the sum of 2,000 rupees to the Khyberree chiefs, as an earnest of his good will, at the same time desiring them to keep him well informed as to all movements in the district.

The report of the occupation of Herat by 12,000 Persians in the interest of the sirdars of Candahar, is contradicted. These chiefs, it is now said, dare not leave their capital, lest it should fall into the hands of their brother, Dost Mahomed Khan, whose projects respecting Herat are supposed to be "under deliberation" only. The 12,000 Persians turn out to be so many Persian residents at Herat, prepared to support the claims of Yar Mahomed's son. On the other hand, a letter from Peshawur states that the Persians had actually advanced on Herat; that the son and successor of Yar Mahomed had entered into negotiations with them, and that Hyder Khan's wife (the late chief's daughter) had proceeded to the city.

According to the Lahore Chronicle, the health of Maharaja Goolab Sing was not improving, though by no means in a dangerous condition. He had forwarded a requisition to a huakeem of Lahore, named Wulee Shah, to attend on him, and that personage, having obtained permission from the local authorities, left Lahore for Sreenugur. An intelligent native, who had lately returned from Cashmere, had given it as his decided opinion that a disturbance would take place on the death of the Maharaja, not because the party, who would be rebels, had any material chance of success, but because Jawahur Sing hated the family of his uncle, and believed himself to have been unjustly deprived of his patrimony. "We asked," the editor of the Chronicle adds,

Whether the son of Dheean Sing was making any preparations that gave colour to such a strong impression? "None; he knows that he is too closely watched, to allow of his doing anything of the kind; but the prestige of his father's name, and the general dislike with which Goolab Sing and his heir are viewed, on account of their alliance with the British, will secure him numerous adherents when the proper time may come. All revolutions and rebellions start with a prospect of success; that alone will obtain for Jawahur a numerous following."—Nous verrons. It was urged by our friend as an argument in favour of Jawahur Sing's colour of right, that although our treaty was with Goolab Sing, a very large portion of the purchase-money paid for Cashmere, came out of the coffers filled by his father, and violently appropriated by his uncle.

The fort of Chelas, which the Dewan Huree Chund thought he had reduced to the last extremity, still held out, and bid fair, according to the latest accounts, to give the army of the Maharaja much more trouble; several tribes, especially those from Gilghit across the Indus, were hastening to the assistance of Chulaseeas.

From Oude, we have the usual accounts of disorders in the country, and frivolity at the court. The Lucknow correspondent of the Englishman informs us, that the company of artillery, consisting of eighteen guns, attached to the Oude corps commanded by Captain Magness, had mutinied, and placed that officer in confinement, with three guns pointed on his tent. The artillery had been sent with three companies of infantry against a refractory zemindar, but the Government had, for some reason unknown, reduced the number of regimental hackeries. The men believed that this measure had been suggested by Captain Magness, and mutinied in revenge.

The same journal publishes long communications from its correspondent at Hyderabad, where it would appear that the new minister, Sooraj-ool-Moolk, is doing much to repair the condition of that state. He is represented by the writer as a highly intelligent man, quite capable of appreciating the true position of affairs, and above being frightened by bugbears. "The minister possesses the good will and confidence of General Fraser, and with the support and judicious advice of so able a counsellor, he would doubtlessly effect all necessary reforms and retrenchment without difficulty, and acquire the high credit of restoring this fine country to a prosperous condition."

The Agra Messenger states that there has been a serious affair in the Lushkur, at Gwalior, in which the Maharajah is implicated.

Unfavourable accounts are still given of the health of the troops throughout the Punjab. At Lahore, the sickness continues unabated in the town, cantonments, and the vicinity; the mortality in H.M.'s 96th Foot was still very severe. At Umritser, the sickness was nearly as great as at Lahore. The health of the European troops, both at Wuzerabad and Seealkote, appears to have suffered materially from the long continuance of dry weather. There was a good deal of sickness at Dera Ghazee Khan and Mithenkote. Sickness prevailed to some extent at Leia.

The Governor-General was, on the 24th of October, to hold a durbar for the reception of the hill chiefs previous to his departure from Simla, which durbar was to be followed on the 26th or 27th by another at Pinjore, for an interview with the Maharaja of Puteela and other Sikh chiefs of the protected states. After holding this durbar, the marquess would march, lightly equipped, across from Simla to Musooree and into Rohilkund, joining the main camp near Futteghur.

The Post-office Commission Report has been published: it recommends all letters to be sent at a uniform charge of three halfpence. Newspapers are to continue as at present, chargeable at a variable rate of from three halfpence upwards, the average being sixpence all over. English papers, which have heretofore been allowed double Indian paper weights, are to be charged the same as Indian journals. Papers which hitherto came free by Falmouth are hereafter to be charged three halfpence sea-postage at Bombay.

The new Siamese monarchs have already given evidence of their desire to introduce a more liberal system of administration. They have reduced the tonnage dues on foreign vessels entering the harbour of Bankok one-third below the sum at which they were fixed by the treaty of 1826.

The Japanese are represented to be suffering from a famine.

The accounts from the Cape of Good Hope are still gloomy and desponding. The Caffres do not appear to have received any effectual check in British Caffraria; they continue their career of devastation in the frontier districts, burning farms and homesteads, and carrying off cattle. "If this disastrous state of affairs continues much longer unchecked," one of the border journals observes, "the frontier will be stripped of every head of cattle and sheep, and the inhabitants, already pinched by want, will be absolutely starved—a famine in the land will be inevitable." Macomo treats the district of Somerset as his own, and though Lower Albany is said to have been purged of the enemy, a fresh one has appeared in the British Sovereignty beyond the Orange River, where the Resident has denounced the people of the two Basuto chiefs, Moshesh and Molitzani, as enemies, and called up all male inhabitants capable of bearing arms. The Dutch farmers, inhabitants of the Sovereignty, however, are averse to hostilities, declaring that not the slightest difference or cause of discontent exists between them and the tribes thus denounced! The Zuid Afrikaan endeavours to make out a case in favour of the Basutos:—

Sir Harry Smith, when visiting the country to the north-east in 1848, had an interview with the several native chiefs in and around what is now known by the name of the Orange River Sovereignty. The result of that interview was, a kind of alliance, in which the authority of the Queen, as umpire, we believe, was to be held supreme in all internal disputes between the contracting parties. One of these parties was a petty chief, named Gert Tsaibosch; another, the Barolong chief Moroko; another, the Basuto chief Moshesh; another, his friend Molitzani. In the course of time, petty disputes arise between the first two and the last named, which lead to hostilities and bloodshed. Complaints are made to the British Resident, who deems it his duty, upon the ex-parte evidence thus obtained, to call Molitzani to account, from whom he seems not to have obtained the satisfaction he required. He therefore assumes a threatening attitude. Moshesh now steps in to support Molitzani, whom he deems entitled to a fair hearing; but this hearing is refused. He claims an investigation, which, he states, will show Molitzani to be the injured, not the aggressive, party. This, also, is refused; and for the support he has given Molitzani, and for the part his subjects had taken in certain conflicts and seizures of cattle, he also is called to account. A formal demand is made to him, and not being complied with, the British Resident takes the field, along with his native allies, against Moshesh and Molitzani, by whom he is worsted in the very first engagement.

The savages, it is stated, are in no want of ammunition. Whence do they procure it?

To enable our readers better to understand the operations on the Cape frontier, we have given a sketch of the "Seat of War in Caffraria," and brief notices of some of the native chiefs.

THE SEAT OF WAR IN CAFFRARIA.

The large tract of country in South Africa called British Caffraria, which is now the chief seat of war on the frontier of our colony in that region, was taken from the Caffres in 1847, at the close of the last war, and annexed to the British crown. It extends from the mouth of the Keiskamma, along its eastern bank, to its northernmost source in the Katberg mountains; thence, along this range to the centre of Gaika's Kop; thence to the nearest source of Klip Plant's river, and down its right bank, to its junction with the Zwart Kei river, and from thence along the right banks of the Zwart Kei and Great Kei to the sea. This tract, of about 4,000 square miles, was apportioned amongst the Caffre chiefs who consented to become subjects of Britain, governing their people by their own laws. British settlers located themselves there, missionary stations and schools were introduced, and a chain of forts was constructed, with the view of bridling the Caffre tribes, who were further kept in order by native police, and by military villages, occupied by discharged soldiers, between the Great Fish and Keiskamma rivers. The forts which connect the Buffalo river, from its mouth, with the eastern frontier of the colony, communicate with the sea by the port of East London, situated at the embouchure of the river.

The capital of British Caffraria is King William's Town, built on the left bank of the Buffalo river, and forty miles from the sea. It was founded originally by Sir B. D'Urban in 1835, as the chief town of what he intended to be the province of Adelaide. The town, which is not fortified, has, since its re-establishment by Sir H. Smith, in 1847, become a place of considerable trade.

Beyond King William's Town, towards the mouth of the Buffalo, and eight miles distant from the former, is Fort Murray, a military station of little strength, but which serves as a post of communication. Further down the line of the river, towards the sea, about twenty-two miles, is Fort Grey, a cluster of "wattle-and-daub" huts, situated in the midst of the Kaga forest; and nine miles further, at the Buffalo mouth, is Fort Glamorgan, or East London, the fort occupying a fine defensible site on the west side of the river.

On the other side of King William's Town, sixteen miles to the N.W., along the base of the Amatola range, is Fort White, built in 1835 (named after Major White, who was killed by the Caffres shortly before, whilst sketching the country to complete his map), standing upon the Debe river, nearly opposite the Tabindoda, or Man Mountain, a very conspicuous peak in the Amatola range.

About ten miles further to the west is Fort Cox, built on a neck of land bounded on three sides by the Keiskamma river, which is joined on the north-east side of the post by the Little Amatola river. It is of stone, and so strong as to bid defiance to Caffres, by whom it was, however, invested at the beginning of the present war, when it held the governor, Sir H. Smith, who had gone there to meet the Gaika clans, and was obliged to cut his way through the enemy.

Still proceeding to the westward, at about nine miles from Fort Cox, is Fort Hare, so named from Lieut.-Governor Hare, whose endeavour to establish it in 1846 was one of the causes of dispute with the Gaika Caffres, which brought about the last war. It is situated on the east bank of the Chumie river, near the town of Alice, the capital of the division of Victoria. The "fort" consists of several acres of wattle-and-daub tenements, defended by palisades, with a tower on the south side.

Thirteen miles W.N.W. of Fort Hare is Fort Beaufort, on a peninsula formed by a bend of the Kat river; and twenty-eight miles S.S.W. from Beaufort, on the left bank of the Fish river, is Fort Brown, in the direction of Graham's Town, from which it is distant only eighteen miles. The ford over the Fish river, called Trompette's Drift, is a few miles lower down the river from Fort Brown, on the road to Fort Peddie, from which it is distant ten miles, and which stands upon the high ridge between the Fish and Keiskamma rivers. Fort Armstrong is twenty-three miles N.N.E. from Fort Beaufort, near the Kat river.

The Amatola country is described as remarkable for its sublimity and beauty. Sir J. E. Alexander, who accompanied the British field-force into Caffreland in 1835, upon entering the Buffalo mountains, says, "We were now in the midst of a glorious and most impressive scene, which it was impossible to contemplate, as we there stood, among some of the most gigantic features of nature, without feeling powerfully moved. The sublimity of the spectacle consisted in its vast extent of primeval forests, where, in many places, there were not even Caffre paths, so thick and entangled were these ancient woods." Of Caffreland generally,—a tract extending from the Keiskamma to the Um-tata,—he says, it is highly favoured by nature; "the air is so pure, the sky generally so serene, and the whole face of the country so park-like and inviting, that it realizes all we have heard of Arcadia. The continuation of the great range of the Winterberg bounds the country of the Amakosa (Caffres) on the north, and beyond these mountains are extensive plains, waving with rich pasture."

Besides British Caffraria, another tract, appropriated to the British crown, and to which the war seems likely to extend, is the Orange River Sovereignty, which lies to the extreme north-east of the colonial frontier, stretching into regions watered by the Great Orange river, which traverses South Africa from east to west like a great artery. Capt. Harris represents the country about this magnificent stream as realizing the ideas of scenery which exist in the fancy of poets. Its waters, 300 yards in breadth where he struck it, in lat. 29°, flowed in one unbroken expanse, resembling a smooth, translucent lake.

The Caffres are divided by Sir J. E. Alexander into three great nations,—the Amakosas, the Amatembies (or Tambookies), and the Amapondas. He describes them, especially the Amakosas, as "amongst the finest specimens of the human race;—tall, straight-limbed, and active, their every attitude graceful, and every motion easy." He adds, that "the head of the Amakosa is well-developed, and his expanded forehead shows considerable intellectual capacity." This description, however, will not suit all the varieties of this race, nor the Corannas, Mantatees, Bastards, Bataungs, Barolongs, and Basutos of the Sovereignty. All these tribes are savages in the strictest sense of the term. Their notions of religion were succinctly expounded by one of themselves, Hermanus, the chief of the Blinkwater Caffres, to Col. Napier. "I asked him," says this officer, "what was the belief of the Caffres? He said, they believed in nothing,—supposed everything in existence came from nothing, and would go to nothing."

The Caffres appear to have migrated to Southern Africa from the north. When the British became masters of the Cape colony, the Amakosas were internally divided between the adherents of three chiefs, Gaika, T'Slambie, and Hintza. Gaika succeeded in gaining the ascendancy, with the assistance of the Colonial Government, whose ally he remained until his death in 1820. His heir was Sandilli, though his youngest son, by his Great Tambookie wife Suta, the elder sons, Macomo and Tyalie, being regents of the tribe, and Anta, another brother, Botma, Eno, and Tzatzoe, being "great captains." Stock, Sonta, and Tola, are likewise Gaika chiefs. On the death of T'Slambie, his grandson Sewani succeeded him, his uncle Umhala being regent during his minority. Seyolo is also a T'Slambie leader. Pato, Kama, and Cobus, brothers, became the heads of the Congo tribe. Krel, the son of Hintza (killed in the war of 1846),—who is the head of the Amagaleka tribe,—is recognized as the paramount chief of the Caffres.

Krel and Pato have remained hitherto pacific or neutral in the present contest. The latter (described by Sir J. Alexander as "a stout-made, yellow, roguish-looking man"), who is said to be a Christian, when asked to join in the insurrection, is reported to have replied, "It shall never be said that Pato joined in a war against the colony." Umhala, also,—reputed a crafty man,—has professed friendship to the British. The leading spirit in the insurrection is Sandilli, who, in opposition to the wishes of his mother, Suta, had visited the several chiefs, and stirred up their animosity against the British, making important use of a wizard, or prophet, named Umlangeni, who had gained great influence over the minds of the superstitious people. Macomo is another active agent in the insurrection, and so is his brother Tyalie. Macomo was the most active and daring of the Caffre chiefs in the last war. He is short and thick-set; his complexion is very black; his eye keen, restless, and intelligent. His brother Tyalie is described by the same authority (Sir J. Alexander) as tall and handsome; his complexion dark brown, and his features regular, an insidious smile playing on his rakish-looking face. Queen Suta, now about fifty-six years of age, and a very fair Tambookie, who has been nominated Regent of the Gaika tribes,—having denounced her son Sandilli as not fit to be any longer a chief,—continues steady in her fidelity to the British, as in the war of 1846, but is not supposed to have much influence with her late husband's tribe.

We may close this sketch with a description of the national arms of the Caffres,—who have, however, added to them the musket. These are assegais, or javelins, tied up by thongs in a bundle of seven or eight, with a walking staff to keep them straight. The shafts are slender, five feet long, tapering to the butt. The blades are of various shapes; the common one is of the form of a laurel leaf, with a smooth, round neck, let into the shaft, and tied. The elephant assegai has a blade eighteen inches long, and the izaka, or "man-killer," has a jagged neck, and inflicts a most dangerous wound. Common assegai wounds are not difficult to cure, unless they touch a vital part.

BENGAL.

OUDE.

"The state of the country may not inaptly be compared to that of Europe during the middle ages, when chivalry and the system of feudal law flourished. The robber zemindars of Oude are the nobility and gentry of the land, and recognised as such. The relations between the zemindars and the king's representatives, the chucklidars, are the same as those which then existed between the vassal and his lord. The ties by which his retainers are bound to the zemindar resemble closely those which caused the attachment of the Highland clans to their chieftains. In the district of Baaghur, for example, the inhabitants have made a voluntary compact to fly to arms to any distance, whence the report of a gun can be heard, and to assist their lords against the Government, or in any plundering excursion, however unjust it may be. This spontaneous bond is not so much to be traced to their attachment to their zemindars, for whom indeed they ought to feel little love, but to their love of plunder and of fighting. Every man that can wield a sword is a soldier. His profession is military from his birth, and he ploughs his field with a tulwar in his hand. Their bearing is independent and soldierlike, and their sense of honour is as nice as an European duellist's. It is to this mistaken notion of honour that the many murders that so frequently take place in Oude are mainly to be attributed.

"But to return to the robber zemindars of Oude. Waging war with the chucklidars, and sometimes even with each other, robbing harvests, plundering and looting villages, and often even murdering the inhabitants, levying blackmail on merchants and travellers, imposing tolls and customs on boats passing their lands, &c., &c., are considered to reflect as little disgrace on them as the same acts of rapacity on the baronial robber knights of old. They are the princes of the land, and act like independent lords, when feeling themselves secure in their forts, of which they generally possess several. When they find one untenable, they fly into another, and when their resources fail them, eventually into a jungle, where it is impossible to pursue them. They then feel their advantage, and generally succeed in making some arrangement to be permitted to return to their lands, or they wait till another chukildar is appointed for the district.

"A petty zemindar, but a monster of cruelty, is Juggernath, formerly a chuprassee, who, by murdering his brothers, succeeded to an estate, which they had acquired during a former reign. Secure in his fort, he has not paid the revenue due to Government for three years (6,000 a year is the amount, I think, he has to give). He seizes on any traveller or bunneah he can lay hold of, and tortures them in every possible way to extort money. He brands them, flogs them, cuts them, and never releases the wretches till their relatives gives the sum he demands for their ransom. He has been ordered to be apprehended.

"There are many such characters in Oude, and the remarks I have given are not solitary."—Lucknow Corres. Englishman.

TIMBER IN THE PUNJAB.

At a meeting of the Agri-Horticultural Society of the Punjab, held at Lahore, on the 12th August, a minute of the Governor-General, on the growth of timber in the Punjab, was communicated by Sir H. Elliott.

"During the last season and the present," his lordship observes, "I have traversed the plains of the Punjab from north to south, and from east to west; not, indeed, visiting every district, but seeing quite enough of its several divisions to enable me to judge of the physical character of the new province by my own personal observation, aided and confirmed by the information I have sought from the officers stationed throughout its bounds.

"There is one characteristic of this wild tract which could not fail to strike the least observant traveller, and which must be the source of constantly recurring regret to any one who looks upon the plains of the Punjab with interest, and with reference to the wants or advantages of its condition. I refer to the almost total absence of forest trees, and even of fruit trees and of bushes, leaving the whole territory one continuous stretch of unrelieved plain, neither adorned by the foliage which is its natural ornament, nor stocked with the timber requisite for a thousand purposes in the every-day life of the people who dwell in it. This is a manifest, and will be shortly felt to be an increasing, evil, unless some measures are taken to provide at present a remedy for the future.

"It is unnecessary to inquire what were the causes which have led to this general want of timber. Whatever may be the cause, it certainly is not to be traced to any natural unfitness of the soil for producing forest and fruit trees in any part of the country, which is not actual desert. In the district of Hoo-sheerpoor, and in the upper portion of the Manjha, exceedingly fine timber trees are to be seen, and mango groves, not surpassed by any which I have yet noticed in the older provinces. The rapidity, too, with which the trees planted in gardens have grown up, and in military stations in the Punjab, which we have occupied only a few years, shows clearly that the soil, with a little care, is a grateful one, and that there is all the encouragement to a planter which rapid progress of his work, and an early return for his labours, are calculated to afford.

"While nature appears to me to offer no obstacles on her part to the future supply of this great deficiency, it is in my judgment of much importance that the Government should devise some means to that end, and should bring them into operation without delay."

After pointing out the evils of a deficiency of trees, and the necessity for a remedy, his lordship considers how the remedy can be applied; and with respect to the part to be taken by the Government, he says:—"The Baree Doab Canal and all its branches should have its banks carefully planted by the canal officers concurrently with its progress. The district officers connected with the inundation canals in the lower districts of the Punjab should be instructed to introduce the same improvement, commencing at once. On the great lines of road the same may be done by the executive officers with good effect; and wherever a dak bungalow, or a public building, or a chokkee is erected, there, unless space be wanting, trees should be planted. At all of these places, trees will not only be refreshing and useful hereafter, but they will have the additional advantage of being looked after at the commencement. It is probable that the men at the chokkees, &c., if properly managed, will take pleasure and pride in tending the young plants entrusted to them; if not, the care of them should be made a part of their duty, for which they should be held responsible. There can be nothing in this incompatible with the duties of any man, whatever may be his employment. In like manner, the headmen of villages should be made responsible for the protection of the plantations which may be made within their bounds."

MISCELLANEOUS.

The LONDON MAIL of August 7, via Bombay, arrived at Calcutta on the 10th Sept.

THE INDIA GENERAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY, in their report for the last half year, announced a profit of Rs. 36,878 5. 0. A dividend is recommended at the rate of Rs. 90 per share.

THE LINE OF ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH, which has been constructed from Allipore to Kookrahutta, is to be extended to Chandpal Ghaat on the one side, and Kedgerree on the other.

MAULMEIN AFFAIRS.—The Maulmein Times gives an account of another convict outbreak, attended by a fearful loss of life. On the 15th August, about 100 convicts were employed at the Government coal-shed, loading coal for the Tenasserim, when nineteen of them suddenly tossed away their baskets, leaped into the coal boat, and threw the lascars, who were on board, into the water. They then unfurled the sail, and steered their course for the other side of the river. Mr. Edwards, the deputy jailor, who was on the spot, immediately sent information to certain gougns, and meanwhile endeavoured to secure a boat to follow the convicts. Finding, however, that they were making their escape, and would soon be in safety, he levelled his own musket, and shot the helmsman dead, thereby checking the progress of the boat for a moment. Two boats were at length procured, and Mr. Edwards in one of them gained rapidly upon that taken by the fugitives. As soon as they came within range, the peons in Mr. Edwards's boat repeatedly fired upon the convicts, though, it is said, ordered to desist by Mr. Edwards himself. The convicts were then called upon to surrender, which they did upon a promise of being treated with mercy, but they were again attacked by the police and their gougns. The total loss was three killed, four dangerously wounded, and seven slightly hurt.

ASSAM GRASS.—Some of the nettle grasses of Assam are known to be identical with those from which the grass-cloth of China is made. In the last number of the Agricultural Society's Journal is to be found a very full report on these grasses by Major Hannay. They are known in Assam by the name of Rheea, and two of them possess a beautiful and very strong fibre. We have seen specimens of the fibre prepared in England by a process for which a patent has been taken out, which are equal to silk for brilliancy and softness. One specimen is from the Dom Rheea, the Urtica nivea. Pieces of cloth accompany the fibre, made by mixing woollen yarn, in the same manner as the alpaca cloths are prepared with wool and silk. It is stated to us that the nettle fibre possesses the property of mixing readily with wool and other fibrous substances, which makes it peculiarly fit for the light cloths now so generally worn; but, from the appearance of the prepared fibre, we should think it might be advantageously manufactured into cambric of the finest quality, which would of course command a very high price. Major Hannay says that this plant is extensively cultivated by the fishermen in Assam for their nets,—a purpose for which the great strength of the fibre peculiarly qualifies it. It is capable of cultivation to any extent that may be required, and he estimates the produce at not less than six, and probably as much as twelve, maunds of fibre from one English acre. This would make the cost very trifling, as the fibre easily separates from the stalk, more so than flax or hemp. It is, therefore, by no means improbable, that an extensive trade will spring up in this elegant material, and that it will become an important addition to those textile substances which India already exports.—Englishman.

THE LATE MR. BETHUNE.—The following resolution was recorded at a meeting of the Council of Education: "The Council desire to record their deep sense of the loss their own body and the cause of education in India have sustained by the death of their late president, the Hon. J. E. Drinkwater Bethune. A cultivated mind; a catholic taste for and appreciation of general literature, combined with more than ordinary proficiency in the exact sciences; lofty views of the duty of education, and an ardent desire for the dissemination of its benefits, rendered him peculiarly fit to direct the course of public instruction; and the exercise of these qualities were so prompted by benevolence, so regulated by a conscientious sense of responsibility, and so frequently accompanied by acts of personal munificence, as to earn for Mr. Bethune a high place amongst those who have laboured for the improvement and development of the native mind, and to entitle him to the admiration of his own countrymen, and the affectionate gratitude of the inhabitants of this country."

Ranee Surnomoy, the widow of the late Rajah Kishenmath, has, with a liberality as rare as it is creditable, presented Rs. 1,000 to the Bethune Endowment Fund. From whom could such a tribute come so gracefully, in the cause of her own countrywomen, as from a Hindu lady of rank? We should be glad to see many of her wealthy countrywomen and countrymen following her example.—Hurkaru, Sept. 3.

THE NUMBER OF OFFICERS, in all branches of the service, who have passed the various examinations in the Oriental languages, up to July, 1851, is 956, viz. artillery, 95; engineers, 15; cavalry, 57; European infantry, 28, and native ditto, 761.

BAROO GYANENDRA MOHUN TAGORE, the new convert to Christianity, is delivering a series of religious lectures, at his own house in the Durrumtollah. The lectures are chiefly intended for the benefit of his own countrymen.

JOTEE PERSAUD.—In obedience to a despatch from the Governor-General and in accordance with the orders of the Court of Directors, Sir R. Barlow, judge of the Sudder Court, will proceed at once to Agra, there to investigate and inquire into the course pursued by the magistrate of that place previous to the commitment of Jotee Persaud, and to report upon the nature of the evidence brought forward against that individual, and the mode in which it was obtained. Sir Robert is also to investigate and report upon the trial of Mohesh Doss; in fact, to elucidate and epitomise the whole proceedings, in the case of "Government v. Jotee Persaud," preparatory to their being laid before Parliament, in accordance with the promise of Lord Broughton.—Englishman, Sept. 16.

SIR R. SHAKESPEARE, the Agra Messenger hears, had been recalled to his former post at Gwalior, an express having reached him at Seepree.

MOHUN LALL has requested the Lahore Chronicle to disclaim, on his behalf, "any participation in the recent publications affecting the character of the late Sir William Macnaghten." The same paper informs us that the moonshee proposes "vindicating himself more fully at an early opportunity."

THE MOFUSSIL BANKS AND THE MILITARY COURTS OF REQUESTS.—The Friend of India, commenting upon an order issued by the Commander-in-Chief, relative to the jurisdiction of Military Courts of Requests (which is given in another column), observes:—"It is scarcely possible that this order should not seriously affect the interests of the Mofussil banks. The army is indebted to those institutions, as is generally supposed, to the extent of nearly a million sterling. In every case of accommodation, the debtor makes an assignment on his pay, which has hitherto been punctually deducted. The Courts of Requests have distinctly recognized the existence of these obligations, and in awarding retrenchments from the pay of officers, who have been brought up before them, have considered the sum at their disposal to consist of the pay and allowances of the officer after the bank instalment had been deducted. The new order states, that the Court of Requests has control over the whole of the pay of an officer, notwithstanding any hypothecation he may have made of it to any one, and that they are at liberty to award the whole of it to his creditors. The priority of payment which the banks have hitherto enjoyed is thus destroyed, and they can place little dependence on any arrangement for repayment which may have been made with them. Any officer who may have contracted a loan, and came under monthly stoppages, may, by a little pecuniary indiscretion,—the tendency to which will have been rather fostered than checked by the ready kindness of the Bank,—put it out of his own power to redeem his pledge, and the Bank must, in that case, come down upon his securities. That generous office, which every officer has hitherto been so prompt to undertake for his friends, will hereafter involve rather a heavy and awkward responsibility. Indeed, so seriously is this new order likely to impede the loan operations of the Banks, that an indifferent spectator might be induced to trace it up to a benevolent wish, on the part of the authorities at head quarters, to stop the progress of borrowing in the army."

THE PROFESSORSHIP OF BISHOP'S COLLEGE, vacated by the death of the lamented Professor Street, is to be split into two, according to the Morning Chronicle, and the Rev. S. Slater is to be appointed to one. This is said to be done by the Bishop of Calcutta, who is anxious to have the clergy of the diocese provided for; in other words, to prevent the sectarian influence at home nominating a successor of the same principles in the room of Mr. Street. The bishop is visitor of the college, but we very much doubt whether his lordship is invested with the plenary power of endowing new professorships, or abolishing old ones. The college rules always contemplated three professors, but there never have been students enough to require so many; so that two have (the talents of the professors being considered) sufficed for the purposes of tuition. We know when it was desired to dismount poor Mr. Street, the S.P.G.F. maintained its rights, and we imagine it will do so even now.—Citizen, Sept. 16.

GHOLAB SING, it is said, continues to exhibit a very grateful feeling towards the British Government, to whom he says he owes everything. He is very attentive to British officers, and states that he would rather see one of them at his durbār than fifty lacs of rupees?

MR. WOOD.—We have not hitherto alluded to the dismissal of Mr. Wood, the Calcutta agent of the North West Bank, but the following story is too rich to be passed over. An officer, who had stood security for a friend, was about to depart for Europe, when orders reached Mr. Wood to stop him at any cost. The instructions arrived too late, the vessel had started, but Mr. Wood took a steamer and overtook her at the Sandheads, accompanied, of course, by a bailiff. Unfortunately, the day he arrived there was Sunday, but he explained the instructions of the bank, adding that the friend for whom he was surety was still paying his instalments regularly. The officer, however, knowing he could do nothing on Sunday, laughed in his face, and Mr. Wood returned to Calcutta with the hire of the steamer, Rs. 3,000, thrown away. Hereupon the military directors of the North West Bank determined upon his dismissal, and it was effected with a martial promptitude, which reflects more credit upon their generalship than on either their courtesy or judgment.—Friend of India.

METEORITE.—In the night of the 30th November last, a meteoric stone fell into a paddy field at Shalka, a village in zillah west Burdwan, accompanied by a noise, which some of the villagers thought was thunder, others described as a rolling (gurgur) or crackling (char-char) noise, and a light; the sky being clear. The main portion of the stone, about three feet long, buried itself in the soil to the depth of about three feet. All agreed in stating that it came from the south; the angle it made with the earth being about 70 degrees. Upon an analysis of the mineral by Mr. Piddington, at Calcutta, the complete absence of nickel, cobalt, and magnesia, was established. In 100 parts, 69 were silica, 27 iron peroxide, and 2 oxide of chrome.

MRS. WYNCH.—A touching little episode in that great romance of which the late Union Bank furnished the subject, is narrated in a lithographed circular now lying before us. Mr. P. M. Wynch, formerly of the Bengal Civil Service, died in the year 1841, and from pecuniary losses in the failures of 1833 and long continued illness, he left his widow and family with no other provision than a sum of £9,300 settled on his wife and four children. On his decease, this property was taken in charge by the Ecclesiastical Registrar, Sir Thomas Turton, who did not apprise the widow of his proceedings. Dissatisfied with the arrangement thus forced upon her, Mrs. Wynch applied to Sir John Peter Grant, not in his judicial capacity, it would seem, but as a friend, and Sir John appears to have rescued the estate from the hands of the registrar. About this time Sir William Casement, one of the trustees under Mr. Wynch's will, died, and, thereupon, Sir J. P. Grant wrote to Mrs. Wynch, proposing that he and his son, Mr. W. P. Grant, should become her trustees. To this she assented, directing, however, that the trust funds should remain invested in Government paper. But the paper was sold, and Mrs. Wynch was informed that with the proceeds eighty shares in the Union Bank had been purchased on her account. She remonstrated against this, and requested that the money might be again invested in Government securities; but, as her request was not attended to, she placed the matter in the hands of her attorney. It was too late, however, for two months after this the Union Bank failed—and it subsequently appeared that no shares had been taken in her name. On the insolvency of the Grants, father and son, on the death of the former and loss of office by the latter, Mrs. Wynch lost her faint hope of recovering her property, which may indeed be regarded as lost to her for ever. She, the widow of a Bengal civil servant, has now only 48l. a year, and a small sum from terminable annuities, on which to support herself, with two sons to feed and educate. It is about as hard a case as even the annals of the Union Bank and its failure record.—Hurkaru, Sept. 10.

PUBLIC HEALTH.—The present, from all accounts, appears to have been a remarkably unhealthy year amongst the native population. Small-pox, cholera, and fever, had done their work with ghastly industry throughout the central provinces. It is the very general opinion of natives that this part of India has become more unhealthy of late years than it was formerly; of course they recollect that it was of old subject to epidemic attacks of the most general and disastrous description, such as that of the cholera in 1817 and 1818; but what they think is that illnness of different kinds has become more constant and unremitting, one malady succeeding another with unsparing celerity. To a great extent, perhaps, this idea is imaginary, but still notions do not spread amongst a large body of people generally, without some sort of foundation. We think some public inquiry into the matter would be desirable, and should it appear that the provinces had become more unhealthy, it would be well worth investigating what probable causes might be assigned.—Delhi Gazette, Sept. 13.

A TAME ALLIGATOR, at Pandooh, has arrived at a degree of civilized refinement, such as we sometimes hear of, but seldom witness. This saurian sybarite, some twenty feet in length, Kalikan by name, leads a life of ignoble ease in a large tank devoted to religious purposes, and of which himself is the presiding divinity. The mere sound of his name tempts him from his oozy repose, and should the worshipper be provided with a fowl for a live offering, you will see the water-god paddling across his aqueous domain, and approaching his votary near enough to catch the oblation in his jaws, and swallow it, feathers and all.—Mofussilite.

THE BENGAL BANK has agreed to receive in deposit the Government paper belonging to public companies, and to realize the interest thereon, provided that such companies are constituents of the bank. This improvement will be no slight convenience to many of the joint-stock associations.

THE BUDDER-OD-DEEN MOUNT.—The Lahore Chronicle records a visit paid by a party of officers to the mount of Budder-od-deen (so called after a skeikh of that name, whose tomb on the summit is a resort for pilgrims), near Dhera Ismael Khan. After between three and four hours' hard climbing, up one continued slope from bottom to top, they reached the summit, which appearances induced them to calculate at from three to four thousand feet above the level of the sea. On the top they found a few fakeers' huts; their occupants were exceedingly polite, and declared they had never seen the face of a European before. According to them their mountain was one of those on which Bahawal Huk and three other saints had met previous to their division of the world among the four. As a proof of the sincerity of their belief, they showed, in one of their huts, a bed, some clothes, and cooking utensils, kept in a state of preparation for the use of any one of these saints should he ever return to the spot. The visitors are said to have declared that the temperature on the top of the mountain was as delightful as the view obtained from it on a clear day was extensive. In a very small pail, the thermometer ranged from 60 to 85, and as a proof of the general nature of the climate, it is asserted that European wild flowers and grasses were found growing in great abundance and variety; amongst them sweet peas and daisies. Trees there were few. A considerable expanse of table land was found on the summit, and the mountain appeared to stand alone in the desert, though surrounded at its base by small hills. The Indus, the Goombela, and the Koorum, as well as Eesakhel and Dhera Ismael Khan, were within sight. Rain water alone is procurable on the top, there being no natural springs; but the visitors were shown a spot in which a puka well was said to have once existed, but never to have been used within the memory of man.

MR. T. R. DAVIDSON, of the Bengal Civil Service, Resident of Nagpoor, expired on the 20th of August at that station. The Citizen thus writes of him:—"The health of this able officer, we have heard, was long very precarious, and ultimately determined him to quit the country. It appears he stayed a 'little too long' which has caused so many who might have prolonged their existence in Europe, to lay their bones in India soil. Mr. Davidson was always remarkable for the possession of talent, though at one time so averse was he to any cultivation of it, that in common with a contemporary now in the council of India, he incurred the serious displeasure of Government, and both with difficulty obtained a probationary period of indulgence before the last penalty in the power of the authorities was inflicted. The term of grace was usefully employed, as the subsequent eminence of the repentant student evinced. Mr. Davidson's natural abilities, and business-like qualities, were unfortunately clouded by serious infirmities of temper, due, no doubt, to his always weak health, but which materially impaired his usefulness in subordinate grades of the service, and induced those who had transacted business with him to hold his talents cheap. This, however, unjust to a certain degree, was not unnatural, for when he recovered his equanimity, few were more unwilling to atone for their faults. Among other posts successively filled by Mr. Davidson were those of the Commissioner of Revenue, secretary to the Government of India in the Home Department, and a member of Lord Ellenborough's celebrated Finance Committee. He ultimately, like Mr. Bushby, shifted into the political line, and successively held the appointments of Resident at the Courts of Luknao and Nagpoor."

PLUMBAGO has been discovered in large quantities, near Almorah, of a good quality and equal to the second sort of Cumberland lead. The article is represented to exist in great quantities.

SUB-ASSISTANT SURGEONS.—We have been given to understand, for some time past, that the Government have under consideration a proposition to invest with judicial functions sub-assistant surgeons at isolated stations in the Punjab.—Lahore Chron.

MORTALITY IN LAHORE.—We incidentally alluded the other day to the mortality of Lahore, in consequence of a correspondent of the Mofussilite having stated that the deaths amounted to between 300 and 400 a-day. The question of the comparative mortality in villages around the town, as regards their position amidst the ruins of Lahore, and in localities free from the excavations that abound in the vicinity of the town, having been mooted at a recent meeting of the Sanitary Committee, the Commissioner, as president, forthwith made arrangements for obtaining accurate returns of the mortality, not only in these villages, but also in Lahore and its suburbs, with the view of testing the correctness or incorrectness of the surmises that were entertained on this highly important subject. These arrangements were, with the zealous assistance of the deputy commissioner, speedily completed, and we have before us the first results of the official inquiry in the shape of a return of the mortality in Lahore, and in all the villages within three and a half miles of the town, from the 1st to the 7th of September. According to these returns, the population of the town of Lahore and its suburbs amounts to 71,598, and the deaths have, during the period specified above, been returned as,—fevers, 196, other diseases, 4, total, 200; showing an average percentage of 279 for the week, or of 18½ per cent. on the whole year, undoubtedly a very large number, and, as the returns show, entirely owing to the extraordinary prevalence of fever during the period under review. In the thirty-five villages enumerated in the return, the population of which aggregates 19,037, we find the following result: fever, 67, other diseases, 10, total, 77; exhibiting a much larger (404) average per-centage than that of the town, amounting in the year, to 21 per cent.—Lahore Chron. Sept. 20.

POST-OFFICE COMMISSION.—The long-expected report on the state of the Indian post-office has at last appeared. The following are the propositions of the commissioners:—An uniform half anna rate of inland postage on letters not exceeding ½ tola in weight; alteration in the scale of weight for inland postage; discontinuance of differential rates of postage in favour of law papers, &c.; discontinuance of differential rates in favour of important newspapers; change in the mode of charging ship-letter postage; charge in the scale of weight for charging ship newspaper postage; consolidation of steam and inland postage on steamer letters; compulsory use of stamps in all cases of prepayment; enforced prepayment of letter postage by means of a double charge on unpaid letters; alteration in the scale of banghy postage, both as to weight and distance; uniform pamphlet postage of one anna on parcels not exceeding 20 tola; consolidation of steam and inland postage on books, pamphlets, &c.; entire abolition of franking, and charge of postage on official letters to public departments; extension of the exclusive privilege of the post-office in the letters; reorganization of post-office establishments; disconnection of post-master-general from the presidency post-offices; simplification in the process of receiving and delivering letters; the use of letter-boxes, and discontinuance of the practice of giving receipts for ordinary letters; entire discontinuance of the detailed registry of ordinary letters; special registration of letters; more extended use of accelerators, and increase in the number of delivery peons; increase in the number of receiving-houses; improvement in the present mode of keeping accounts; preparation of a general manual for the guidance of postmasters; general use of transit-bags; establishment of sorting-offices; introduction of a system of fines; extension and improvement of the district dawks.—Englishman.

THE ANNUAL SALE OF KUMAON TEA took place at Almora, on the 3rd of September, and the following prices were realized:—Green teas, maximum, per seer, Rs. 8, minimum Rs. 6. 2. and average Rs. 7. Black teas (souchong and pouchong) maximum Rs. 6. 10., minimum Rs. 4. 8., and average Rs. 5. 12. We are told that requisitions for these teas have increased considerably, and the prices show that they maintain their good character. Mr. Fortune, who has recently examined all the plantations by order of Government, has pronounced the Himalayas admirably suited for the cultivation, and recorded his opinion that many of the tea plantations are thriving as vigorously as the finest he had seen in China. The Chinese manufacturers brought from the green tea districts in Northern China, those of Hway Chow, have introduced an improvement that was much required.—Lahore Chron.

LOSS OF THE PACHA.—The local representatives of the Peninsular and Oriental Company have resolved to institute a thorough inquiry into the circumstances attending the loss of the Pacha and her valuable freightage. It is said, too, that the underwriters concerned in the fifteen lakhs of treasure sunk with that vessel, have determined to contest payment of their policies, on the ground that the accident by which the loss was occasioned was not one of the nature contemplated in the insurance.

On-mrs.—We hear on good authority that Mr. Mansel, 2nd member of the board of administration of the Punjaub, is named as successor in the Nagpore residency to the late Mr. T. R. Davidson. Mr. C. Allen, at present engaged in the commissariat and other committees of inquiry, it is said, will succeed Mr. Mansel at Lahore, leaving the commissionership of Meerut to Mr. Franco. The judgeship of Saharunpoor will thus become vacant, but we have not heard who is likely to obtain it.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

EUROPEAN COURTS OF REQUEST.

Adjutant-General's Office, Head-Quarters, Simla, Sept. 4. 1851.—Sir,—The Commander-in-Chief having reason to believe that European Courts of Request, generally, are under the erroneous impression that they are restricted in their awards to the half of an officer's pay; and also that these tribunals, previously to passing decrees against officers used before them, are accustomed to take into consideration engagements for the payment of monthly instalments to banks which such officers may have entered into; I am directed to annex, for your information, and for the future guidance of European Courts of Request, held within your command, the accompanying extract from an official memorandum on the subject by the judge advocate-general, No. 554, of the 16th ultimo, and to request you will be good enough to cause the strictest attention to be paid by these courts to the opinion therein contained.

I have, &c.

H. T. TUCKER, Lieut. colonel,
Adjutant-general of the army.

To the officer commanding.

Extract from Memorandum by the Judge Advocate-General.
No. 554, of the 16th Ultimo.

Nothing can be clearer than these two points:—

First, that the whole of an officer's pay, coming to him in any month, is available to satisfy decrees of Courts of Requests.

Secondly, that an officer's having given orders on his pay for instalments in favour of a bank, presents no bar to the decrees of Courts of Request being satisfied. By pay coming to him is understood the residue of his pay and allowances, after deducting the stoppages made by the rules of the service for the Military and Orphan Funds, and for the Band Fund in regiments having bands. But the whole bulk of such residue is liable to be appropriated to satisfy decrees of Courts of Request, notwithstanding any other disposition of it, or any part of it, which an officer may have made. These decrees supersede and push aside any orders on his pay which an officer may have previously given. It is therefore unjust to put off the liquidation of the proved demands of creditors, in order to give a preference of payment to a bank.

APPLICATION FOR STAFF APPOINTMENTS BY OFFICERS IN H.M.'S SERVICE.

Head Quarters, Simla, 5th Sept. 1851.—The Commander-in-Chief in India is pleased to direct that all applications to his Excellency, for appointments on the staff, shall be transmitted to the military secretary through the commanding officer of the corps to which the applicant belongs, or through the heads of departments, when the applicant happens to be employed in any department of the staff.

The transmitting officer will give his opinion on the qualifications of the officer applying for an appointment, especially stating whether he has received from him that support and assistance which he ought, in his situation in the corps or department, to have afforded.

A statement of service should also accompany all applications of the above nature.

COURT-MARTIAL.

ENSIGN WILLIAM HAYES FORSHALL, 4TH N.I.

Head Quarters, Simla, Sept. 10, 1851.—At a general court-martial assembled at Rawul Pindee, August 30, Ens. W. H. Forshall, 4th N.I. was arraigned on the following charge:—

With having, on or about June 1, 1851, when under arrest at Rawul Pindee, and ordered to confine himself to the limits of cantonments, broken his arrest, and, in direct violation of the terms of it, proceeded to Murree.

Finding—Is guilty.

Sentence—To be cashiered.

Approved and confirmed.

(Signed) W. M. GOMM, Gen. C.-in-C. East-Indies.

Recommendation—The court, on account of the long time (six months) that the prisoner has been under arrest, beg to recommend him to the favourable consideration of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

Remarks by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

1. The Commander-in-Chief concurs in opinion with the court, that the charge has been fully proved against the prisoner.

2. His Excellency regrets that the circumstances to which the prisoner's contracted term of arrest are attributable, do not warrant his complying with the recommendation of the court.

3. The sentence will therefore be carried into effect.

The name of Ensign Forshall will cease to be borne on the returns of the 4th N.I. from the date of publication of this order at Rawul Pindee, of which a report is to be made to the adjutant-general of the army, and to the assistant adjutant-general at the presidency.

MADRAS.

THE MADRAS UNIVERSITY.

The Madras University is in a sad state of confusion. The students have rebelled and the governors are divided in opinion. An unauthorized breaking up is threatened, with the view of bringing down upon the heads of the institution the vengeance of our native aristocracy.

From its first establishment the school has been devoted to the education of the higher castes, not as a matter of duty, but from politic motives. It was thought advisable that European knowledge should be imparted in the first instance, to the classes who by birth and position had weight with the community, and who would no doubt be found in turn willing to enlighten the masses.

A short while since, government ordered the head master, Mr. Powell, to receive a number of lads from the medical school, and of course the mandate was obeyed. Amongst the number was a native Pariah, against whose admission the Hindu scholars protested in a body. Modesty was never a conspicuous quality in the students of the high school, and in this instance the young Pillays, Chetties, and Soobarays, conceiving themselves quite able to argue the point, sent letters to the governors, in which they complained of the pollution to which they were daily exposed by the presence of a Pariah, and demanded that he should be expelled. No notice was taken of the impudent demand, upon which the paternal Pillays, Chetties, and Soobarays interfered, and backed up the requests of their damaged offspring, and silence being still preserved by the Board, the matter was referred to government. Amongst the governors are a couple of natives. The one, Runganadam Shastri, is a Brahmin, who received his education at the high school. He was made interpreter of the Supreme Court, and enjoys an income of perhaps a thousand a month, as the reward of his English learning. The other, Streenavassa Pillay, is the well-known chairman of Patcheappah's trustees, in which capacity he has incurred much hostility from his countrymen. Both were thought superior to the prejudices of ordinary Hindus, and have been much petted and caressed by Europeans in consequence, but the idea that education has expanded the sympathies of the Brahmin, or that intercourse with the English had broken down the pride of the Pillay, turns out to be quite erroneous. Streenavassa has resigned his place at the board rather than sanction the gift of knowledge to a Pariah, and Runganadam, after many ineffectual attempts to avoid giving any opinion at all, has recorded his vote on the same side. As a matter of course the impure object of all this mischief and trouble attends the school daily, so that it is of no use for the twice-born children to go through the cleansing ceremonies, seeing that the work would be destroyed as fast as it was done. They postpone the general dip till the government, by listening to their reasonable prayer, shall have recognized the doctrine, that ignorance and degradation is ordained of heaven.

It is not to be supposed for a moment, that the government will give way on this question. The native teachers in the University who at first espoused the cause of the infected boys, gave in, we believe, after balancing for two hours only, the blessings of pice against the horrors of pollution. But a harder battle on the same cause of quarrel, was fought and won by the missionaries of the Free Church in Madras a dozen years since. Fifty scholars left them rather than endure the presence of a couple of Pariahs, and at this moment, the outcast and the Brahmin sit side by side, and as it sometimes happens, the one is at the top of the class and the other at the bottom. And it must not be imagined, that the poverty of the scholars induces them to bear with what they might be supposed to consider in secret an outrage on their faith and feelings. Two-thirds of them are the children of parents whose incomes range from Rs. 17 to Rs. 400 monthly.

The Board of Governors at the University, cannot now form a quorum, and so it is likely that Sir Henry Pottinger may from that circumstance be forced to carry out some of his long-announced changes. Be this as it may, we hope that his first measure will be to get rid of native obstruction. Let the Runganadams and Pillays carry on their bigotted warfare against knowledge with weapons of their own manufacture. They have sense enough to see that the tendency of education is to level the distinctions of caste, and it is but natural that they should contend with it to the uttermost.—Athenæum, Sept. 20.

THE MOPLAH AFFAIR.

The source of the tragical events that have taken place at Colatoor, is a determination on the part of the Moplahs to acquire an ascendancy over the Hindus, who, as the principal landlords of that district, are as much hated by the former body as Protestant landlords are by the Roman Catholics of Ireland. Intimidation of the unfortunate Nair proprietors is the means employed to secure for the Moplahs the end they have in view, and official measures unluckily conduce to their success. A too liberal system has been established of late years, which, by vastly increasing the number of Moplah employes, has given them a false local superiority, whereby they are encouraged to grasp at permanent pre-eminence over their rivals, whom they treat with brutal outrage. Formerly, the case was not so. Our decided policy then was to support and patronize the Hindus of Malabar, who are a fine, brave, and generous race of men, contrasting favourably with the vindictive and fanatic Moplahs, who, notwithstanding their physical size and strength, are shrewdly suspected of owing their audacity to bang and religious excitement rather than to native outrage. The preference since shown for them is a great mistake, which cannot be too soon corrected, if Government would prevent the brutal game now playing in the Talooks of Ernaad, Shernaad, and Wallawanaad, from being extended throughout the entire province. It is a sad error to suppose that anything has been really gained by the conciliatory treatment of the Moplahs. The Hindus, indeed, have been alienated, but their opponents love the Government no better than they did. They attribute the increased favour shown towards them of recent years, not to the benevolence of their rulers, but rather to their fears, and it behoves John Company to disabuse them of that dangerous mistake in a summary and thorough way. Those wretched fanatics are commonly poor men, having no personal worldly advantage to gain, but egged on by wealthy and influential parties. Slaying them, however necessary, is useless to the cause of order, while their criminal instigators remain untouched. Means must be found of reaching the principals before these outbreaks will ever be put down. The poor fanatics who die are immortalized in song, and have received a priestly benediction which ensures them entrance into a sensual paradise, in exchange for a hard life on earth, and they will therefore not lack imitators so long as such instruments are needful to men of higher station. How to reach these latter is the problem to be solved, and it seems to us sufficiently easy of solution.

In the first place, we would advise a complete restoration of Hindu ascendancy. Many reasons prompt to it. The headmen of most Moplah villages participate in the profits of robbery and smuggling, and are, in fact, patrons of the gangs employed in such pursuits. Now, whether appointed to petty or important offices, these men dare not peach. It is every way their palpable interest to be silent, as it is also their object to be rid of Hindu functionaries, who are not similarly restrained. Even on this ground, therefore, their displacement would be a public good; but still stronger reasons plead for it, as above represented.

Beside placing nairs generally in the village and talook offices, we would advocate the raising of a small Nair battalion, for local purposes, of some 300 men — such as there was formally — and would remove the fanatic Arab priest, the prime author of mischief, from his present position in the disaffected districts, to Cannanore, warning him that the next outbreak would lead to his total deportation. Further, we would fine every village from which the fanatics come, and so graduate the penalty as to press heavily on the wealthy. Deprivation of arms would also be desirable, or, at least, a tax on them; and their sale should be prohibited, except under license, with attendant registration. Some of these measures, we believe, have been suggested by the collector; but opposition is offered to them in higher places, probably because the necessity for them is not understood. — Spectator, Sept. 15.

MISCELLANEOUS.

GHOLAM MOORTAZA KHAN, a Mahomedan noble, has for many years past been very prominently before the public, and seldom to the advantage of his reputation. In 1843 he took the benefit of the Insolvent Act for Rs. 5,13,000, his assets being set down at Rs. 25. At that time it was felt that little short of a sense of perfect security could have induced a man, who was the confidant of the Nabob, and the general favourite of the court, to run the risk of being remanded to jail as a fraudulent debtor; but Moortaza Khan "passed" with the smallest possible inconvenience on the score of detention and impertinent questioning. Since then he has continued to live in the style of a prince, but the active assignee of the Insolvent Court had always an eye on his movements and his furniture, and a few weeks ago, Mr. Ritchie effected an entrance into his domicile, and captured considerable store of riches. Moortaza Khan was also arrested, and escaped; but amongst his papers, which were preserved with the greatest care, the most conclusive proofs were found, that, at the time of his insolvency, he was in the actual possession of far more property than would have sufficed to pay all his debts, and that there were a great many persons of influence and station to whom that fact was no secret. Amongst the papers seized are bonds of the Nabob for fourteen lakhs of rupees; and it is, we suppose, in consideration of that circumstance alone, that his Highness has agreed to pay the whole amount of the debts named in Moortaza Khan's schedule, by instalments of ten per cent. per annum, secured by bonds of the Istafa Cutcherry, which is the title given to a committee appointed with the sanction of the British Government for the liquidation of the Nabob's debts. As soon as the agreement is fully ratified, — and only three creditors refuse the terms, — we suppose the letters will be given up, and the warrant now out against Moortaza Khan for perjury be withdrawn. Who will expose the system which has surrounded the young Nabob with men who had no honour themselves, and who were not put to the blush by their Christian associates? — Athenæum, Sept. 9.

THE SEPOYS AND THE MOPLAHS. — The Bangalore Herald states, that instructions have been received for a native general court-martial to assemble at Cannanore for the trial of certain sepoys, composing the party of the 39th N.I. under Ensign Turner, who first proceeded to attack the Moplahs at Kolatoor, and who threw down their arms and ran away. The Athenæum finds the following poor excuse for the cowardice of the sepoys. "The blame which has been cast on the sepoys with reference to this affair is wholly undeserved. The bravest European would avoid a mad dog or an infuriated Malay. The sailor dreads to mount a spirited horse, and the soldier to go up aloft in a tempest. A fight with Moplahs is a war of extermination, which the best of soldiery may be excused for disliking."

THE EAST INDIANS. — The Eastern Guardian, which may be looked upon as the accredited organ of the East Indians in Madras, tells us that it is in contemplation to get up a public meeting for the purpose of improving the political condition of the inhabitants of India. "The object," it says, "all understand, is to petition Parliament for a redress of grievances, and urge the propriety of establishing a popular government, which would give us an open council, the right to share in legislation for the country — a control over its financial interests, and a free and unrestricted participation in all places and appointments connected with the service!"

REPORTED DEATHS FROM HEAT. — We regret to record a rumour that Captain Lancaster and Dr. Fleming, both of the A. troop horse artillery, died on their way up to Jaulnah. Several troopers and natives are also said to have fallen victims to the mandate which compelled them to march upon Madras roads under an August sun. — Athenæum, Sept. 16.

MURDER OF LIEUT. JOHNSTONE. — Extract of a letter from Jaulnah, 3rd September. — "The Court of Inquiry investigating the circumstances attending the murder of Lieut. Johnstone, of the 3rd Cavalry, have closed their supplementary proceedings, and it rests with higher authority to dispose of the matter. Suspicion is strong against the reduced Havildar Khader Khan, but proof for conviction is wanting altogether. Some parties desire that he should be released, discharged from the service, and turned out of cantonments; whilst others are of opinion that the preferable plan would be, to bring to trial the father-in-law of the suspected man, against whom there is strong presumptive evidence as to his having been concerned, in some way or other, in the whole affair, and during the time that the investigation has been carried on. The Court, I believe, have recorded their opinion that Khader Khan is the murderer, with a recommendation that he should be discharged, and that he should not be brought to trial for want of legal proof; — his guilt is, morally, all but conclusive. Perhaps the wisest plan would be to release the suspected parties, and to trust to some quarrel or drunken boast, that may hereafter take place, and lead to the detection of the culprit."

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LONDON MAIL of August 24 arrived at Bombay, per Victoria, on the 21st Sept.

INUNDATIONS.—A correspondent of the Kurrachee Advertiser informs us, that the late extraordinary rise in the Indus has destroyed one hundred and five villages in Scinde, and that the great village of Boobuk, so famed for its carpets, has been totally swept away.

THE RAILWAY works here are rapidly progressing, and the embankment is now ready for a long distance to receive the line of rails. Two tunnels are under construction, one on this side and the other on the Deekan side of Tanna. Rails have been placed along the line from Matoengo to Sion. We regret to hear of a fatal accident which occurred upon the works the other day, whereby two of the Company's labourers were killed while at their work.—B. Telegraph, Oct. 2.

REVENUE SURVEY.—Measures are being taken to extend the benefits of the revenue survey to Goojerat and Scinde, the latter at the express recommendation of Mr. Frere, the commissioner, who anticipates the greatest advantages to the country from this equitable measure being carried into effect. The survey is at present superintended by Capt. Anderson in the Ahmednuggur collectorate, in Poona by Capt. Francis, and the Southern Mahratta country by Capt. Wingate. We hear that the superintendence of the Goojerat survey will be intrusted to Mr. Rogers, c.s., and the appointment to Scinde will be conferred on Lieut. C. J. Prescott, who has already displayed much ability in that department of the public service.—Ibid.

COLONEL MELVILL, it is said, proceeds to England before the close of the present year. Government will by his departure lose for a time the services of one of the most able and efficient members of the Secretariat, of which he is by much the oldest, having succeeded Colonel Wood in the military department in 1841. Arrangements similar to those spoken of when Colonel Melvill was believed likely to be appointed Commissioner for Scinde—an office he would now have held had the services of a military man not been deemed unsuitable—are now said to be in contemplation;—it will be time enough to give names when a vacancy becomes certain.—Bombay Times.

CAPT. E. M. NIXON.—A general court-martial is now sitting in the Town Barracks, of which Lieut.-Colonel C. S. Stuart, of the 14th regiment N.I., is president, for the trial of Capt. E. M. Nixon, of the 6th regiment N.I., on charges, which, if proved, may cost that officer his commission.—Ibid.

OPPRESSION OF NATIVE CHRISTIANS.—A correspondent of the Telegraph gives an account of a new attempt on the part of the Brahmans of Joomeer, in the Poonah district, to oppress the native Christians. They interdicted them the use of the aqueduct, and thus cut off their supply of water, until Mr. Malet, the officiating collector, ordered a hole to be broken in the covering of the watercourse. After great opposition from the native authorities, this measure was carried out, and a quantity of beef and pig-bones found just beneath the hole. A mob immediately collected, and attacked the missionary's house, and would have proceeded to further outrages, but for a promise that the matter should be investigated. The Brahmans are suspected of having themselves thrown the offensive bones into the water.

THE REV. NARRAYAN SHEESHADRY, licentiate of the free Church of Scotland, preached his first sermon on Sunday evening, September 28, before the free church congregation. The discourse was evidently a carefully prepared one, and upon the whole very well delivered. Mr. Narayan Sheeshadry is a young man of the brahmin caste: he has been about fifteen years under the tuition of the mission that has now licensed him to preach the gospel. He is a young man of very considerable talent, and has passed a creditable examination in Latin, Greek, Hebrew, and, of course—the most difficult of all languages to a foreigner—English. Now, as the avowed object of school-teaching missions is, to train up, from amongst the people of India, native preachers to preach the Gospel to their countrymen; and as the preaching of the Gospel must necessarily be delayed until such a class of preachers shall have been raised up and sent forth, may we not therefore inquire whether there is any reason to hope that such a class of missionaries will ever be raised up under the present system of school-teaching? Mr. Narayan is the third native of India licensed to preach by the Free Church mission. The former were the two Parsees, of whom all our readers must have heard times without number. Those two young men were ordained some years ago. Since their ordination one of them spent some time in Guzerat; the other has continued his labours in "the Institution" and as an overseer of Vernacular schools. They are now, both of them, if we are rightly informed, located in Bombay—not preaching, but revising a translation of the Scriptures!—Bombay Telegraph, Oct. 3.

NEW STEAMERS.—Orders have been received in Bombay from the Court of Directors for building three large steamers of 850 horse-power, and 2,000 tons each, with an average speed of twelve knots. These will be the largest boats that have ever been seen to the eastward of the Cape. They are to be laid down immediately, so as to distance all competitors.—B. Times, Oct. 2.

FRAMJEE COWASJEE.—At a meeting of the friends and admirers of the late Framjee Cowasjee, held on the 22nd ult., to take into consideration the best means of applying the subscriptions that have been received to perpetuate the memory of that excellent and deserving man, it was resolved that the funds received by subscription be appropriated to the formation of a museum of arts and industry in connection with "The Students' Literary and Scientific Society," and to request Government to erect a building to contain a lecture-room and laboratory, to be called "The Framjee Cowasjee Institute." This is remarkable as being the first occasion on which people of all classes have united in their desire to perpetuate the memory of a native.—Ibid.

RAISING OF THE PACHA.—Mr. A. P. Porter, a temporary sojourner here, has proposed a most ingenious plan, which he wishes to have tried, for raising the Pacha, whose hull is now supposed to be in twenty-five fathoms of water. We have carefully examined the drawings, and canvassed the merits, of the project altogether, and to us it seems eminently reasonable and promising. After having accurately determined the position and state of the wreck, it is proposed, should these prove promising, to anchor a couple of vessels of buoyant power sufficient to lift the hull with ease. The hull is to be attached to these by powerful chains, slipped under the keel and cutwater, while others are made fast to the sponsons and sides of the vessel, or wherever a hold can be obtained. These will be hauled taut at low water, and the vessel raised by so much every tide. In addition to this, the holds of the lifting vessels will be partially filled with water from time to time, when a fresh pull will be taken on the chains as they sink, when an additional lift will be had by pumping. By these means it is hoped the Pacha may be edged into water sufficiently shallow to enable the treasure and machinery to be taken out of her by divers, when the remainder of the wreck might be dragged on shore. There is no reason to suppose the engines injured, and the probability of the recovery of the treasure alone would warrant very large risks indeed.—Bombay Times, Sept. 26.

A FAREWELL ADDRESS TO BISHOP CARR is in the hands of the acting archdeacon to be circulated for general signature. It is to be accompanied by a proposal for the engraving of a portrait of the first bishop of Bombay.

THE STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY has published its accounts for 1850-51. The gross earnings of steamers during the past season were Rs. 2,72,277, and the profits Rs. 73,989. The total losses of the Company up to 30th July, 1850, amounted to Rs. 1,60,000, which the Directors propose to meet, by writing off Rs. 1,34,200 from the paid up capital, and by other expedients.

COTTON FRAUDS.—Unless the gross frauds that have for many years been indulged in by the native cotton-dealers of one description or another be put down, the cotton trade will shortly come to be extinguished in Western India altogether. No system of thoroughfares, be they roads or railways,—no improvement in cultivation or in cleaning,—can save it, when rogues combine to adulterate, and find apologists or abettors in those who ought to aid in their detection or punishment. The question is not one of individuals or of classes, but of the whole commercial community of Western India; and those who on any plea or ground whatever do anything which may in any way tend to keep in existence a mischief which cannot do other than in the long run prove ruinous, as it is at present disgraceful, to us, deserve the severest censure and punishment, as the enemies of the welfare of their country.—B. Times, Aug. 9.

ORIENTAL BANK.—At the annual general meeting of shareholders of this Bank, on the 15th Sept., the chairman read a statement respecting the losses suffered by the Bank, of which the following is an extract:—"The losses arose on the following transactions, viz. Rs. 84,300 by discounting forged and repudiated hoondies; Rs. 62,100 by forged cheques, and Rs. 5,000 by a robbery of Bank-notes. The amount of notes stolen was Rs. 95,915, of which about Rs. 48,100 have been recovered, and the Bank of Bombay have paid the balance under a guarantee, leaving the loss of Rs. 5,000 mentioned above, being the amount of small notes stolen, the numbers of which were not known. Against these losses the directors held security for Rs. 90,000, being Rs. 50,000 on account of the shroff, and Rs. 40,000 for the ledger-keeper. The shroff's security has been declared by the Supreme Court in Bombay irresponsible for the losses in his department. This adverse decision was unexpected by the directors, and as it may possibly come under review, they at present abstain from further remarks on this point. The ledger-keeper's good conduct was guaranteed by two several securities, each liable to the extent of Rs. 20,000. One of these securities, the British Guarantee Association, will, at the expiration of the notice required by the society, no doubt pay the amount due by them (viz. Rs. 20,000), and the Directors have taken steps for the recovery of a similar amount due from a native surety. Should nothing be recovered from the shroff's sureties, the Bank's loss will be about Rs. 1,06,400, to which must be added Rs. 10,000 paid as a reward for the discovery of the parties connected with the robbery. Out of the last half-year's profits, before declaring the usual dividend, the directors were enabled to write off the large sum of Rs. 84,536, being the amount of the forged hoondies, and Rs. 4,815 on account of the stolen notes; and there now only remains to be provided for a sum of Rs. 32,000, made up of the excess of the ledger-keeper's defalcations over his security, and the reward paid for discovery of the robbery. Although the directors are not yet in possession of the returns from the branches, they have no doubt whatever but that the profits for the half year ended on the 1st inst. will be such as to admit of the sum being written off without diminishing the dividend."

RAILWAY IN THE PUNJAB.—We know nothing more calculated to gladden the hearts of Mr. John Bright and the Peace Society than a visit just now to the gun-carriage manufactory, where they will find the foundry, usually occupied in casting shells and shot—the workmen generally engaged in fitting up weapons of war, the more destructive the better,—busy preparing wheels and axles for forty railway carriages and six miles of railway for the centre of the Punjab! The rails consist of plain iron bars, about ten pounds to the running yard, meant to be made fast with large-headed nails to strong wooden sleepers, the ends of the bars fit into each other with a small tongue. The railway, we believe, is desired for the purpose of removing to a station where it is wished the material of a fort about to be dismantled.—B. Times, Oct. 2.

THE RED HOUSE of Bombay, the princely mansion of Sir Charles Forbes, and subsequently inhabited by several partners of his firm, has been brought to the hammer. It was purchased by Mr. Daood Sassoon, the Jew banker.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

PASSAGE AND TABLE MONEY TO PUBLIC SERVANTS IN GOVT. STEAMERS.

Bombay Castle, Sept. 6th, 1851.—In continuation of the general order indicated in the margin,* regarding passage and table money to public servants and their families accommodated in Government vessels, the Right Hon. the Governor in Council, under instructions from the Government of India, is pleased to publish the three following explanatory rules regarding the same, for the information of the army, and the guidance of the department concerned, viz. :—

The rates for passage money laid down in the scale appended to the order above referred to, are to be considered applicable to all Government officers proceeding, otherwise those on duty, with the following exceptions.

1. Officers quartered in Scinde or Aden, compelled under medical certificate to visit the presidency, shall be provided with a free passage, so far as accommodation goes, both in coming from, and returning to, their stations, but must pay the same table money as private passengers.

2. Officers, whether on duty or on sick leave, to whom accommodation is assigned, when accompanied by their families, and provided they do not require additional accommodation beyond that assigned, shall be subject to no additional charge, except for table money for themselves and the members of their families.

3. Rule 9 of the above-mentioned General Order, is cancelled, so far as regards officers proceeding on regimental duty to whom the rules laid down in Article 8 of the same order are to be considered applicable, whether accompanied by troops or not.

LAND AT VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

Bombay Castle, Sept. 6th, 1851.—Under instructions received from the Hon. the Court of Directors, the Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to announce that her Majesty's Government has authorized the Lieutenant-Governor of Van Diemen's Land to hold out to officers of the East-India Company's forces the same privileges in respect to land that are accorded to the Queen's officers of similar rank.

CEYLON.

The Legislative Council was opened on the 2nd September, when Sir G. W. Anderson, the governor, delivered an address, in which, after stating that the revenue for the first half year of 1851 had exceeded the expenditure by 14,971*l.*, he detailed the measures of legislation he had prepared. The objects of these were, first, to assimilate the laws of the Kandyan provinces to those of the maritime provinces, and render them as uniform as possible; secondly, to extend the jurisdiction of what are here called Courts of Requests, but are really Small Cause Courts; thirdly, to make all civil appeals from the District Courts heard at Colombo; fourthly, to abolish the system of assessors, unless parties desire, and the judge assents or requires them; fifthly, an alteration of the stamp laws, so as to lessen the cost of these imposts, and render the law more intelligible; sixthly, a modification of the house assessment tax. In addition to these measures, his Excellency said he had been instructed by the Secretary of State to confer on certain towns of the island municipal institutions, and with this view an ordinance was in preparation to carry out the measure, on this principle,—that, where the inhabitants of a town are desirous of constituting themselves into a municipal body, and show that they are able to maintain it, then, under certain requirements, the privileges of such an institution shall be granted to them. In conclusion, he said: "I have passed several months at Kandy, where, I am rejoiced to say, the greatest tranquillity prevails, as it does in other parts of the island. I have at Kandy had constant interviews with the chiefs, and have given audience to the priests; and where they brought to my notice any trouble or grievance which they conceived themselves to labour under, I told them, and to their satisfaction, that I would endeavour to remedy the evils, if found to be such, of which they complained, if I could do so with justice to all, and consistently with the principles which guide the British Government."

The governor seems determined to enforce the rule rendering a knowledge of the vernaculars a sine qua non in members of the civil service. It is reported that he has given the magistrates six months' grace; at the end of this period, if they cannot do without interpreters, they must pay for such functionaries out of their own pockets.—Columbo Obs.

CHINA.

THE INSURRECTION.—The Peking Gazette, of the 24th May, contains the Emperor's rescripts to three memorials from Le Singyuen and his colleagues in Kwangse, detailing, first, a series of victories over the Shanglin Hsien division of the rebels, on the 2nd, 3rd, 7th, and 10th days of the 3rd month, which had resulted in the slaughter of more than 800 of their number, including five of their chiefs; secondly, three further victories over another division at Yuhlin-chow, in the latter end of the same month, in which a soi-disant generalissimo was killed, while sitting in his sedan chair, directing the movements of his men; and thirdly, the capture, by another division, of the district city of Selin, in the western extreme of Kwangse province. In replying to the report of the last casualty, his Majesty commands Le Singyuen to hold an inquiry into the conduct of the civil and military mandarins of the captured city, and if any of them should be found guilty of having evinced cowardice or alarm, to execute them on the spot as a warning to all.

SUICIDE.—The Hong Kong Register, August 5, records a case of suicide at the City Hotel. Mr. John Wills, who had been for some time chief officer of the Anonyma at Namoa, destroyed himself by discharging the contents of a pistol into his head.

COALS FROM LABUAN.—The barque Trident arrived yesterday with a cargo of coals from Labuan. This is the first of a series of vessels engaged by the Eastern Archipelago Company to transport the produce of their mines to this country; and for several months to come we may look for an importation of at least 200 tons per month. The Trident took in her cargo at Port Raffles, about ten miles from the seat of government. The coal is found in large quantities, and by the specimens we have seen, of excellent quality, about five feet below the sward, at no greater distance than a quarter of a mile from the sea beach. Some 500 Malays, under superintendence of the Messrs. Motley, are engaged in excavation, loading the buffalo-drawn wagons, and transporting to vessels requiring cargoes. The Trident anchored in five fathoms water, at about a cable's length from the shore, took in 300 tons in five days; and it is anticipated that, when the wharf in projection is completed, vessels, being brought alongside, may be despatched with even greater celerity. We are told that a species of dammer is found attached to the coal, sometimes fully an inch in thickness, which the natives are in the habit of scraping off and using in the place of candles at night time. With other peculiarities of the Labuan anthracite, it is said to be free from that sootiness, in loading or unloading, that is very generally attendant upon coals from other parts of the world.—Friend of China, Aug. 2.

DR. GUTZLAFF was born in 1803 at Pyritz, a small village, containing about 1,700 inhabitants, in Prussian Pomerania. In his youth he was apprenticed to a brazier, but having been seized with desire to visit foreign countries, he was enabled to do so from being brought under the notice of the king of Prussia, Frederick William III., by a poem which he wrote in 1820. By the assistance of the king his young protégé was placed in a missionary seminary, where he remained until 1826, when he went into the Netherlands to study the Eastern languages, previous to his starting for the East as a missionary. In 1827 he was sent out by the Netherlands Society as Protestant missionary to Java. After a short residence there he went to Siam, where he resided nearly three years, during which he occupied himself studying the Chinese language, and in 1831, having acquired the language and manners of the Chinese, he made a voyage along the coast of China in a Chinese junk, and the following year he accompanied Mr. Lindsay in his voyage in the Lord Amherst, of both of which voyages he published an account printed at New York in 1833. In 1835 he ceased all connection with the Netherlands society, and from that time he seems to have occupied himself as a missionary to the Chinese until the breaking out of the war, when his services as interpreter being in request, he was induced to take office under the British Government—first as interpreter to the plenipotentiary, then as magistrate at Ningpo, and afterwards at Chusan. On the settlement of the treaty of Nankin, and establishment of the British government in Hong-kong, he was made assistant Chinese secretary, and on the death of the Hon. J. R. Morrison, he succeeded to his situation as secretary, in which situation he continued until his death. He was three times married, the last time on a recent visit he paid to Europe, but does not leave any family. Dr. Gutzlaff continued, during his employment under the British government, teaching the gospel to the Chinese, and we are informed by the preacher of his funeral sermon, that it was his intention shortly to have resigned his situation, and devoted himself entirely to missionary duties.—Hong-kong Register.

Dr. Gutzlaff has left 30,000*l.*; a large sum for a missionary to bequeath. He is said to have been master of fifteen languages, European and Oriental. The last he studied was Japanese.

PENANG.

A court-martial was held at this place, on the 3rd September, for the trial of Commander Peter Cracroft, the officers and crew of her Majesty's screw-sloop Reynard, lost on the Batas Shoal, in the China Seas, on the 31st of May last. The court assembled on board the Fox, 42, Commodore Lambert, and consisted of the Commodore as president, and Captains Austen, of the Hastings, and Barker, of the Amazon; Commanders Shadwell, of the Sphinx, and Tarleton, of the Fox. The court found that Commander Cracroft and Mr. M'Ausland, the master of the Reynard, had committed an error in judgment in approaching the shoal at all on the south side, and that the evidence showed that no soundings had been tried for (it was also shown in evidence there were "no soundings" thereabout), nor leads kept going; that, nevertheless, the conduct of Commander Cracroft and the officers had been most exemplary and praiseworthy since the vessel was lost, and that they had done all in their power to save her, and had not abandoned her until all further attempts were useless; in consideration whereof, the court only adjudged Commander Cracroft and Mr. M'Ausland to be admonished to be more careful in future. The other officers and ship's company were, of course, fully acquitted. In returning him his sword, on the rising of the court, the president delivered it with a very handsome acknowledgment of Commander Cracroft's high merit and professional character.

COCHIN CHINA.

A French paper publishes the following details of the execution of a Roman Catholic missionary, named Schoffler, at a place called Son-tai, on the 4th May:—

"About noon, by order of the grand mandarin, elephants and horses were prepared, and two regiments were under arms, for the execution of M. Schoffler. The mandarin, fearing that the Christians would endeavour to rescue their missionary by force, wished to intimidate them by this display of troops. When his intentions were known, all the town showed the greatest affliction. The mandarin took up his position on the ramparts, surrounded by his troops. The execution took place outside the town. The cortege was arranged in the following manner:—Before marched a soldier, carrying a board affixed to a pole, on which was written, 'Notwithstanding the severe prohibition against the religion of Jesus, a European priest, named Augustin, has dared to come here clandestinely to preach and to seduce the people. When arrested, he confessed everything—his crime is evident. Let Augustin have his head cut off, and thrown into the river. Fourth year of Tu Du; first of the Third Moon.' Eight soldiers, with drawn sabres, marched by the side of M. Schoffler; 100 men, armed with muskets or lances, formed the head of the procession; two elephants formed the rear-guard. The martyr held up his chains when walking; he walked quickly, as if hastening towards his triumph, and continually offered up thanksgivings. He was surrounded by an immense crowd; the greater number of these pagans were struck with religious admiration; there were some, however, who railed and blasphemed. On arriving at the place of execution, he fell on his knees, kissed the crucifix three times, and, at the request of the executioner, took off his coat and turned down the collar of his shirt. The executioner having afterwards tied his hands behind his back, the martyr said to him, 'Do your business as quickly as possible.' 'No, no,' replied the mandarin, 'follow the signal of the cymbal, and only strike at the third sound.' The signal was given. The hand of the executioner trembled. He struck three blows of his sabre on the neck of the victim, and was at length obliged to cut the flesh with a knife, in order to detach the head from the body. In Cochlin China, those who are present at executions are accustomed to disperse immediately it is over; but on this occasion, although the greater number present were pagans, they rushed forward to collect some drops of the blood, and to get some portion of the garments of the martyr. An inferior mandarin, a pagan, before the execution, threw a coat of white silk and a piece of white linen at the feet of the martyr, in the hope that it would be stained with his blood. M. Schoffler, thinking that they belonged to some Christian, took them up and placed them inside his shirt, next his heart. When the chief mandarin was informed of what his subordinate had done, he ordered him to receive several blows with a stick; he, however, went off delighted with the possession of his precious relics. The Christians obtained the body of M. Schoffler, but the head was thrown in the river."

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

From a Polynesian of the 5th July we take the following report of proceedings in the Hawaiian Parliament:—

House of Representatives.—Mr. Kaauwai offered the following joint resolution:—"Be it resolved, by the nobles and representatives of the Hawaiian Islands, in legislative council assembled: That, in the sense of this House, the demands of France are so clearly unjust, and contrary to the laws of nations and to treaty, and the course pursued by her is so incompatible with the existence of a regular independent government in these islands, if France should persist in such a course, it will be the duty of the King to shield himself and his kingdom from insult and oppression, by placing this kingdom under the protection of some friendly state; and that should such emergency be so urgent as not to admit of the Legislative Council being convened, it shall be left to his Majesty, by and with the advice of his Privy Council, under such emergency, to consult the honour and safety of his kingdom, according to his Majesty's best judgment; and that whatever he may so do will be binding upon the nation."

After some discussion, the resolution was carried; Messrs. Rhodes and Rooke only voting in the negative.

A message was received from the House of Nobles, conveying a resolution which had passed that body, providing for the appointment of three commissioners to revise the constitution; one to be nominated by the King, one by the House of Nobles, and one by the House of Representatives.

The resolution passed unanimously, and the Hon. W. L. Lee was chosen commissioner, on the part of the House of Representatives.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The advices from Cape Town, which reach to the 12th September, represent affairs in the colony and on the frontier as more gloomy than ever; while the Caffres have sustained no important check, they have continued to lay waste extensive tracts, sweeping off thousands of head of cattle, sheep, &c., and destroying homesteads, while our loss in the different skirmishes has been considerable. Meanwhile, by the removal of so many labourers to King William's Town, in order to patrol the country, the western districts are left destitute of the ordinary supply of hands.

Two further patrols had been made under Col. Michell and Col. Eyre. Both moved on the 29th July to Fort White, where, after throwing in supplies, the two separated, Col. Michell proceeding to Fort Cox, with the waggon train, while Col. Eyre turned to the left, towards the Keiskamma, which he was to ascend until he should rejoin Col. Michell at that fort. From thence the waggon train was sent back, while the troops swept round the head of the Amatola, where they succeeded in capturing together about 240 cattle. On quitting their camp on the last day's movement, a company of the 73rd were left in ambush, and on the column moving from its bivouac, a number of Caffres rushed down to the spot, seven of whom were killed and nine wounded. Besides this, there were two or three sharp though short skirmishes, in one of which, Lieut. Blaine (Armstrong's horse) received a ball through both legs.

Col. Eyre subsequently moved his patrol to the right bank of the Kowie. His movements had cleared Lower Albany of the enemy, and restored confidence to the farmers.

A smart skirmish took place at the Debe Neck on the 1st August. A party of sixty-four men of the 45th regiment, and 12 Cape Mounted Rifles, under Capt. Vialis, in command at Fort White, left that post as escort to some waggons, en route to King William's Town. This party escorted their charge to the Debe Neck, and were returning to the fort, when a large body of Caffres and Hottentots rushed upon them, and a mêlée began, in which 10 Caffres were killed and 20 wounded, whilst no casualty was sustained by the troops. Another affair occurred in the valley of the Knazie, at the base of the Seven Kloof Mountain, near Fort Cox, on the 13th, between a force of 170 men, 45th regiment, and 12 Cape Mounted Rifles, under Major Kyle, and a very large body of Caffres, who, though they most pertinaciously contested their ground, were finally repulsed with the loss of 30 killed and many wounded. Of the troops, the casualties were one killed and two wounded.

On the 23rd August, Col. Mackinnon marched, with 190 men, from King William's Town, with supplies for Fort Hare and the forts along the line; he returned on the 27th, the enemy having offered no molestation.

Major-gen. Somerset moved out a patrol on the 28th August, which had recovered many cattle, and killed several Caffres.

From Colesberg and Burghersdorp, in the Albert district, it appears that a commando of about 200 boers, under Commandant Olivier, penetrated into the Tambookie country, where they were defeated by a body of the enemy, estimated at 2,500 to 3,000, having lost one Burgher killed, two others being wounded. In their retreat, they were joined by Commandant Joseph Read (son of the missionary of Kat River), consisting of about 100 natives from the Bushman station; and thus reinforced, the farmers made a stand and succeeded in driving the Caffres back, killing nearly 100, and capturing 60 horses and 200 head of cattle. Amongst the slain was found a man, looking more like a wild beast than a human being. He is described as being unusually black, with hair all over his face and head. The nails of his fingers and toes were 2½ inches long. On his arms were ivory armlets, and on his legs and ankles little bells, which tinkled as he moved. He was perfectly naked, and is represented to have uttered horrid cries. When this animal or man was shot, the Caffres set up a discordant wailing shout, and then fled.

The Graham's Town Journal of the 6th September publishes the following letter, dated Fort Peddie, Sept. 1:—"To-day we were aroused by heavy firing between Breakfast Valley and the mountains near Commitees Drift. An express arrived from a patrol, bringing intelligence of an affair with the enemy, and requesting waggons, &c., to convey the killed and wounded. The detachment of 91st regiment, under Lieut. Rae, with 30 Fingoes, immediately left. It appears that the 2nd Royals fought like Britons, and had they known a little more of the Caffre character, would have taught the enemy a lesson they would not soon have forgotten. Royal Sappers and Miners, 1 killed and 1 wounded; 2nd Royals, 1 sergeant and 1 private killed and 5 wounded; Cape Mounted Rifles, 1 wounded; Armstrong's Horse, 1 wounded. One of the wounded men died after his arrival at Fort Peddie."

Another letter, dated Sept. 4, states:—"Col. Burn, 2nd Royals, had a sharp affair last Monday near Breakfast Valley, in the Fish River Bush, with Stock's, Botman's, and Seyolo's Caffres, conjoined with a lot of rebel Hottentots. The killed and wounded were sent in here,—3 of the former and 12 of the latter. Col. Burn returned to King William's Town by way of old Fort Wiltshire, and on his line of march the Caffres attacked him again, as we heard very heavy firing in that direction, but have not yet learnt the results. The Caffres appear to have plenty of ammunition."

A correspondent of the Graham's Town Journal, writing from Oliphant's Hoek, gives a narrative of a patrol to the Karraa, the encampment from which the Theopolis rebels and their allies were driven by Gen. Somerset, when some curious discoveries were made. The spot where the rebels originally formed their camp presented an extraordinary sight. From fifty to sixty huts were constructed in the dense bush, by bending down and tying together the boughs of trees. Pots, kettles, pans, crockery, broken waggon-chests, spades, sickles,—in short, every article, almost, necessary for a farmer's household,—all in glorious confusion, smashed and destroyed, were lying about. In one hut, that of Moses Jacobs, in the dense bush, amidst rotten bags, broken crockery, and heaps of ashes, was found a packet, which proved to contain a circular, written by some of the rebels at Kat River, addressed "To the Hottentot nation." This is the identical document sworn to by Moses Jacobs, in his deposition at Major-gen. Somerset's camp; in consequence of which, certain Hottentots were disarmed, and two ringleaders lodged in gaol at Graham's Town.

Reports are given in the journals of a disposition on the part of some of the chiefs to terminate the contest. The Galeka chief is profuse in his declarations of amity and contrition, which must be received with great suspicion, if it be true, as averred, that immense droves of both Gaika and colonial cattle are sheltered in his territory. Many of Seyolo's Caffres are also anxious to come in. Umhala had gone to head-quarters, with 120 head of Gaika cattle. The crafty chief is said to be very tractable, and anxious to remove the suspicion which rests upon him. Krelai has sent to say, "I am at peace; parties must be sent to ascertain the amount of losses sustained by Europeans in my country, and I will pay the whole." He says, however, nothing about the thousands of cattle and sheep, and hundreds of horses, his people, in concert with the Tembus, have taken from the poor farmers, and are now in his country. One of Sandilli's chiefs had come in and surrendered himself to the Commander-in-Chief.

On the other hand, the worst anticipations regarding the movements of Macomo are more than realized. He was posted in Achter Zuurburg, with the great body of his followers,—many of them mounted,—and the inhabitants were flying in all directions before him. Not a single homestead between Kaga and the Zuurburg is left standing. The Oliphant's Hoek farmers were fleeing before the hordes of Seyolo in that quarter, and the Sunday's River farmers had fallen back upon the camp at Commando Kraal.

The Graham's Town Journal of August 30 describes the condition of the frontier as in statu quo. The enemy had not been driven back, neither had he obtained any advantage, except continuing to overrun the colony, and plundering. The presence of troops in Albany had caused a partial cessation of the desolating ravages, yet there was abundant evidence of the presence of numerous bodies of the enemy in almost every locality. New Year's River, Sidbury, and Bushman's River, were infested with marauders. Macomo held possession of a large part of the district of Somerset; and the desperate character of the marauding bands he detached from his great stronghold at the Kaga had been evinced by the affairs at Company's Drift, in which Field-cornet W. Bouwer and his party of Burghers distinguished themselves. The same paper, of September 6th, says:—"We are unable to record any improvement in frontier affairs since our last. From all parts of the country we have intelligence of the maraudings of the enemy. In Albany, although defended by nearly 800 troops and a strong provisional force, there still continue to be successful aggressions committed. Scarcely a day passes without tidings of disaster. The loss of cattle has been ruinous. The rebel Hottentots are still in the Karraa, at Oliphant's Hoek, and in the Fish River Bush. In the latter place they have already given evidence of their strength. In the Bavians River, and surrounding country, matters are unquestionably in a fearful and distressing state."

The state of affairs in the Sovereignty was unsatisfactory. Two companies of the 45th Foot, under Capt. Parish, and some Cape corps, had been sent to the relief of Major Warden, the resident, who had denounced the people of Moshesh and Molitane as enemies; they are said to be marching on the colony.

Meanwhile, considerable reinforcements had arrived,—the 2nd Royals, a company of artillery, and detachments for the different regiments in the field, together with the 12th Foot from Mauritius, making an addition of 56 officers and 1,455 rank and file. The 12th Lancers and the 60th Rifles were anxiously looked for.

The distribution of the army at the Cape is as follows:—The 6th Royals and 73rd Foot at King William's Town; the 2nd Queen's Royals in Caffraria; the 45th Foot in detachments between Natal and the frontier; the 12th Foot and 74th Highlanders attached to Gen. Somerset's division; the 91st at Fort Hare; the Cape Mounted Rifles in the field from Natal to British Caffraria; the 60th Rifles, when they arrive, are to be attached to the 1st division; and the 12th Lancers, it is said, will proceed to the Sovereignty, but this is uncertain.

Major Hogge and Mr. Owen, the assistant commissioners, had arrived.

The steamer Sir Robert Peel, with the July mail, had not reached the colony.

The largest tree in the world is a Banyan, in the Punjab, where this species of Ficus grows to a great size. It is at the village of Aleekanau, on the right bank of the Chenab, a few miles below its junction with the Jelum. "This noble tree," says Major Clarke, the deputy commissioner of Shaikhpoora, "is known by the people as Peer-ka-Boor. I was riding across the country, when my attention was attracted by what I took to be a large tope of trees. I rode to the spot, and, to my astonishment, found this magnificent fellow, covering and shading many acres. Being employed on urgent work, I had no leisure to do more than 'take a walk through the grounds.' I do not think this tree has ever been described."

SUB-DIVISION OF LABOUR.—"A pretty slave-girl, of Colonel Gardner's zenana, was one day sitting by my bed side; I held out my hand, and desired her to shampoo it. Her countenance became clouded, and she did not offer to do it. 'Why do you not mull my hand, Tara?' I said. She replied, 'I never mull the hand; the other girls do that: I only mull the Colonel Sahib's eye-brows. That is my duty: I will not shampoo the hand.'"

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

There is nothing more remarkable in Sindh than the number of holy men which it has produced, and the extent to which that modification of Pantheism, called Tasawwuf throughout the world of Islam, is spread among the body of the people.

The tenets of Tasawwuf, or Sufism, have been eloquently given in summary by Sir W. Jones; and in these days the literature of Europe are probably as learned in them as most of the Maulavies. But if De Bode's "Bokhara" be taken as a specimen, much ignorance as to the practices of the sect still remains.

It will be necessary to preface with a few words upon the origin of Tasawwuf. It is still doubtful whether the source of it may be traced to Persia or to India: the date assigned to the establishment of the community called Essenis, who may be supposed to have borrowed their mysticism from the Zoroastrians, shows that Central Asia held such tenets at a very early period; and the philosophical works of the Hindoos prove that the ancient Indians had made great progress in them. Orthodox Moslems generally trace Tasawwuf back to Hindoostan. They assert that when the Mohammedans entered that country as conquerors, their fame reached as far as Kamru Dwipa, where dwelt a sage Hindoo, deeply skilled in philosophy and metaphysics. The wise man, they say, attracted by the reputation of the new comers, left his country to meet them at Lakhnauti, was converted to the true faith by Kazi Rukn el Din, and from a Hindoo work, the Anirat Kandha, composed a treatise in Arabic, and named it Hauz el Hayat. This garbled account, at any rate, shows the popular belief. The Shiahs heresy attributes the introduction of mysticism to the caliphs of the house of Abbas, who were determined to oppose some new and enticing doctrine, borrowed from a polytheistic people, to the sanctity and orthodox tenets of their Imams. There is certainly a wonderful resemblance between Tasawwuf and the Vedantic system; and the modern Indian's opinions concerning the efficacy of Jog (penance and abstinence), exactly contain the Sufi's ideas of Riyazat. Both believe that, by certain superstitious practices, the divina particula aura in man so emancipates itself from the tyranny of impure matter, that it acquires supernatural powers of metamorphosing the body, transferring the mind to men and beasts, forcibly producing love, causing the death of foes, knowing what is concealed from humanity, seeing spirits, fairies, devils and angels, flying in the air, counteracting magical arts, prevention of pain, curing the venom or wounds of animals, alchemy, healing the sick, subjugating the planets, visiting the heavens, and obtaining by prayer all that one desires. But human nature always presents a general resemblance; and among similar races, in similar climates, and under similar circumstances, the same developments may be expected and are found to be exhibited. The prudent archæologist will probably be inclined to believe that the tenets of Tasawwuf or Vedantism are so consistent with man's reason, so useful to his interests, and so agreeable to his passions and desires, that their origin must belong to the dark beginnings of human society.

A system of belief adopted by such minds as Jami, Hafiz, Saadi, Jelal el Din, Abd el Kadir, Ibn Fariz and others, must be supposed to possess some intrinsic value. And the merit of Tasawwuf is its beau idéal of goodness as connected with beauty, and universal charity and love as flowing from the source of all goodness. The Persians, with their wonderful powers of ideality and comparison, applied themselves to the perilous task of blending Polytheism, the poetry, with Monotheism, the prose, of religion. By this means they not only secured to themselves the means of indulging their fondness for revelling in the regions of imagination, but also authorized such flights, by making mind, to a certain extent, paramount to revelation. The Koranic idea of the human soul or spirit, for instance, is similar to our own; but the Sufi, deducing the doctrine of the soul's immortality from its immateriality, assigns to it Azaliyat, immortality without beginning, as well as Abadiyat, immortality without end. And convinced by reason that nothing can be at once self-existent, immaterial, and unbounded by time, except the Deity, he concludes that the spirit of man is nothing but the breath, the particle of the Divine soul lent to mankind, the noblest of God's works. In the same way, his appreciation of the beautiful and the good is explained as the unconscious tribute of the human heart to the spiritual perfection of the Author of its being. Consequently he abandons himself to the sentiment, and not unfrequently becomes either an utter ascetic by contemplation of spiritual, or a debauchee by yielding to the seductions of the material loveliness. Oriental nations show very little practical admiration of the golden mean. They are almost always in extremes, and their conceptions of virtue, heroism, devotion, love, and friendship, are of the most enthusiastic and impossible description. It is curious for the European to observe the method by which they justify their exaggeration of themselves.

Tasawwuf then may be defined to be the religion of beauty, whose leading principle is that of earthly, the imperfect type of heavenly, love. Its high priests are Anacreontic poets, its rites wine, music, and dancing, spiritually considered, and its places of worship meadows and gardens, where the perfume of the rose and the song of the nightingale, by charming the heart, are supposed to improve the mind of the listener. This is thorough Epicurism in the midst of one of the most gloomy of faiths: the contrast is striking, but its existence is easily explained. It depends for support entirely upon the favour which the poet finds with all classes of men. The Sufi bard is, generally speaking, a profound student of the different branches of language and metaphysics; he is gifted with a musical ear, and fearlessly indulges in luxuriant imagery and description, which contain a simple sense agreeable to all—a double entendre seldom understood by any but the few learned. The most striking specimens of the class appear to me to be Ibn Fariz among the Arabs, Hafiz in Persia, Shah Bhetai in Sindh, and Abd el Rahman among the Afghans. The nationality of each of these individuals is remarkable. For instance, Ibn Fariz composes in a rich and mechanical language, addressed to the eye as well as the mind; and his ideas are borrowed from the wild hills and desert sands of his native country. As might be expected, his poetry displays all the manliness, fervency, and contempt for life, combined with the eloquence, the modulation, and the choice of words required to attract and charm the ears and souls of his countrymen. In Hafiz, who uses a very inferior language, we find learning, and love of pleasure, wonderful powers of imagination, and a fullness of meaning, which none but Persians can appreciate. Nothing is more remarkable than the ardour for devotion to which he abandons himself, and the spirit of tenderness and love for all things (including even inanimate objects), which breathes from his poetry. The effect is, that even his most rigid readers are delighted with his attractive Pantheism, and persuade themselves that every word he utters is to be understood in a mystic sense. Shah Bhetai, the Sindhi, had the disadvantage of contending against a barbarous dialect, and composing for an unimaginative people. His ornaments of verse are chiefly alliteration, puns, and jingling of words. He displays his learning by allusions to the literature of Arabia and Persia, and not unfrequently indulges in quotation. His compositions are all upon subjects familiar to the people, strained to convey a strange idea. As might be expected, he is more homely and common-place than Ibn Fariz or Hafiz; at the same time, he is more practical, and some portions of his writings display an appreciation of domestic happiness scarcely to be expected from one of his order. Hence his poetry is the delight of all that can understand it. The learned praise it for its beauty, and are fond of hearing it recited to the sound of the guitar. Even the unlearned generally know select portions by heart, and take the trouble to become acquainted with their meaning. Abd el Rahman, or Rahman as he is familiarly termed, is a perfect specimen of the rugged race which preserved the independence of the Afghan hills. The Pushtu, a dialect more barbarous than that of Sindh, becomes in his hands a very tolerable vehicle for poetry stern and gloomy as his. He abounds in fierce invective against the world, its falseness and treachery, its passing good and permanent evil: his contempt of life is scarcely tempered by devotion, and he seems to indulge in an occasional pleasant thought with regret. I have never heard an Afghan read one of his odes without a sigh.

Evidence of the antiquity of the Tasawwuf may be found in the annals of almost every ancient and civilized race. Sufis were called by the Guebres, Wizahdarun, Raushan-dil, &c.; by the Hindoos, Gnaneshwar and Atma-gnani. Among the Greeks they became Platonists, and have continued up to the present time, under divers mystic appellations, with tenets modified by the ages in which they lived.

Tasawwuf, again, has perpetuated an idea, which may be considered an Asiatic form of the doctrine of development. Probably deriving the dogma from Socrates and Plato (their favourite philosophers), they formed from the "archetypes" of existence, a regular system of spiritual creation anterior to the material. So much doubt hangs over the authenticity of the Koran and its authorship, and so many traces of palpable deception may be observed in the Ahadis of the prophet, that it is very doubtful whether the doctrine of pre-existence is a fundamental one of Islam, or the introduction of a later age.—Burton's "Sindh."

Murad Bey, son of Ali Bey, sovereign of Tunis, who ascended the throne in 1698, was a monster of cruelty, drunkenness, and debauchery. From the very commencement of his reign, his crimes and his vices were of so deep a dye, that the native chronicle closes the list with terms of horror. He killed with his own hand the mufti of Cairovan, and caused his flesh to be boiled, of which he ate, and forced his dependants to do the same. In a fit of rage, he ordered two of his nephews,—the eldest only seven years of age,—to be spitted alive, and roasted. He always carried pistols, daggers, and an enormous sabre, and when a day passed in which he did not shed blood, he said, "I feel hungry!" He was killed in 1702, in an expedition against Algiers.

There is a strong current setting in favourable to Bengali literature, which augurs well for the future prospects of Sanskrit lore, for the Sâdhu Bâshâ, or classical Bengali, is so identified with the Sanskrita, that the students of the former are naturally disposed to cultivate the latter. The Principal of the Sanskrita College, Isvarachandra Vidyâsagarâ, is preparing a Sanskrita grammar in Bengali, which will be adapted to late improvements in philological science, and is designed to smooth the path to this difficult language, which has been made more intricate by the mystifications and scholasticisms of pundits.—*Journ. ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

SATURDAY, November 1, 1851.

THE misbehaviour of a company of Madras sepoy before a handful of Moplah fanatics, recorded in our last issue, reveals, or rather confirms, the existence of a mental weakness on the part of our native troops which should be carefully attended to. This is not the first, nor we believe the second or third, time, that the same incident has occurred from the same cause. Upon the occasion before the last, in the year 1849, a detachment of the 43rd regiment of Madras Native Infantry, consisting of about 120 men, under Capt. R. P. K. Watt, was sent to disperse a party of these fierce zealots (between sixty and seventy in number), who had committed great disorders in the neighbourhood of Calicut. Capt. Watt pushed forward half his party in advance, under Ensign Wyse. About fifteen Moplahs rushed out from a mosque, in which they were posted, when nearly all the sepoy, though outnumbering the fanatics four to one, fired at random, and, without waiting for a collision, fled, leaving Ensign Wyse and six gallant fellows who stood by him to be cut to pieces. Capt. Watt was unable to rally the fugitives, whose panic infected the party he was bringing up, who refused to obey his orders, and he retired to the cutcherry of the collector of the district, which, observing the state of his men, he barricaded, the petty band of fanatics being allowed to approach the cutcherry and abuse the sepoy with impunity. A detachment of European troops (of the 94th Foot) was sent for, by whom the Moplahs were speedily routed and slain. Capt. Watt was tried by a court-martial, and found guilty of "not having taken sufficient measures to restore confidence in his men," and of allowing them to be insulted by the insurgents "without making any effort to rouse them to resistance." The Court sentenced him to lose rank, and to be severely reprimanded,—a sentence which the Commander-in-Chief thought too lenient. The last occurrence, so similar in its circumstances, will, perhaps, raise a doubt whether Capt. Watt was not treated with an undue degree of rigour, and whether it was in his power to have "restored confidence" in his men, and animated them to resistance.

Upon the recent occasion, near the same locality, a company of sixty-five sepoy of the 39th regiment of Madras Native Infantry, under Ensign Turner, was sent to capture about twenty Moplahs, who sallied out of a house, armed only with knives and spears; whereupon the sepoy, after firing, were seized with a panic, and fled, throwing away their arms; Ensign Turner, finding his efforts to rally the fugitives ineffectual, joined in the flight. As in the former case, a party of Europeans (of the same regiment, the 94th) was marched from Calicut, and speedily disposed of the rebels, who, however, made good use of the firearms abandoned by the sepoy, with which they killed five men.

It is not our purpose to criticise the proceedings of the local authorities in this last affair, or to inquire whether it was prudent, after the experience they had had, to intrust the duty of putting down these terrible desperadoes to so small a party of sepoy, under a young and inexperienced subaltern. Our aim, in noticing the occurrence, is to draw attention to this salient feature in the character of the sepoy, especially the Hindu,—his proneness to give way to superstitious terror. It could not be the knives and spears of these twenty men, or even their ferocious aspect, that drove sixty-five native disciplined soldiers, before they were hurt, to a shameful flight. It must have been some supernatural alarm, properly expressed by the term "panic," in its original sense, which operated at once upon the aggregate body, Hindus and Mussulmans, rendering each individual as insensible to shame or the fear of punishment, as to the entreaties and expostulations of their officer. It was the frenzy of affrighted children, who fancy they are pursued by ghosts.

The fanatical Moplahs are under the absolute control of their tunguls, or high priests, who exercise a prodigious influence over the minds, not only of individuals of their own creed, but even of Hindus; the latter regarding them with an indefinite dread, as possessed of certain magical powers. A tungul has been known to levy a vast tribute upon the credulous by the sale of his saliva, as a specific for the cure of any complaint.* The stories current in Malabar, the country in which the Arabian ancestors of the Moplahs settled so early as the seventh century, respecting their supernatural properties, have doubtless created an impression upon the sepoy of the coast, composed of Hindus and Mahomedans, which their habitual superstition does not suffer them to shake off.

The fact, so repeatedly proved, that they cannot face these fanatics, shows the imprudence of exposing them unnecessarily to so severe a trial. Common timidity, a backwardness to face mortal danger, may be conquered by shame or overcome by habit; but a superstitious fear, which renders the boldest man a slave to his imagination, is more likely to be increased than subdued by frequent exposure to its influence. In 1849, the Commander-in-Chief at Madras (Sir G. Berkeley) remitted the punishment awarded to the runaways of the 43rd regiment, because he was of opinion that "they might have retrieved their character had their officers subsequently exerted their energies to bring them to a sense of their duty;" and expressed "no doubt of the result of any future conflict to which they may be called, in which they are properly led." In the recent case, however sepoy of another Madras corps, with the example of their comrades before their eyes, have misbehaved in the same way, without any apparent deficiency of energy on the part of their commanding officer. The conclusion is plain,—that they were under the influence of a panic fear, inspired not by a sense of ordinary danger, but by a superstitious horror of beings supposed to be more than mere men.

The evidence taken in 1832, before that portion of the Commons' Committee on the affairs of the East-India Company which applied its attention exclusively to military matters, abounds with testimony to the spirit and courage of our native Indian army, which, Sir John Malcolm declared, could not be surpassed. Sir T. Pritzler, a major-general in the royal service, pronounced the Madras native troops in particular "very efficient," and the infantry "as good as possibly can be." Subsequent experience has amply justified these encomia; but it also suggests this precaution,—that the native troops must not be left singly to confront a species of danger which by Europeans would justly be ridiculed as idle and imaginary, but which the fancy of the natives of India invests with peculiar terrors.

The degree to which the minds of Asiatics, even of the highest class, are enslaved by superstition, is scarcely credible by those who have not witnessed its effects. Sir John Malcolm tells us, as an undoubted fact, that in Persia, some years ago, an ambassador, a man of rank, about to proceed to India, was warned by an astrologer of a planetary conjunction, most fortunate for his journey, which it would be dangerous to miss, and, the ship in which he was to embark not being ready, he determined to travel by land. It was then discovered that the stars would be malignant should he pass through his own door or the gate of the town. To obviate the first difficulty, an aperture was made in the wall of his house; but this opened into his neighbour's, and four or five other walls had to be cut through before the ambassador could get into the street. In order to avoid the gate, he applied to the governor to allow a part of the city wall to be thrown down, and this extraordinary request was complied with!

THE arrival on our shores of Louis Kossuth, whose fate so long trembled in the balance, has provoked some diversity of opinion amongst us as to his character and claims. The failure of his projects, unless it can be directly traced to his own misconduct, cannot be imputed to him as a fault or disqualification. There is but little sympathy felt in England towards the government of Austria, against which he endeavoured to marshal the Magyars. The object he professes to have had in view was not to revolutionize Hungary, but to extort from its sovereign the constitutional rights of the Hungarian nation, and to remodel its municipal institutions. Whence is it, then, that the distrust of Kossuth originates?

The Magyar insurrection had an apparent, perhaps more than apparent, connection with that mighty political movement which, in 1848, threatened to subvert, not only ancient thrones, but all established governments, and all social order. The effect of the reaction has been, rightly or wrongly, to confound the insurrectionary parties of Italy, Germany, and France, in one general mass, as Red Revolutionists. Unhappily for M. Kossuth, he has not been careful to keep his designs quite clear of association with these dangerous agents. Hence, probably, many, who would rejoice at the emancipation of the Hungarians from the bonds in which Austrian rule has long held them, hesitate in wishing success to the Kossuth party, because they discern a distrust of them in the moderate constitutionalists of Hungary, and because they suspect that the leader of that party secretly cherishes ulterior views. These unfavourable feelings towards M. Kossuth have not been altered by the language he has held since his liberation.

There is another reason which will explain a certain degree of backwardness on the part of a considerable body of the nation to become, as it were, the partisans of Kossuth, namely, that he seems to be put forward as a rallying-point by those who seek to embroil this country in a quarrel with Austria and Russia. The flattering reception given in England to this chief of a party stigmatized by their government as rebels, especially after the treatment experienced by Marshal Haynau, must be as mortifying to the Emperor of Austria as it would have been to our government had the Austrians feasted and flattered M. Papineau. This, however, is not the worst. There are speakers and writers amongst us who use M. Kossuth as a kind of stalking-horse wherewith to assail the Emperors of Russia and Austria; and temperate politicians, who would not be sorry to see very important political reforms introduced into the dominions of those two potentates, would yet carefully refrain from joining in that personal abuse of them which flows in certain quarters, without the possibility of restraining it, whenever their names are mentioned.

These are amongst the causes which, irrespective of the personal merits or demerits of M. Kossuth, qualify the demonstration which his visit might otherwise have procured for him. He has been made, perhaps by accident rather than design, the symbol of dangerous principles,—the more dangerous because they are not distinctly defined. The wildest democrats of France may regard M. Kossuth as their eidolon. The Chartists and the Socialists of England may hail him as one of their apostles. Yet he may, meanwhile, aim at no more than to repair the municipal institutions of his own country.

WE invite attention to a letter, which will be found in a succeeding column, depicting in the darkest hues the condition of the kingdom of Oude. The letter is authenticated; the writer is what he professes to be, a respectable native of India, and we believe him to be worthy of all confidence. Moreover, his representations, which we give in his own language, accord with the accounts brought by almost every mail from India of the disorganized and miserable state of that unhappy country. If intervention by one nation in the internal affairs of another were ever justifiable, it would be in this case, whether we regard the sufferings of the people in the one, or the interests of those in the other,—the British Government, as the paramount power of India, being in some measure bound, for the sake of its own subjects, to promote, by every legitimate means, just administration in native states. It is to be feared, however, notwithstanding this consideration, that the simple and effectual remedy proposed by our correspondent, and sought by the people of Oude,—that of taking the management of the territory into our own hands,—however beneficial such a measure might be in the end to the ruler as well as the ruled, could only be vindicated upon a principle which, convenient for good purposes, would be equally so for bad ones.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE CONDITION OF OUDE.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

Sir,—I send you the following translation of a letter which I received by the last mail from India. It was written by a particular friend of mine, on whose veracity I can entirely depend, and I send it to you with a humble hope that it may attract the attention of the Hon. Court of Directors, by whose just rule the great empire of Hindoostan is in a great measure happy; but still there is something loudly calls for their interference. According to our belief and religion, whoever is under our orders, or in our service, and does either good or bad, his master has the merit or demerit of the deed. Independently of this, the matter I am about to mention has exceeded all reasonable bounds. Every remedy has been tried by Government, without producing the slightest effect, and it is getting every day worse and worse. The ablest writers of the day, in India, have complained of the ill-managed province of Oude, but no one has paid attention to the complaint.

The poor and rich inhabitants of that unfortunate region look forward with anxiety to the period when a new Governor-General of India shall arrive and do something for its amelioration. Some people say that the king and the crafty vizier received the lord sahib with such ostentation, and the display of splendid jewellery, with trains of fine elephants and camels, a display of fireworks, elephant-fights, good dinners, grand and costly presents of khilluts, so that the attention of the Governor-General might be diverted, and he might leave everything to his successor, who may do in the matter as he chooses. Such is the gossip amongst the illiterate, unfortunate ryots of Lucknow. Some say they never will be rid of that government, as a fukeer, in the time of Shooja-ood-dowlah, of blessed memory, on some horrid deed of the king, cursed his majesty, as well as the inhabitants, so that every heir-apparent to the throne will be effeminate good-for-nothing, and debauched. The person who now addresses you, Mr. Editor, is an hereditary inhabitant (he is sorry to say) of the unfortunate province called Oude, and he has got a home and friends there. He does not speak from any personal motives, or selfish object, as might be imagined; any one who has travelled through that country, or who has had anything to do with it, is well aware that the province is one of the worst managed of the whole of India.

The following is a faithful version of the letter I have received, as far as I can make it:—

"Jyess, province of Oude, Sept. 7th, 1851.—There is greater mismanagement in this part of the country than there ever was. All the shoorfa (respectable class of men), through fear of dacoits, are day and night obliged to be armed like fighting-men. The zemindar's people are prowling about every habitation, and if any unfortunate man happen to fall into their hands, they sell him for from Rs. 10 to Rs. 20 to the zemindar (or landholder), who puts him to various tortures, until such time as he is ransomed by some of his relatives. No one listens to the complaint. Jumshaid and Yaddoollah, slaves of Meer Surfraz Ullly, had committed very great thefts and barbarous murders; on account of which, they were secured in the royal jail; but, owing to its bad management, they effected their escape, and no step has been taken for their apprehension, nor does any of the authorities even care for their murders and depredations. They go from one place to another, killing, plundering, setting houses on fire, from one end of the province to the other. They have also collected a band of robbers, and they are trying to murder and plunder Meer Surfraz Ullly; it is quite out of any one's power to arrest them. If an urzee (petition) be presented to the Resident of Lucknow, he says, 'I have no power to interfere in any way, and I cannot write to the king; you had better present your urzee to the king.' But who can get access to the king for us?"

Here the letter ends. Now you and your readers will form an opinion for yourselves as to the extent of bad government in that unhappy country. Scarcely a day or an hour passes without some crime; plunder, murder, and bloodshed, are common occurrences. Not a cowree of the revenue can be realized, unless an army be appointed, under a chuckladar, who makes it his particular study to rob and plunder every one who comes across him. No person's grown-up daughter or sister is safe at home, but is taken away by force; no one can safely go to bed, unless armed. Every officer appointed makes it his study to plunder, because he knows that he will be turned out, one of these days, from mere whim or caprice, or that his appointment will be purchased by some higher bidder.

I had occasion to travel through that part of the country, and saw fine cultivable land for miles lying untilled; also hundreds of villages entirely deserted; thousands of men, women, and children, under trees on the bare ground, suffering from cold, heat, and hunger. On inquiry, I was given to understand that the chuckladar, or governor, would demand treble the revenue which he had agreed to accept, and on their not meeting his demand, he would confiscate all their household property, sell off their cattle, and put them to torture, by giving them a severe flogging, placing a very heavy stone on their shoulders, making them stand under the burning sun, and various other similar punishments, in order that they might point out their hidden money; so no other resource was left to them but to abandon their homes, to save their lives, and live the best way they could; and still they were not safe, but were frequently forced to labour without any remuneration whatever. If the chuckladar were to hear that any person was possessed of money or property, he would seize the unfortunate man, and put him under various pains, such as I have described. It is not a rare occurrence to see little children kidnapped and sold as slaves; and it is impossible to describe the misery they suffer from their purchasers. There is no judge or magistrate to whom they could apply for redress. No traveller can pass but he is taxed in every stage, if he escapes murder or plunder.

The inhabitants of Oude are heartily praying for the administration of the British Government. They cannot imagine why the British Government do not interfere. Some say that, if they were to do so, the country would become happy; and that the English would not be able to recruit any soldiers from that part of the country, who are noted for being the finest men. But this is quite out of the question. The British have of late, wisely annexed the Punjab, and they could raise as many thousand men as they like from that part of the country, not only from the Punjab, but from any British province.

I must admit that the British have entered into a certain treaty with the King of Lucknow; but at the same time it must be borne in mind that they are considered the rulers of India; and they will be answerable before the throne of Him who has made them its rulers, and intrusted them with a large empire to protect its inhabitants. I would not wish the Government to confiscate the country, or dethrone the king. I would be the last person in the world to suggest such a thing; but they can take the management of this country into their own hands for a certain number of years without any cost whatever. There are hundreds of men of talent in England who are thoroughly acquainted with Indian affairs, as well as in India, to appoint as governors, and with the assistance of British troops lying a few miles from the capital of Oude, they could arrange everything satisfactorily, and save an immense treasure for the king. For instance; in 1820, when Bahadoor Jung, the son of Nawab Ismaeel, Jageerdar of Bakadoor Gurh, near Delhi, was not able to conduct the affairs of his dominions, the British took its management into their own hands, and after a certain number of years, they not only enriched his country, but saved thirty lacs of rupees. In like manner not long ago, when the rajah of Nagod, in the Boondailchund district, became dissipated and careless, they took the management of the country into their own hands until such time as he was reformed. Why cannot they do the same in this case? The happiness of millions would thus be secured.

The heir-apparent of Lucknow is generally brought up in the Harem, amongst women of indifferent character, and his education is entirely neglected. He runs at an early period into disgraceful habits, learns to drink and smoke narcotic and deleterious drugs. When he comes of age, he is generally deranged, or something is the matter with him. Kept under the influence of his favourite women and artful minister, he knows little, and hence the cause of the misery of his kingdom. The present month of Mohurrum is a mourning festival amongst Mussulmans all over India, but in Lucknow and its neighbourhood it invariably ends with some serious tumult, riot, and desperate engagement between the two sects of Mussulmans called Sheeas and Soonees. I have often heard that two or three hundred men have fallen, fighting amongst themselves on the 10th day of Mohurrum, at the Kurbulla of Lucknow.

I would wish very much that this very production be sent by the head of the Government of India to that well-known and distinguished officer Colonel W. H. Sleeman, who has done so much good for the welfare of India, and is now Resident of Lucknow, on the spot to judge whether it is exaggerated or the truth; or it may be referred to some former residents of Lucknow, who are now on retired pensions in this country.

In conclusion, I apologize for the space I have occupied in your paper. From pity to those poor sufferers, I hope you will give this a place in your paper, and that thus an interest may be excited in this country for those over whom they rule.

I am, yours obediently,

AN HEREDITARY RESIDENT OF OUDE.

London, Oct., 1851.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

Sir,—The following statement of the per-centage of deaths in H.M.'s and the East-India Company's European troops in India, from ordinary causes and cholera, is contained in a Circular issued from the Adjutant-General's office, Bengal, 15th July, 1851, directing reports specifying "what you may conceive to be the causes of a higher rate of mortality at the Bengal presidency than at Madras or Bombay."

	Bengal.	Madras.	Bombay.
1840	7.08	3.270	6.402
1841	7.32	2.592	2.730
1842	7.22	3.304	5.418
1843	8.07	2.366	5.416
1844	7.48	2.600	6.653
1845	6.21	3.62	8.3
1846	5.04	3.64	9.32
1847	4.49	3.08	3.01
1848	5.25	1.64	2.51
1849	7.13	2.24	4.69

Clearly there are more deaths at the Bengal presidency than at Madras and Bombay; but Bombay in 1846 had the greatest number of deaths, Madras in 1848 the fewest. Bengal had more troops employed during the ten years; Bombay had a good proportion of troops engaged; Madras but few troops, and those chiefly in China.

There must be some consideration paid to climate. The Madras troops (except those at Saugor and near the Nerbudda) are located to the south of Calcutta. The Bombay troops are stationed in the west of India, and more to the north, generally, than the Madras troops. Cholera should be separately stated. It should be shown whether those who died had been on service or not, for diseases are caused by exposure on service, and do not appear, perhaps, till some time after the campaign is over. The Queen's inspector-general of hospitals told me,—alluding to the men who died from the effects of wounds in the Sikh battles,—that it would require months, if not a year, before the number of men could be stated who died from the effects of wounds: so men not wounded, but employed on service, may die from diseases originating from employment on service, and may be included among the deaths from "ordinary causes!"

There should be a report on each station where there are European troops, and any increase or decrease in deaths should be accounted for. There may have been 10 or 12 per cent. at some Bengal stations, and 5 only at others. It is improbable that 9.32 per cent. was the rate of mortality in all European corps of the Bombay army in 1846; or that 1.64 was the rate of all the Madras corps in 1848. When we look to Sind, in 1846, we may understand the great loss of men. The Bengal army had troops employed on service (I exclude the Cabool force) in 1842, in 1843 (Gwalior campaign, &c.), in 1845, 1846, 1848, 1849 (Sikh war). The Bombay troops got to Mooltan in 1848, and in 1849 were in the last Sikh campaign. Unless the diseases are given, we cannot estimate the state of or prevalence of any one disease; and, again, unless we obtain the deaths at each station where there are European troops, we cannot prove which are the most unhealthy stations. That being found, we should keep troops a shorter time at those places. But there should be annual reports of each station, whether there be European or native troops, or both, as to the causes of unhealthiness. Likewise, it is important to know the age of those who die, and whether they had been previously wounded.

How far is health affected by the habits of European troops, as to duties, hours of dining, canteens, and hours of the parades? In the year 1844, H.M.'s 78th Highlanders lost in Sind about 400 men (566 men, women, and children) from September to December, or in four months. On the China expedition,* the troops were for some months in 1840 at Chusan.—H.M.'s 18th, 26th, and 49th Foot, Artillery, Bengal Volunteers. Out of 3,650 troops, there were only 2,036 fit for duty; 61 had died on the passage, 239 died at Chusan, and 1,578 were sick in hospital. Many more died afterwards.† The troops were landed and encamped on the shore, ankle-deep in water, instead of being kept on board ship, and the parties ashore on duty relieved once a week, as ought to have been the case. The authorities did not like to incur the expense of the E.I. Company paying Rs. 5 a day for each officer* to the captains of vessels for their table allowance. The preparation of the salted provisions took place in February, 1840, only, as the commissariat did not get orders till about the middle of that month, and the last ship of the expedition left Calcutta on the 17th April, 1840. It was too late properly to cure or salt meat.† The Marquess Wellesley‡ gave orders in October, 1800, for the salting of provisions shipped on 23rd April, 1801, for the expedition to Egypt. The position at Chusan was so bad as to account for any number of deaths. There was nothing publicly known as to the causes of the sickness and deaths.

The Burmese war exhibits the greatest number of deaths, and the greatest amount of sickness, ever known, in modern times, in any expedition. That to Walcheren, in 1809, with all its horrors, fell far short of those experienced by the Arracan, &c., troops from 1824 to 1826. The bad provisions sent with the troops was one cause of the sickness and deaths; but the troops went to Rangoon at the wrong season,—in May, instead of in the middle of November.

There is much want of a record office in India. If we wish to have a good staff, we must let them have the means of reading the errors and mistakes of their predecessors. Give men facts, and able men will make the most of them; but without a knowledge of facts, the best educated and the ablest officers will make mistakes. Lord Auckland, at one time, held out encouragement to medical men to write essays on medical topography, epidemics, &c.; but though some did write,§ I never heard that any of them advanced their interests, or got anything for their labours. Zeal requires to be gilded over, or it soon gets tarnished.¶

A FIELD OFFICER.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY COMPANY.

The half-yearly meeting of this company was held on the 29th October, at the offices, New Broad-street, to receive the report of the directors, and to confirm the forfeiture of certain shares upon which five rupees per share had been paid in Bombay; Lord Wharnccliffe in the chair.

Mr. Nicholson, the managing director, read the report, which stated, that on the contract for the construction of twenty-one miles of railway, from Bombay to Tannah, the earth-works had been finished, up to "formation level," to the extent of nearly one-third of the distance embraced in this contract, when the periodical monsoons interposed an obstacle to further progress for a time. Before the issue of this report the rains will be over, and active operations will again be resumed. Within the past half-year, the construction of a further portion of the railway has been let to Mr. George Wythes, which carries the line from Tannah (where the first contract terminates) to Perseck Point, a distance of four miles. This contract embraces works of some magnitude, including a viaduct across the navigable estuary at Tannah, and two short tunnels. Mr. Wythes has sent out a large quantity of "plant" and working materials, and has through his agents commenced operations in a manner which gives every assurance of a satisfactory fulfilment of his contract. The directors have also given orders for the construction of a branch line of about one mile and three-quarters in length to the port of Mahim, between which place and Bombay considerable traffic may be expected both in goods and passengers. The surveys for the extension of the main line from Perseck Point to within a short distance of Callian are finished, and the works on this part of the railway are shown to be very favourable. These works will be put under contract as soon as the preliminary arrangements can be made. The before-mentioned works conjoined will constitute a railway from Bombay to within one mile of Callian, with a branch to Mahim, about 35 miles, thus completing the first object contemplated in the contract between the Hon. East-India Company and this company. From the proposed station near to Callian the line can, with equal convenience, take the direction of any of the three routes which have been suggested for the passage of the railway into the interior;

* The officers to pay Rs. 3 out of Rs. 8 per head.

† At Singapore, some fresh brine was put into the casks; but if not well salted, any other measure will be useless.

and the directors hope that by the next meeting of proprietors they will be in a position to arrive at a correct judgment upon this important question. The capital account to the 30th of June shows that 332,090*l.* had been received, of which 270,455*l.* was received in England and 61,644*l.* in Bombay, and that 94,668*l.* had been expended, viz. 74,540*l.* in England, and 20,128*l.* in Bombay, leaving a balance in hand of 237,430*l.*

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report and statement of accounts, said he thought they were satisfactory. Of course, since the last meeting, no great progress could be made in the prosecution of the works; but during that period other matters had been attended to. Their engineer had reported that a great portion of the works on the line in the islands had been brought up to the formation level, and other portions of the first contract were progressing and would soon be completed. The most important event since the last meeting was the letting of the second contract on the line from Tannah to Perseek Point, which he believed was let on satisfactory terms. When these contracts were finished they would be within eight miles of completing the first section of the undertaking. He trusted that the time was not far distant when the East-India Company would decide as to the further extension of the line and the course it is to take. The great difficulty would be in the passage of the Ghauts, and the mode of effecting it. The precise line would have to be determined by the course of the traffic and the facility of working the line. Their engineer had been over the district, but he could not come to any decision on the subject until he had made a more detailed examination of the locality. They hoped to have some useful information on the subject before the next half-yearly meeting as to the most effectual mode of overcoming that great difficulty. With respect to the accounts, he thought they were very satisfactory. It was very satisfactory that more than three-fourths of the expenditure in England was for materials necessary for the works, and that the expenditure for other matters during the half-year was comparatively small. They had hitherto preserved perfect harmony with the East-India Company, and there was no doubt that the good understanding between them would continue. The Government decided as to the ground for the terminus at Bombay. It was understood to be granted on a temporary footing, but there was not much doubt about its being permanent. It was stated to be a very favourable position for the terminus of the railway.

Colonel Dickenson drew the attention of the directors to the necessity of their impressing upon the East-India Company the cogency of assisting the company with their engineering staff to survey the district through which the extension line passed. As far back as 1845 and 1846 that essential point—the passage of the Ghauts—was to have been settled. There were three ghauts in question—namely, the Thul Ghaut, the Malsej Ghaut, and the Bhore Ghaut, and it was very desirable that the passage by one or two of those ghauts should be determined before completing the first section to Callian. Hopes were held out in the report of the directors, a year ago, that the main route would shortly be decided. The same hopes were held out in the last half-yearly report, and also in the present report. It was a matter of great consequence to the inhabitants of the Deccan and others in the district through which the line would pass. He understood that the cost of the portion of the railway from Bombay to Tannah would be 200,000*l.*, or 9,000*l.* per mile, and that being the case, the Court of Directors could easily see that, at a charge of 2*d.* per mile, the traffic would pay a dividend equal to 8 per cent. on that portion of the outlay.

The Chairman thought that the question should be left to the directors, and said it would be as well to remind the honourable proprietor that the original project was to carry the line across the peninsula, and was projected by Mr. Chapman, and of course it was first considered as one undertaking; but the East-India Company, having considered the matter, determined on confining their views to the construction of the first section of the line, as an experimental line, to extend from Bombay to Callian. The further extension depended on the success of the first section, and although the works were progressing favourably, they could not be completed for some time; therefore they had not lost any time yet with regard to the extension. In all probability the surveys were now being proceeding with at the Ghauts, and he could state that the East-India Company had agreed to allow the expenses of the survey to be paid out of the surplus fund of the company. There was a detailed survey of the district made by Mr. Chapman, and Mr. Berkley, their engineer, had been over the district, but had not made a detailed survey. At present the capital of the company was limited to 500,000*l.* for the completion of the first section of the line, thirty-five miles in length.

Mr. Field said, he did not see any sum stated in the accounts for receipts of interest on the paid-up capital. He contended that sooner or later they must be included in the accounts, as they would form a charge against the company when they came to a settlement with regard to the traffic.

The Chairman said, the time would no doubt arrive when it would be necessary to give a statement of the sums received for interest on the paid-up capital. This would be the case when they had a revenue account to lay before the proprietors. At present it would be of no use, as every proprietor knew that he was receiving 5 per cent. on his investment.

The report was unanimously adopted.

Mr. J. G. Frith, one of the directors, read a letter from Mr. Willoughby, who had recently returned from Bombay, to the effect that he had officiated at the cutting of the first sod of the railway on the 31st of October, 1850, and that he expected the line would be opened for traffic in November, 1852. He considered that satisfactory progress had been made in the works, and they had withstood one of the heaviest monsoons that had been remembered for many years. He expressed a strong opinion in favour of the probable effects that the introduction of railways would produce in stimulating industry, and in promoting commerce to a considerable extent. The operation of the railways would have the good effect of causing the common roads of the district through which they passed to be improved. He attributed the introduction of railways into Western India entirely to the indefatigable exertions of their noble chairman. He concluded by stating that he hoped, instead of spending millions of money, as hitherto, on wars of a questionable character, the money would be spent in useful works to benefit India, which he was certain would return a full and ample remuneration for the outlay, as all such works had hitherto done in that country.

Col. Dickenson said there was no person so competent as Mr. Willoughby to give an opinion on India matters, having held a high official situation for many years in that country.

The Chairman said he agreed with the observations contained in Mr. Willoughby's letter, and that no exertions whatever should be spared in promoting useful improvements in India.

After some further observations, a resolution was passed confirming the forfeiture of 273 shares.

In reply to questions, it was stated by the Chairman that the question respecting the extension of the first section had been entertained by the directors of the East India Company so late as last April, at which time they expressed their readiness to go on with it, and to extend the guarantee to an additional capital of 500,000*l.* for that purpose. Of course every one was aware of the difficulties of the country, and the nature of the seasons, but there was no doubt that the line would be completed to Callian at the time specified. With regard to the extension, there was a perfect understanding with the East India Company on that subject.

A cordial vote of thanks was passed to the chairman and directors.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PRESENTS TO THE QUEEN.—Mr. John Shepherd, Chairman of the East-India Company, and Sir James Weir Hogg, Deputy-Chairman, had an audience of the Queen on the part of the Court of Directors of the East-India Company, who, in grateful recollection of the patronage vouchsafed by the Queen to the Great Exhibition of the Works of all Nations, and more particularly in the Indian section of it, had, by an unanimous resolution, requested that their Chairman and Deputy-Chairman should offer, for her Majesty's gracious acceptance, a specimen of each of the principal articles exhibited by the East-India Company. The Chairman and Deputy-Chairman were presented to the Queen by Lord Broughton, President of the Board of Control for the Affairs of India.—Court Circular. The presents embraced Dacca muslins, furniture, jewellery, including a costly string of pearls, specimens of silver filigree works, one or two of the jewelled agate cups, carpets, shawls, brocades, and other objects. The whole forms a magnificent offering of loyalty, alike worthy of the recipient and the donors.—Times.

RAW PRODUCTS OF INDIA.—The following passage in the Times of October 20th will confirm some remarks of ours, in the Mail of May 5th (p. 270), respecting the raw products of India: "Among the fibrous substitutes for hemp and flax in the Indian department of raw produce (in the Great Exposition) was exhibited a specimen which the most eminent naturalists pronounce to be identical with China grass. It grows in all parts of the Assam territories, and could be brought into our markets in large quantities, if a demand existed for it.* As, however, it does not come to hand from the source whence they have been accustomed to receive China grass, the merchants and brokers will not look at it, while, at the same time, they offer 40*l.*, 50*l.*, and even 80*l.* for the very material with which it is stated to be identical. Again; in the collection of fatty oils from India, there is one of great interest, from the seed of the bassia, which flourishes in almost every part of the peninsula. From this tree sugar, as well as a spirit resembling whisky, and the vegetable oil in question, are all extracted. The abundant supply, and the other valuable properties of the tree, would enable the oil to be imported on the most favourable terms, for the manufacture of candles, soap, &c.; yet, because it is 'not known in the market,' it would probably at once be put down as 'of no value.' Take the case of gutta percha, and we find it quite recently brought into notice by a paper of Professor Solly's on the subject, read before the Society of Arts. He had been requested by Dr. Royle to analyze it, and Dr. Royle, in his turn, had had his attention drawn to the subject by Mr. Wilkinson, an intelligent broker. But for this, the material might still have remained undiscovered; and we cannot imagine a more direct and forcible illustration of the advantages to be derived from an association of practical and scientific men in connection with a collection of substances and processes to which their inquiries might be directed. India furnishes many examples of a similar description to those quoted. The colours sent in by her to the Exhibition have, for the first time, attracted the attention of the artist. Her successful efforts in the cultivation of the tea plant have received a publicity which, in the ordinary course of trade, must have taken a long time to achieve. Looking at the Indian collection of raw produce generally, and, indeed, at the specimens sent from all parts of the world, incomplete as these are, one cannot help being struck with the number of apparently useful substances, of which we know nothing; and, even when the question of utility has been satisfactorily proved, the cheapness and the abundance of the supply remain doubtful."

* See some particulars respecting this grass in our Bengal Intelligence, ante.

EASTERN PRODUCTS AT THE EXHIBITION.—The East-India Company intend, after providing for the preservation of a complete set of the raw materials, tools, and mechanical contrivances, to authorize the distribution of all that remains over in these departments of the splendid collection of Eastern products shown by them at the Exhibition to such public bodies and scientific men as may apply for them. The greater portion of the manufactured goods of every kind purchased by the Company for the occasion will be sold.

THE RAILROAD IN EGYPT.—Lord Palmerston, in reply to a letter from the secretary of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, expressing apprehensions lest the issue of the discussions between the Porte and the Pasha of Egypt should have a prejudicial effect upon the transit of passengers and goods through Egypt, has stated "that, whatever questions of etiquette and form may have arisen between the Sultan and Abbas Pasha in regard to the construction of a railroad between Alexandria and Cairo, or in regard to the introduction of the tanzimat into Egypt, he entertains no apprehension that the construction of the railroad will be stopped, or that the local government of Egypt will be deprived of the means of maintaining order in that province." Intelligence has since been received, that the Sultan has withdrawn his opposition to the construction of the railway.

COTTON FROM INDIA.—The East-India Company have forwarded to Mr. Hugh Fleming, secretary to the Commercial Association, Manchester, 1,000 bales of cotton for sale in that town, recently shipped, per Armide, of which rather more than 800 bales is from the indigenous plant of the country, grown in the Dharwar district. The remaining portion is from New Orleans seed experimented with in the same district.

UNIVERSITY GRANT.—Oxford, Oct. 30.—In a convocation held this day, it was agreed to grant out of the university chest the sum of 150*l.* for the purchase of books printed at the university press for the cathedral of Bombay.

THE REV. DR. JACKSON, Bishop-designate of Lyttleton, has returned to this country. The Wesleyan Times states that he has been recalled by the Bishop of London, and is now with his father, the Rev. Thomas Jackson, at the Wesleyan Theological Institution, Richmond.

NEW ARCTIC EXPEDITION.—The Lords of the Admiralty have decided on sending another expedition early in the ensuing year to make further search for Sir John Franklin. The Resolute and Assistance sailing vessels, and the Pioneer and Intrepid screw steam-vessels, are to be made ready for this service.

THE QUEEN'S COLLEGES, IRELAND.—It appears from an official notification published in the Cork papers, that Sir Robert Kane, as president of the Queen's College, Ireland, has been authorized to recommend to the Earl of Clarendon a student of the college, whom the president shall consider deserving and suitable, to be nominated to a writership in the civil service of the East-India Company; the President of the Board of Control having most liberally placed that nomination at the disposal of the Chancellor of the University, for the advancement of the great public object of liberal education, and the rewarding of academic merit. The Cork Reporter says—"The country owes for this, as for so much else, its thanks to Sir Robert Kane, for having seen and secured a practical and practicable benefit for its sons. Some months ago it was made known that through his exertions, the East-India Company had been induced to present to the library of the College a collection of works on Oriental languages and literature; and as we once or twice looked at the embarrassing contortions of Arabic and Sanscrit pages, we were, as we confess, puzzled to know what could possibly be wanted with them in Cork. We did not suspect that at that time Sir Robert Kane was bringing under the notice of the Earl of Clarendon a suggestion by which the unfair neglect of Ireland in Indian appointments might in some degree be remedied, and in a way honourable to all parties. The suggestion was, however, as we understand, most heartily taken up by his Excellency, who secured for Sir Robert Kane's idea the prompt and liberal attention of the President of the Board of Control. Although it was impossible to carry out all, yet Lord Broughton gladly conceded the nomination now published, and which is most properly to be made on the recommendation of Sir Robert Kane, by the Earl of Clarendon, as Chancellor of the Queen's University, who seems anxious to carry out to practical realization the beneficent system of education established in the Queen's Colleges."

THE LE BAS PRIZE.—Cambridge, Oct. 29.—This prize, given annually for the best essay on a subject of general literature (occasionally to be chosen with reference to the history, institutions, and probable destinies and prospects of the Anglo-Indian empire), has been adjudged to B. A. Irving, B.A., of Emmanuel College. Subject—"The effects of caste on the institutions and probable destinies of the Anglo-Indian empire."

BOOKS.

A Catalogue of the Mammalia in the Museum of the East-India Company. Printed by order of the Court of Directors. London: W. H. Allen & Co.

THE Zoological Museum of the East-India Company consists of specimens, in all departments of the science, from their oriental possessions and other parts of the East, contributed by public servants, who have been attached as naturalists to missions and deputations, or by gentlemen of the civil and military services of the company.

This catalogue contains the scientific names and very full descriptions of no fewer than 289 individuals, many of them rare and curious, carefully arranged and classified by the accurate Dr. Horsfield, the keeper of the Museum. The details embrace matter of more than zoological interest. In the description of the Semnopithecus Entellus, or Hanuman of the Hindus, for example, we have the mythological history of the celebrated monkey-god, the ally of Rama in his wars with the giants. Some habits of the Royal Tiger are authentically recorded, which are not generally known, and which contradict the common opinion respecting the character of that animal.

A Narrative of the Kaffir War of 1850-51. By R. GODLONTON and EDWARD IRVING. Part I. London: Richardson, Graham's Town: Godlonton and White.

The object of this publication, which is issuing in parts from the local press in the colony, reprinted here, is to afford the British public correct information respecting the war of 1850-51, "which, above all its predecessors, has been pre-eminently unprovoked and treacherous," and to defend the British settler in South Africa from the "malignments" which, it is alleged, have been heaped upon them on former occasions.

The narrative is full and clear, and, being written near the scene of operations, its accuracy is entitled to confidence.

We have derived much assistance from this work in compiling the article which appears in our present issue, on "The Seat of War in Caffraria."

ACTUARY.—David Jones, Esq.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 14th of May, 1851, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current year.
20		£1,000	£19 6 8	£10 12 8
30	On or before	1,000	24 8 4	13 8 7
40	14th of May,	1,000	31 10 0	17 6 6
50	1846.	1,000	42 15 0	23 10 3
60		1,000	66 11 8	36 12 5

* * The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society, as on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assurers to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

They give a brilliant light, are transparent as wax, do not require snuffing, free from smell, and have the most perfect appearance of the finest wax. DUNN'S Sovereign Sperm Candles, 11s. 6d. per dozen lbs., are much admired, being delicately white, brilliantly illuminating, exceedingly hard, requiring no snuffing, and are altogether very superior candles. DUNN'S best Composite Candles, 8s. 9d. per dozen lbs.: these are very excellent candles, and are infinitely superior to those candles usually sold as "composite," are hard, white, require no snuffing, and burn with a silvery flame. N.B.—From the great satisfaction this oil has given during the last 12 years, J. D. and Co. are anxious to assure the public it is only to be obtained at their warehouse, as above, as the same name has been assumed for oils of a widely different character.

INTERESTING FACT.—The following singular and authentic case of restoration of the human hair is worthy of observation, more particularly as it relates to an article of high and universal repute during the last half century. Mr. H. Herrmann, of Queen Street, Soho, had been quite bald for some time past, and had tried various preparations for the recovery of his hair, but without any beneficial result. He was then induced to try the effects of "Rowland's Macassar Oil," and after daily applying it for about two months, he, much to his gratification, had his hair quite restored, and now possesses a beautiful head of hair. This fact speaks too strongly for itself to require comment.—Bell's Weekly Messenger.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL is celebrated throughout the world for its genial and nourishing qualities for the Human Hair. For Children it is especially recommended, as forming the basis of a Beautiful Head of Hair.—Price 3s. 6d. and 7s., family bottle (equal to four small) 10s. 6d., and double that size 21s. per bottle.

Beware of SPURIOUS IMITATIONS.—The only genuine of each bears the name of "ROWLANDS," preceding that of the article, on the wrapper or label, with their signature at the foot, in red ink, thus—A. ROWLAND & SONS. Sold by them at 20, Hatton Garden, London; and by chemists and perfumers.

Chelaseas have succeeded. Their fortress was surrendered on the 8th September, and levelled to the ground by Huree Chund. These people are now represented as treacherous and brutal; and their conduct, subsequent to the surrender, would seem to justify the imputation.

The Maharaja himself is still reported to be in bad health, suffering under a disorder, reputed incurable in the East, which indicates a decay of the constitution. A traveller, in Cashmere, gives the following description of this remarkable personage and his family:—

"Goolab Singh is fifty-four years old. He has three legitimate sons—the two eldest were murdered at Lahore in the troubles that succeeded Runjeet's death. The remaining son, Runbeer Singh, the heir apparent, is twenty-four years old. He has a dark and not remarkable countenance. He appears to be nervous, and thus incivility is sometimes attributed to his manner when addressing a gentleman. In my opinion, he unquestionably wishes to be on good terms with the British, on whose protection he relies for peaceable succession to his father's throne. Runbeer Singh has a son not quite a year old. There are many natural sons of Goolab Singh's. The eldest, a man about 40 years old, becomes viceroys of Kashmir when his father goes to Jummo. His name is Meer Hultoo. The two nephews of Goolab (sons of Dhyau Singh) have jaghirs near Jummo; the elder, Jowahir Singh, is an ambitious fellow—hates the British with a father's hate. He is said to be intriguing for the throne on Goolab's death; but without money what can he do?"

The affairs of the Nizam do not wear so promising an aspect as in the last accounts. The minister's only means of reducing the expenditure of the state is by a reduction of the irregular soldiery, whose net charges amount to seventy lakhs of rupees a year. They are always one year in arrears, and it would be necessary to raise that sum to pay them off, an operation which, in the present condition of the finances of the state, would be impossible. Then, the Arab chiefs are also large money-lenders, and their claims amount to nearly a million and a half sterling. Suraj-ool-Moolk had proposed certain terms to the Arabs,—that they should give in a schedule of their pecuniary claims on the subjects of the Nizam, which he would submit for adjudication to the Courts; that they would no longer be permitted to be money-lenders and the brokers of the country, nor be allowed to take service with private individuals in any capacity, but that he was willing to receive on the pay establishment of the Government all the real Arabs that might be displaced by his order; making a reduction in the rate of pay. The Arabs had as yet given no answer to these terms. The latest letter from Hyderabad, dated 27th September, in the Bombay Telegraph, says:

"The Nizam, on a recent interview, desired his minister to select a peishcar, a subordinate minister, ordinarily the executive minister. At the Nizam's express desire that Suraj-ool-Moolk should select his coadjutor, or rival, according to circumstances, he selected Rajah Shumboo Pershad. The Nizam objected to his appointment, on the ground of his holding the Treasury. Rajah Nanik Bux, the son of Rajah Chundoo Lall, was then named; there was equal objection to him, as farming the town customs. The third person named, was Rajah Nerindur, the grandson of Rajah Chundoo Lall; his youth was objected to, and objections were made on some plea to all whom the minister named as any degree fit for the office. His Highness pointed out Rajah Ram Bux, or Gunnesh Pandit, as the persons whom he desired to be selected for the office. His Highness has been put upon this scheme, that he might have a representative voice in the details of the minor affairs of his government; but I expect that the result of the Nizam's failing in his purpose, by the interdiction of the British Government to carry it out, will tend to cripple his powers still more, and as a necessary consequence of confirming and strengthening the authority of the minister."

Lord Dalhousie has prohibited recruiting of all descriptions in the Nizam's army.

The letters from Lucknow tell the same unvarying tale of disorders in unhappy Oude. The Englishman's correspondent writes:

"The new Fuzlee year began on the 10th September, and the revenue accounts of the preceding year are closed. The whole of the revenue has, however, not yet been collected, but the deficiency of the revenue of the Chucklas varies from Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 100,000. The Khybrad district alone has failed in the large sum of six lacs. This is to be attributed to no other circumstance than the pilfering propensity of its Chuckliars, who has accordingly been imprisoned, and had his property confiscated.

"The wallee uhud, or heir-apparent, is to be married on the 8th of next month, to a grand-daughter of Nawab Moones-ood-Dowlah, a member of the royal family. The bride originally intended for him was the daughter of the minister, whom the king has lately himself married. The elder queen, the prince's mother, has set her face against the match, but it is to come off nevertheless."

The ringleaders of the mutiny in Capt. Magnus's artillery have been discharged by the Durbar.

The Lahore Chronicle asserts that the Governor-General has recorded his deliberate opinion, and earnestly recommended, that the Supreme Government should be located in the north-western provinces; that it is his wish to unite a larger proportion of the north-western Government to the Punjab, and to form the whole into one Presidency—the limits of the two to be somewhere about Allahabad; the Government of Bengal annexing the provinces west of the Soane, as far as Allahabad. In the event of this plan being carried out, under the provisions of the new charter, it is proposed that the residence of the Governor of the north-west provinces should be at Simla, the subordinate offices, as well as those connected with the Supreme Government, being located at Umballa. This is said to explain the evident anxiety for some time past manifested to complete the greatly improved communication between Simla and the plains, now in progress. In case of these important measures being carried out, it is thought a change will also take place in the constitution of the army, which will, it is said, be then separated into two divisions, designated the "Bengal" and "Lahore" Armies.

The Doorga Poojah holidays had put a stop to all business at Calcutta, public as well as private. The Englishman hints at certain reforms in various departments of the Indian Government. The abolition of the local treasuries, the collector of each district being made the general treasurer, is likely to be approved and carried into effect, it is said; and the Military Board is also supposed to be ripe for abolition.

According to the Calcutta papers, the native landholders of that city are forming a society for the purpose of appointing a representative who will advocate their interests in the Parliament at home in the discussions on the renewal of the Company's Charter. The association has been established under the designation of the Daishtatwthee Somaj, or "Society for the good of the Country." The object is to be accomplished by raising contributions from the natives of the soil.

At Bombay, the railway is making such rapid progress that the cuttings and embankments are to be met with all along from the borders of the flats—the earthworks on the flats themselves were completed before the rains—across the densely-peopled regions about Bynulla and Mazagon, and so on by Nowrojee Hill to the sea. "Within the first mile of its quitting the flats it cuts right through three of the most important thoroughfares—two of these, the Parell and Mazagon roads, being much frequented by the wealthier portion of the natives."

A letter from Upper Assam says, that the whole of that district is suffering severely from a scarcity of grain, caused by the floods of last year, so that the only rice procurable is a coarse description from Seebaungor, which is now selling at more than three times the ordinary price. The people of the interior villages are said to be living on wild roots and herbs.

The King of Burmah is described as perfectly insane and it is thought probable that he will ere long be pushed from his throne to make way for a successor. Captain Impey had, it is said, failed to secure the object of his visit to Ava, whatever that may have been, and he had returned to Martaban.

The Singapore papers state, that the two kings of Siam have given orders for a large addition to be forthwith made to the city of Bangkok. They have established a printing-press, at which works are to be produced in Siamese and English; and have also directed a general revision of the laws of the kingdom, so that they may be made as equitable as possible, and that equal justice may be dealt out to all alike, high and low, rich and poor.

From China we learn that the insurrection, in the two southern provinces, had not yet been put down. It is stated that, in July, an attempt was made to assassinate the Emperor Yihchu (or, according to the designation of his dynasty, Hienfung), which was frustrated by one of his Majesty's attendants, who lost his arm in warding off the blow. Eighteen high mandarins were implicated in the matter, and, together with the whole of their families, were immediately decapitated. Suspicion had also fallen on some of the Emperor's uncles, on several court eunuchs, and on Keying and Muhchangah.

Each successive arrival from the Cape of Good Hope is fraught with more alarming intelligence from the frontier of the colony than the preceding. In a patrol of Colonel Mackinnon into the Fish River Bush, there were no fewer than 78 casualties; Captain Oldham, of the 2nd Royals, and 25 men, were cut to pieces by the savages, besides 29 wounded and missing of the same corps, and in an advance by Lieutenant-Colonel Fordyce, with 550 men, including 245 of the 74th Highlanders, upon the Kroome Bush, a panic, which seized a party of the Fort Beaufort Fingoe Levy, occasioned a loss of 17 men of the 74th.

A private letter states that, in Colonel Mackinnon's affair, "Captain Oldham, after receiving three wounds, took the ring off his finger, and gave it to his servant, charging him, if he escaped, to deliver it to his wife. Three sergeants were killed in attempting to get him out of the bush. It has been a most murderous affair. The Caffres hunted after the poor fellows with dogs. Had it not been for the timely arrival of Col. Michel, with a company of the 6th, scarcely a man of the two companies would have escaped."

A French paper has a story, absurd in its details, of a French officer, named Parel, who has served in Algeria, having taken command of the Caffres, and defeated the English in their attack upon "the important fortress of Makox!"

THE CIVIL BONUS FUND.

This is the age of bonuses. "Young Promotion" is pushing his bonus fund with characteristic zeal and animating success. A proposal is on the carpet for creating a medical bonus fund, and now the junior members of the civil service are making a strenuous effort to raise a similar fund to purchase the retirement of the seniors, and clear the board for the advancement of the juniors. Bonuses seem to be considered justifiable in every department except that of the Bengal Bank, where the offer of the late Mr. Hampton to the secretary of a bonus of Rs. 40,000 to take himself out of the way, and leave the coast clear for canvas, is considered a most atrocious proceeding, which it is necessary to visit with the severest penalty. Be that as it may. There can be no doubt that the civilians under twenty-five years' standing could not make a more profitable investment of three per cent. of their incomes, than to create a bonus fund to accelerate promotion. The retirement of a civil judge will give promotion to the several grades below him, of the annual value of perhaps Rs. 25,000. If five steps are purchased for Rs. 150,000, the improvement produced in the allowances of the juniors will not fall short of Rs. 125,000 a year. There can be little doubt, moreover, that a bonus of Rs. 30,000 would be a sufficient inducement to many men, who are now lingering in the service, to retire, because it would enable them to make up their subscriptions to the Annuity Fund, or to create a small purse to begin house-keeping at home. We earnestly recommend the scheme to the careful attention of all those members of the service, who will benefit by its success. The plan proposed of appointing a central committee in Calcutta, to collect the votes of the service, and to organize the plan of operations, appears to be precisely that which is necessary to ensure success, and we hope it will be adopted without delay. At present the number of unaccepted annuities is very considerable, and if the operation of the fund should induce those whose period of service is mature, to take their annuities and to quit the service, it will have accomplished a most desirable object. There is only one point on which we entertain some doubts. The number of those who voluntarily retire from the service every year has been on an average of the last few years, five or six; and there is every prospect that this number will retire annually, whether there be any extraneous inducement or not. The Bonus Fund proposes to provide for the retirement of five civilians every year. How then can its promoters be certain that the very same officers who would have retired, whether or no, may not be the same who will accept their bonus as the price of retirement? In that case, there will be no quickening of promotion from the funds thus raised, and the junior members will have impoverished themselves in vain. We merely throw out this idea for the consideration of those who are anxious to establish the fund, in the hope that they will be able to devise some plan by which this disappointment may be averted.—Friend of India, Oct. 2.

With regard to the importance of the question there cannot be a doubt; but we are inclined to think that a really sound, practical plan, universal and equitable in its operation, has not yet been alighted upon. It is altogether useless to turn to the military service for guides and precedents; the two cases are not parallel. The purchasing-out system is in no way applicable to the civil service, where there is no regular promotion, no fixed gradation of rank, no gradual increase of pay and allowances. The difference of rank exists, but its existence is entirely artificial. As far as we can form any opinion on the matter, it appears to us that this conventional inequality must in this case be laid aside.

As all will be called upon to pay an equal per-centage to the fund, so should all equally share in its benefits, without reference to the actual position of the applicant at the time of his resignation of the service. A sadder judge, for example, should receive no more than a collector or zillah judge, though his appointment is of infinitely greater consequence to his brother civilians. But it would be altogether impracticable to form a table of retiring bonuses adjusted to each particular appointment. It therefore becomes necessary to fix upon a certain sum—our correspondents recommend 3,000*l.*—to be given to every subscriber to the fund, who within six months from the date of his becoming entitled to his pension, shall formally resign the service; or within six months of an annuity falling vacant, should there not be one available at the completion of his period of service. It must not, however, be overlooked that, although at present there may be twenty-six annuities unaccepted, the consequence of an earlier resignation of the service will be to render the demand greater than the supply; and as the annuitants will be then naturally younger and healthier men, vacancies will occur at longer intervals. This, of course, will act as a check to the working of the bonus scheme, to the extent its projectors appear to anticipate. But we do not regard it as a fatal obstruction; on the contrary, we are disposed to think favourably of the general bearing of the proposition.—Delhi Gaz. Sept. 27.

THE OOTHAEEGERAS OF BUNDLECUND.

A paper in the 10th part of "Selections from Public Correspondence," with a copy of which we have been favoured, discloses the curiously-organized system prevailing among the Oothaeegeeras or Sunoreahs, of various Bundelcund states, who are in fact nothing more than a gang of thieves, with wide-spreading ramifications.

The head-quarters of this choice fraternity are fixed in twelve villages, chiefly inhabited by these Sunoreahs—buneeahs, chumars, and mehters, are the only castes who are excluded from the brotherhood. The lumburdar of the village is the mookkea, or chief of the vagabonds, and each village contains from 7 to 10 gangs, registered by their government. There is also a head mookkea over the twelve villages, whose duty it is to act as arbiter in all disputes with regard to the division of spoils, and to receive such articles as may be deemed worthy of presentation to their government. The office of mookkea is hereditary, and in default of male issue descends to the women. On learning from their favorite Brahmin priest, after the Dusserah, towards which point of the compass fortune is likely to prove most favourable, the mookkea appoints a rendezvous for his gang of 50 or 60 followers. On arriving at the chosen spot, they are told off in parties of ten or a dozen, and a day fixed for their return. Should the collected plunder yield 40 to 50 rupees for each man, they quietly vend their way homewards; otherwise, they disperse a second time, and during their absence, which not unfrequently extends over a period of one or two years, their families are supported by the village money-lender, at a profit of about 100 per cent. The spoils are openly sold in the bazar, though at a sacrifice of one-half of their real value. In the district of Tehree, there are no fewer than 4,000 avowed Sunoreahs, 300 in Banpoor, and about the same number in Dutteeah. A peculiar slang has been adopted by the brotherhood, in which their children are instructed from their earliest infancy.

We are happy to observe, that the end of these things is near at hand, and that "the states of Tehree and Banpoor have solicited the orders of our government," for the suppression of these formidable gangs of marauders. Nothing more strongly marks the moral obliquity of the native society of this country, than the letters of the rulers of Tehree and Banpoor admitting the facts. They speak of the system as flourishing throughout the country; and as the police of the British government, who are well acquainted with it, take no notice of the fraternity, they saw no harm in it, or even in sharing the spoils.—Delhi Gaz. Sept. 22.

CASHMERE.

A friend, who has recently visited Cashmere, has favoured us with the following account of Goolab Singh, his army and his dominions:—

"On arriving at the city of Kashmir, I was waited on by a munshi, who presented some sweetmeats and fruits, saying that the Maharajah Goolab Singh was at Jummoo, but that the dewan had orders to supply British gentlemen with provisions, &c., they paying nothing. I refused the provisions, and accompanied the munshi to the bungalows built for the accommodation of the Sahib loq. These are six in number, situated on the banks of the Jhilum, and though not large, are very comfortable, and are surrounded by gigantic plane trees, and lines of poplars on which vines are tastefully trained. The day after, Goolab Singh returned to Kashmir, and all officers waited upon him in Durbar. He was particularly polite, and among the many compliments he paid our Government, he said he owed all his possessions and even his life to the British. The following day the Maharajah reviewed the troops stationed near the city; they amounted to nearly 4,000 men, and two guns drawn by the artillery men, with forty or fifty wall pieces carried by the artillery. The cavalry are very inferior, though composed of old friends of the kings—bad horses—bad riders, with no discipline. The infantry are well dressed and look well. Colonel Steinbach's two battalions drill well and steadily; they do him great credit. The men in these battalions are Dograhs, armed with a long rifle. The Purbeeahs are armed with musket and bayonets. All words of command are given in English. The bands of regiments play what is intended for "God save the Queen." The artillery are very similarly dressed to our horse artillery, but, instead of the ugly forage cap, wear a particularly becoming turban. The two guns on this parade were one 8-pounder and one 6-pounder. The salute was fired well, though it is said the artillery know nothing of laying a gun. There are 37 guns in the valley—of these not ten can be fired. None of the guns have limbers or waggons, or any cattle to draw them. The chief weapon used by the artillery is the wall piece—of these there are hundreds in Kashmir. They have "rests," and are carried by the artillery men, and Goolab Singh says prove particularly useful in the hills.

"The Fort is a badly-constructed stone building, on the summit of a hill, named the Huri Purbut. Around the base of this hill is a fine wall, built by Acbar the Great. It is kept in repair, and is the strongest part of the defence of the Hill. In the Fort are four guns and 100 men. It is capable of holding six guns and about 500 men. There is no well in the Fort. Water is collected when rain falls. There are the remains of an aqueduct built by Jehangir to conduct water from a hill more than a mile distant. However contemptible as a fortress, the Huri Purbut Fort commands the city, and could punish the citizens if they required chastisement.

"The cruelty attributed to Goolab Singh is greatly exaggerated. Doubtless the taxes are most exorbitantly high, but punishments, excepting fines, are trifling in the extreme. During the last two years, only two men have been hanged—both had committed murder; hands have been cut off from a few thieves, and the noses from some infamous women. The prisoners taken by the army in Chillas are transported to other parts of the king's dominions; and to all this must be added, that the Maharajah feeds some hundreds of fakirs every day; and when he was very ill, a short time ago, he sent men about giving four annas pieces to the poor of the city. Of course fear of death was the cause of this charity; still it is a good fear that promotes charity.

"The city is large, containing 60,000 or 70,000 inhabitants; the houses are high, with pent roofs; on the roofs grow flowers and grass; thus giving, as Moore says, to the fair city the appearance of a vast and variegated parterre."—Mofussil, Sept. 12.

We have received intelligence of an unfortunate occurrence in Cashmere, by which a native soldier is said to have lost his life at the hands of an artillery officer of some standing in the service, and of high lingual attainments. At the present stage of the proceedings, it would not be right to do more than to mention that the officer is to be brought to trial before a military tribunal.—Delhi Gaz., Oct. 8.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The LONDON MAIL of August 24th arrived at Calcutta on September 30th (per Hindustan).

RECRUITS.—We understand that orders have been issued by Government to have steamers in readiness by the 25th October, to convey to Allahabad all the recruits expected out from England this season. We believe there will be about 970 of H.M.'s, and about 230 of the Company's; in all, some 1,200 men.—Hurkaru, Sept. 22.

A SACRIFICE TO KALI.—The following case came before the Nizamut Adawlut:—Madhob Chunder Bhutto, an inhabitant of the 24-Pergunnahs, is holding a kid which is to be offered to the goddess. Nobin Chunder Bhutto is the officiating priest: with one blow of the sacrificial knife he strikes off the head of the kid, with a second that of the man who holds the animal. There is nothing but a "fanatical impulse" to account for the deed, and the murderer is doomed to death.

THE "PACHA."—A consultation has been held among the principal sufferers by the collision of the Pacha and the Eria, as to the possibility of making the P. and O. Company responsible for the losses caused by the presumed carelessness of their servants. The opinion of counsel has been taken, and it is in favour of the Company's liability.

REDUCTION OF FREIGHTS.—A circular announces that the P. and O. Company are already beginning to act upon the suggestions of the Report of the House of Commons Committee. A reduction has been made upon the freight of raw silk and silk piece goods, despatched by the extra steamers. The charge has hitherto been Rs. 200 per ton, and it is reduced to Rs. 150, the charge by the other steamers remaining as before.

MR. C. R. PRINSEP has been appointed to officiate as Advocate-general for the presidency of Fort William in Bengal, in the room of Mr. C. R. M. Jackson, and Mr. L. Clarke to officiate as the Hon. Company's standing counsel, in the room of Mr. Prinsep.

ENSIGNS JAMES AND FRASER.—The Englishman understands that the commander-in-chief has intimated his desire that Ensigns James and Fraser, the two young officers concerned in the ridiculous duel in the fort, should remain in arrest until the result of the wound received by the latter is finally known. Ensign Fraser is nearly recovered, and there is, therefore, every probability that both combatants will escape with no further consequences than a severe reprimand from his Excellency.

NEW NATIVE JOURNAL.—The Eastern Star mentions that a new journal, to be called the Jurist, will shortly be started in Calcutta, by an influential body of natives, hostile to the continuance of the charter.

RESUSCITATION. We meet with the following story in a native weekly paper:—"A native was brought as a corpse to be burned at the Nimtollah Ghaut, and as his relatives were performing the last rites, preparatory to his being laid on the funeral pile, that is, bathing and clothing him afresh, one of the limbs of the seeming deceased showed signs of animation, by trembling, and afterwards the man turned his eye-balls and exhibited unmistakable signs of life; he was then, as a matter of course, taken home by his relatives. We have since been informed that, during the last stage of his malady, a dose of Gopal Bose's naut,—a kind of poisonous snuff,—was administered to him; the medicine worked on the patient, which reduced him to such a state of insensibility as to be mistaken for dead, and then brought to life by coming in contact with water."

MR. PRINGLE.—The Englishman states, that the Court of Enquiry on Mr. Pringle had closed very unfavourably for him.

REGIMENTAL MESSES.—We understand that the Committee at Simla, deputed to inquire into the subject of regimental messes, has nearly closed its sittings. The reports already received show that out of seventy-four regiments, seventy-three have messes,—the 64th being the only one without. There seems but little doubt entertained that regimental messes will be compulsory—in fact, we have heard that the sanction of the Governor-General is all that is now wanting to make them so.—Delhi Gazette, Sep. 27.

THE INVESTITURE OF SIR HUGH WHEELER with the insignia of a Knight Commander of the Bath, took place at Government-house, Simla, Sept. 30. The ball-room had been very well arranged for the ceremony. At the upper end was the throne, approached by an aisle formed of seats set apart for the knights and companions of the Order present, and in rear of these for the staff visitors of rank. Lower down, several rows of seats stretching across the room, were reserved for, and filled with, ladies, while the remainder of the space and every available corner was crowded with officers of all ranks. The ceremony commenced with a procession, followed by the Governor-General, who was dressed in the cabinet uniform, with the collar of a Knight of the Thistle. The bands of the Governor-General and H.M.'s 22nd, which had been united for the occasion, now struck up the National Anthem, and all in the room rose. The procession filed off as it approached the throne, and the Governor-General, after bowing to it, took his seat thereon, and announced that, "He had been commanded by her Majesty, to invest, with every possible mark of honour and distinction, Col. Hugh Massey Wheeler with the insignia of the 2nd class of the Order of the Bath, which in her special grace and favour she had been pleased to confer on him, as a reward for a long course of distinguished services." Lord Dalhousie directed Sir Henry Lawrence and Sir Henry Elliott, to carry his command to Col. Hugh Massey Wheeler, that he should appear, and shortly he appeared between his two supporters, preceded by Col. Tucker, c.a., bearing on a velvet cushion the insignia of a Knight Commander. After making three obeisances as they approached the throne, Lord Dalhousie rose and read her Majesty's warrant. Sir Hugh Wheeler now kneeling, Lord Dalhousie proceeded to place the badge, and the star. The bands here struck up the National Anthem, and a salute was fired from the guns. Lord Dalhousie having descended from, and bowed to the throne, the ceremony concluded, and Sir Hugh received his lordship's and his friends' congratulations. Dancing ensued, and the best ball of the season was kept up with great spirit till 2 o'clock.—Mofussilite, Oct. 7.

A HORTICULTURAL CONTROVERSY is at present going on in Calcutta,—one party, headed by Sir L. Peel, contending that plants from the public garden there should not be given gratis to those who can pay for them, to the great injury of native mallees; the other party, represented by the editor of the Englishman, maintaining that plants should be given gratis to all.

THE BISHOP OF CALCUTTA, being unable, through indisposition, to proceed on his sixth triennial visitation, has empowered his commissary, Archdeacon Pratt, to hold the visitation in his behalf.

DR. GOPAL CHUNDER SEAL, one of the young hindus educated in England, was drowned, with his whole family, near Fultah on Friday last, while on his way to Tumlook. His budgerow got upon a ship's cable during a strong ebb tide, and hence the lamentable accident.—Hurkaru, September 29.

THE INSOLVENT ACT.—A native writing in the Sumachar, on the Indian Insolvent Act, says:—"In the days of yore, people used to look upon debt as they did upon hell; hence, the debtors were trying their best to pay the lawful demands of their creditors. This they considered the true way of salvation. But the generation of the present day have utterly forgotten and disregarded this true principle. Some people say that money is the gift of God, and consequently, it must be used in the best possible way, and the old people on hearing this, speak of the wicked Mazdak, who was subdued and annihilated by the then powerful Kingdom (of Persia); but in these days, as long as the British rule exists, this amended Act will remain in force. Several old men of sound experience, declare it as their opinion, that before the promulgation of this Act, there was no deceitful trade nor cheating in commerce; merchants, with due regard to their honour and reputation, were carrying on their trade with the greatest care and zeal, guided by the utmost discretion. But since the passing of this injudicious amended Act, dishonest and deceitful trade is on the increase. That commerce will suffer much more serious injury by it, is beyond the shadow of doubt; for the new and moneyless tradesmen of this day are conscious of the easy attainment of the benefit of the Act in question. They lay stress on this Act, saying, 'Let us be of good cheer, we can now enjoy and indulge ourselves in extravagance, and can ruin our rival; let our creditors take what is left on our insolvency.'" The Friend of India bears testimony to the fact, that the natives of Bengal hold precisely this opinion. "As the native trade, particularly upon a great scale, is conducted upon a system which makes honesty,—strange as the assertion may seem to those who are acquainted only with the retail system—an absolute essential, their opinion is entitled to respect."

THE RICE CROR.—The Citizen has received several accounts from different parts of the country, all concurring in setting forth the prospects of the rice crop as most gloomy.

NATIVE GRIEVANCES.—From the Citizen we learn that a political association has been formed under the auspices of the rajah of Burdwan, composed of natives "of principle and education," for the purpose of bringing, in some way or other, the grievances under which they in common with their countrymen labour, to the notice of the British legislature, at the time of the renewal of the East-India Company's charter.

MAJOR MCMURDO AND MR. LANG.—Major McMurdo, the attached son-in-law of Sir Charles Napier, has inflicted a verbal horsewhipping on "a notorious buffoon of the name of Lang," the instrument of flagellation—more sharp in lash than "formidable" in "dimensions"—being a letter to the Delhi Gazette. The gallant major, as usual, lays on with more energy than discretion, and we shall not be surprised to find that, as in a case of recent occurrence here, the whip changes hands, and both parties claim the victory at the end of the contest. The provocation under which Major McMurdo has raised his arm lies in a recent attack of the Optimist on the character of Sir Charles Napier, respecting which the editor of that paper has changed his mind some half-dozen times in half as many years.—Englishman, Sept. 26. The Optimist has replied very briefly to Major McMurdo's offensive letter. We subjoin the answer:—"McMurdo is not a bad fellow; but, as everybody knows, a great ass."—Napier.

ROAD ACROSS THE HILLS.—We learn by letters from Simla, that it has been decided by the Governor-General that a good road across the hills to Mussoorie shall be at once commenced upon. Lieutenant Briggs has accordingly been directed to survey and mark out a line upon the Kennedy principle, and is about to leave Simla for that purpose. The road will commence from the Governor-General's bungalow at Mahassoo.—Delhi Gaz. Oct. 8.

TWO OF THE AMEERS OF SIND, who were for some time located at Hazareelagh, under charge of Dr. Callam, of the Bombay medical service, arrived here on Saturday, and are to make Lahore their future place of residence.—Lahore Chron. Sept. 24.

LIEUT. AND BREVET CAPT. J. GORDON, was under trial by court-martial, at Fort William, on charges relating to pecuniary transactions, and quitting cantonments without leave.

FURLONGHS.—Letters from Simla intimate that staff-officers are henceforth to be allowed one year's furlough at the expiration of every seven years, without detriment to their staff appointments.

CAOUTCHOUC.—A correspondent in Assam informs us that Government has granted the right of collecting the gum caoutchouc (or India-rubber) of one-half of the Chardoar forest to Messrs. Martin and Co., the other half being reserved for the firm of Ritchie and Co., provided they take it up within a year.—Hurkaru, Sept. 26.

SEVERAL other courts-martial are spoken of as probable.

ALLEGED HOMICIDE.—A letter from Wuzerabad mentions that an artillery officer, travelling in Cashmere, was talking to a young female in the bazaar, when a sepoy, in the service of the Maharajah came up, and interrupted the discourse. The officer struck the sepoy a blow, and killed him. We abstain from mentioning the officer's name at present, though we do not doubt the truth of what we have above stated. The officer, we understand, is to be sent down immediately for trial.—Optimist, Oct. 1.

THE FORT OF CHELAS, the siege of which, by the troops of Maharaja Goolab Sing, has attracted some attention, was taken on the 8th of September. On the 2nd, a mine, which had been run under the fort, was made to communicate with the only tank that supplied water to the garrison, and to draw off what was left of their scanty supply. On the following day, the Chelaseas begged for armistice, conditions of surrender being at the same time asked for and finally settled by Dewan Huree Chund, conditionally to their being confirmed by the Maharaja Goolab Sing. On the 8th, the head men waited on the Dewan, and after receiving kheluts, demanded the removal of the entrenchments and batteries in the immediate vicinity of the town gate, on which they were to receive a guard of the Kashmir troops within the walls. On the removal of the batteries they seized the opportunity of attempting to escape with their families. A pursuit ensued, during which the fugitives kept up a brisk fire while endeavouring to gain the right bank of the Indus; many of them were, however, overtaken and cut down or made prisoners, while others succeeded in escaping, making their way into Yaghistan. While this was going on, a portion of the Kashmir troops succeeded in gaining admittance into the town and obtaining final possession, after a skirmish with the men left in the place. The walls have been levelled, and orders issued for annexing the province to Husora (occasionally named "Astor" in the maps), the district of Goolab Sing's dominions that was subject last year to the brutal attacks of the Chelaseas, and many of the inhabitants of which are still in slavery. Lahore Chron. Sept. 27.

SIMLA BANK.—We have every reason to believe that a rumour, mentioned by a correspondent of the Messenger, is founded on fact, and that the proposition for reducing the capital of the Simla bank, &c., is merely intended as a preliminary step to the final winding-up of the concern.—Ibid.

ON DITS FROM VARIOUS JOURNALS.—We have every reason to believe that Maj.-gen. Hamilton, recently appointed to the command of the Cis-Jhelum, does not intend to join, but to resign his divisional charge, with the view of proceeding to England during the ensuing cold season. It is probable, therefore, that Brigadier Hewitt, now in command of this division, may be again required to proceed from Mooltan to Lahore.—Major Wiggins, 52nd N.I., will succeed Lieut. A. B. Johnson, art., in the office of deputy judge advocate general.—The report that a wing of the 64th N.I. would proceed to Allypuri, is incorrect; it is the left wing of the 6th N.I., under Capt. B. Cary, Lieut. R. Stewart, adjutant, and Ens. Lumsdaine, which was to leave Agra on the 29th Sept., and arrive at Allypuri on the 4th of October, to relieve the 30th regt., who will commence their march on the 6th for Barrackpore.—The two companies of the 6th, under Capt. Plunkett and Lieut. Templer, with the Lieutenant-governor's camp equipage, were to start on the 13th for Budee.—Major McMurdo will leave Simla in November, and will, in all probability, be succeeded in the acting appointment of Assistant Adjutant-general Queen's troops, pending the arrival of Capt. Gough, C.B., by Capt. L. H. Hamilton, of H.M.'s 87th regiment.—We have reason to believe that Col. J. Stuart, C.B., will not proceed to England this season, his health being so far restored as to render such a step unnecessary.—We understand that Capt. J. M. Jeffery, of H.M.'s 99th regt., is likely to succeed Capt. R. Hawkes, of H.M.'s 80th regt., in command of the depot at Darjeeling at the close of the present year.—It is reported at Simla, that Lieut. M. Turnbull, 2nd Lt. Cav. assistant commissioner, Umbala, is to be appointed clothing agent at Futehghur, in the room of Major Sewell, and that he accompanies the Governor-General's camp in progress to join.—Dr. W. Peckett will succeed Dr. H. A. Ebdon in joint medical charge of Simla, on the latter officer proceeding to join his new appointment at Ajmere.—Capt. Marriott, of the 57th N.I., lately officiating for Capt. Scott, deceased, is likely to succeed to the appointment of pension paymaster at Lucknow.

A DISCOVERY of an unexpected kind has lately been made at the village of Kerowlee, near the Surdee salt mines, zillah Pind Dadun Khan. A band of smugglers, chiefly natives of the village just named, agreed among themselves about a year ago to defraud the Government by excavating salt on their own account, and by the agency of Beoparees who frequented the Surdee mines, they have succeeded in carrying off immense quantities of the valuable mineral. The mine they have excavated is between fifty and sixty feet long, and had not the robbers quarrelled, it might not have been discovered for years. It is so situated, that neither horse nor mule can approach the entrance, and the cliff on every side being all but inaccessible to the foot of man, the existence of such a cavern could not have been suspected. All the operations of the band were of course conducted under the cloud of night.—Delhi Gaz. Oct. 4.

THE SUPREME COURT AND THE GOVERNMENT.—It has been rumoured in most of the public offices, that when Sir Lawrence Peel ordered the Supreme Court to be closed for twenty-one days, during the Doorgah Poojah, the deputy-governor wrote to inquire on what grounds the long leave was to be granted to the assistants, to the detriment of their duties; that the Supreme Court was not usually closed for so long a time, and that he, the deputy-governor, did not see why the usual practice should be infringed upon now. To this the chief justice replied, that he acted as he thought proper; that he was not answerable to the deputy-governor for anything he did, that the court was a queen's court, and he a queen's judge, over which and whom Sir John had no manner of control, and therefore his order for closing the court for twenty-one days should stand. What truth there is in all this we do not know; we only state what we and hundreds of others have heard. The report was mentioned in that model of Government offices the military board, as well as in other public places.—Englishman.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

EUROPEAN COURTS OF REQUEST.

Circular.—Adjutant-General's Office, Head Quarters, Simla, Sept. 13.—Sir,—I have the honour, by direction of his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief, to forward, for your information and guidance, the accompanying circular letter on the subject of decrees by Courts of Requests, in substitution for that of the same number and date,* transmitted from this department on the 6th inst. which is hereby cancelled, and which I request you will de me the favour to return.

2. The chief object, I am to add, of these instructions, is to correct the very common error, into which Courts of Requests have fallen, of allowing the orders of officers on their pay to be taken into consideration when deciding on claims preferred against them, and which has frequently erroneously resulted in leaving untouched the full half of an officer's pay when he has himself voluntarily made away with the other half by giving orders on the paymaster.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant,

H. T. TUCKER, Lieut.-Colonel,

Adjutant-General of the Army.

To the Officer commanding—

Circular, 6th Sept.—Sir,—The Commander-in-chief having reason to believe that European Courts of Requests, previously to passing decrees against officers sued before them are accustomed to take into consideration engagements for the payment of monthly instalments to banks which such officers may have entered into; I am directed to annex, for your information and for the future guidance of European Courts of Requests held within your command, the accompanying extract from an official memorandum on the subject by the judge advocate general, No. 554 of the 16th ultimo, and to request you will be good enough to cause the strictest attention to be paid by these tribunals to the opinion therein contained.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant,

H. T. TUCKER, Lieut.-col.

Adj.-gen. of the army.

To the officer commanding—

Extract from Memorandum by the Judge Advocate General, No. 554 of the 16th of August, 1851.

"Nothing can be clearer than these two points: first, that the whole of an officer's pay coming to him in any month, is available to satisfy decrees of Courts of Requests, to the extent sanctioned by the Mutiny Act, section 66.

Secondly. That an officer's having given orders on his pay for instalments in favour of a bank, presents no bar to the decrees of courts of requests being satisfied. By "pay coming to him" is understood the residue of his pay and allowances, after deducting the stoppages made by the rules of the service for the Military and Orphan Funds, and for the Band Fund in regiments having bands, &c. But the bulk of such residue, to the extent of half an officer's entire pay and allowances, is liable to be appropriated to satisfy decrees of courts of requests, notwithstanding any other disposition of it, or any part of it, which an officer may have. These decrees supersede and push aside any orders on his pay which an officer may have previously given. It is therefore unjust to put off the liquidation of the proved demands of creditors, in order to give a preference of payment to a bank, or so as to let the defendant retain half his pay entire."

EXAMINATION OF OFFICERS APPOINTED TO THE COMMISSARIAT DEPARTMENT.

Simla, 16th Sept.—The Most Noble the Governor-General is pleased to lay down the following rules for the examination of officers appointed to the commissariat department.

Examinations will be held at head-quarters of divisions only, by committees composed of the senior revenue officer at the station, the deputy or joint deputy commissary general and the superintending engineer of the circle; the senior to preside, or in the absence of the last-named officer, the executive commissariat officer, or executive engineer may be appointed. When the services of the executive commissariat or executive engineer may not be available, the major-general commanding the division may select any officer as a third member in his place.

The reports of committees are to be submitted to Government through the head of the commissariat department.

Candidates for the commissariat department will, before appointment to it, be examined in the rules of arithmetic, including vulgar and decimal fractions, involution and evolution, also in mensuration and the computation of areas and solid contents, and the system of book-keeping by single and double entry.

Officers, previous to appointment to the commissariat department, are already required, by existing regulations, to have passed the interpreter's examination in the native languages.

During the year of probation, the young officer will be appointed to do duty in one of the large commissariat offices, and the executive officer in charge is required to exact from him punctual attendance during office hours, and at committees, inspections, and other executive duties, and to afford him every assistance in his power in attaining a practical knowledge with the routine of office duties.

The executive officer is required, on the completion of the officer's term of probation, to furnish the examination committee with a certificate on the several points adverted to in the preceding paragraph. This certificate is to be attached to the report of the committee.

The following are the heads of the second examination:—

1st. The probationer's acquaintance with his responsibility and duties in the care and custody of the public cattle and stores under the charge of a commissariat officer.

2nd. His knowledge of the system of procuring supplies by departmental agency or contract, as circumstances may require, and the rules affecting the preparation of contract deeds, and the liability of contractors.

3rd. His acquaintance with the mode of rationing European troops, and the different articles comprising their rations.

4th. His acquaintance with the mode of rationing native troops, and the circumstances under which rations are issued to them.

5th. His knowledge of departmental rules of the forms of his department.

6th. His ability to draw up with accuracy estimates and average statements of the cost of victualling troops and feeding cattle.

7th. His knowledge of the equipments of cattle and store required for the cavalry, artillery, and infantry, with reference to their numbers and the distance to be marched.

8th. His facility in reading Gomashtas' accounts, as presented in Persian or Hindee, and in writing perwannas in the above languages.

9th. His ability to prepare monthly disbursements from the checked accounts of native agents with an account current, and his knowledge of the vouchers required to support charges under the different heads of expenditure.

10th. The extent to which the probationer is conversant with the general system of accounts in the commissariat department.

MADRAS.

THE MOPLAH OUTBREAK.

A native general court-martial has been ordered to assemble at Cannanore for the trial of the sepoys who showed their heels to the Moplahs at Kolatour. The 1st inst. was the day fixed for the opening of the court, but it has since been postponed, for reasons not made public. The probable fate of these disaffected valorous warriors has naturally excited considerable interest. A sanguinary section of the public press has insisted much on the necessity of decimation; nothing less than the lives of the whole will satisfy the bloodthirstiness of others; but there is, we are happy to say, a third party, which counsels "mercy, and not sacrifice," and in whose eyes the delinquencies of the 39th are palliated by considerations drawn from the habits and religious prejudices of the Hindoo soldier. Dismissal from the profession for which they have shown themselves clearly disqualified, is urged by this party, as the maximum penalty which the exigencies of the case demand; and beyond this we are willing to believe our military authorities are not inclined to go. Before quitting this topic, we will quote a list of the several Moplah outbreaks that have occurred in the Malabar district within the last ten years, which may prove of interest to some of our readers. "In the year 1843, Mr. Connolly, the magistrate of the district since 1841, reported to Government that the first outbreak was in April, 1841; during the ten years and a half that have elapsed there have been seven. In the first (April, 1841), 9 Moplahs were killed; in the second, 12 Moplahs were killed; in the third, 8; in the fourth, 7; in the fifth, 15; in the sixth, 64; in the seventh, 19; total Moplahs killed in these affairs, 134; whilst they have inflicted on us a loss of 1 European and 3 native officers, 6 privates, and upwards of 15 sepoy, besides murdering some 50 or 60 of the Hindoo inhabitants. Surely, so vast an evil as this, the causes of a portion of a district being so saturated with the blood of our subjects and soldiers, demands that a most searching and open inquiry be made, that some new system should be introduced, some new governing power tried."—Athenæum, Oct. 13.

A Tellicherry correspondent mentions a circumstance in connection with the late Moplah outbreak, which we had not seen previously alluded to. It is that of an alleged outrage to the religious feelings of the Moplahs, offered by some of the neighbouring people, who are said to have slaughtered swine and suspended them, in or "at" the mosques of those Mahomedans. To this wanton aggravation our correspondent traces the rising, reflecting at the same time on the magistrate, for his failure to afford the Moplahs proper redress. If that be the true origin of the matter, or if such events took place at all, it is strange that no previous mention should have been made of the facts.—Spectator, Oct. 1.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE NEW COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF (who arrived on the 28th September) we are very sorry to hear, is in a delicate state of health, though, when it is recollected that Sir Richard Armstrong was an ensign fifty-five years since, it will not be wondered at that he should have felt somewhat severely the discomforts of a long sea-voyage. His nomination to the command of the coast army is a very neat compliment paid to it by the Home authorities. A duty which requires much exertion would not have been assigned to a veteran of seventy-three. It is evidently considered that little or nothing in the way of internal reforms is called for. The army is in that state of discipline, that a commander-in-chief who is forced by nature to take things easy, is likely to do just as well as a young, active-minded man. The rule does not succeed in the case of the head of the civil service, but there is no doubt of its applicability to the military department.—Athenæum, Oct. 2.

LIEUT. C. H. MIDDLETON, 8th Madras light cavalry, was under trial by court-martial at Saugor.

VACCINATION.—The Madras Official Gazette contains the general annual return of vaccination for 1850. From this we learn that, during the period under report, no fewer than 204,097 persons underwent the vaccine operation,—the numbers in 1847, 1848, and 1849 having been 159,024, 182,094, and 190,185; thus showing a large and steady increase in the numbers who have availed themselves of this invaluable blessing.

THE MADRAS BAR have had a meeting, and decided to practise in the Small Cause Court. The lowest fee is fixed at five pagodas, and the question as to the acceptance of briefs without the intervention of an attorney is left open for future consideration.

THE BISHOP OF MADRAS had returned to the presidency from his tour of inspection.

REPORTS OF JUDICIAL DECISIONS.—Orders have been sent to the various zillah judges throughout the Madras presidency, to forward for publication monthly reports of their decisions, after the fashion which prevails in the North-west.

THE BARRISTERS of H. M.'s Supreme Court at Madras will hereafter be admitted to practise as pleaders in the Sudder Court, subject to the rules and limitations framed for the guidance of the vakeels.

CROSSING THE LINE.—The Madras Spectator publishes a report of a case tried in the Madras Small Cause Court, before Sir W. Burton, which has settled the question as to the legality of the sport common on board ships in crossing the line. A passenger on board the True Briton brought an action against the captain for assault, on the plea that he had been lathered and ducked by the sailors, and the captain refused to assist him. The judge gave a decision for the plaintiff, with Rs. 100 damages. In another case of the same nature, damages were given against the commander to the extent of Rs. 300.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The LONDON MAIL of September 8th arrived at Bombay on the 5th ultimo (per Acar).

THE 5TH NIZAM'S CAVALRY.—Very unpleasant rumours have, as our readers are aware, been for some time past in circulation with reference to the bad spirit said to be prevalent in the 5th Nizam's Cavalry, now stationed at Aurungabad. Unfortunately, there appears to have been but too much truth in these reports; disaffection does seem to prevail to an alarming extent in the corps.—B. Times, Oct. 1.

THE RAILWAY very rapidly progresses, and for a good long distance is already completed. The natives look with much anxiety for the passage of the first train along the line. Some discussion has been carried on in the local papers regarding the advisability or otherwise of constructing bridges at Mazagon and Byculia, to carry the ordinary roads over the railway at those points. These structures, which would involve considerable expense, are understood to have been strongly objected to by the railway company; but although public opinion, as represented by the press, has likewise manifested itself very decidedly against them, it is feared that Government will, nevertheless, insist upon their erection. Government entertain a very erroneous notion of the nature of level crossings, and would have done well to have submitted, in such a matter, to the guidance of men of practical experience like the railway engineers.—Telegraph, Oct. 17.

A NATIVE MERCHANT ENNOBLED.—Ahmedabad letters inform us that, by the orders of the Government, a public meeting had been held for the investiture of Muggonbhoy Currumchund, a wealthy merchant there, with the title of "Row Bahadur." This gentleman is very benevolent. Lately he subscribed the sum of Rs. 20,000 to the funds of the female schools.—Ibid.

THE MALWA OPIUM for the season amounts to 20,000 chests, which will produce to Government a clear income of 90 lacs of rupees, or £900,000.

CAPTAIN NIXON.—The court martial on Captain E. M. Nixon, 6th N.I., has closed its proceedings, which have been forwarded to the C.-in-C.; a favourable result is not expected. The charges are three in number, for embezzlement and fraudulent misappropriation of moneys.

COAL AT MOCHA.—Our Aden correspondent mentions, that coal had been discovered in the vicinity of Mocha. The importance of such a discovery is very great, and should the statement prove correct, it is a proof of how little we know of the geological character of the countries bordering the Red Sea. Nearly all the attempts to penetrate into the interior of Arabia, have been failures owing to the character of its inhabitants; even as regards the vicinity of Aden, but little is known, and to this day we are ignorant of the nature of the country and people fifty miles inland from a place we have held since 1838.—Telegraph, Oct. 13.

SPIRIT OF THE SEPOYS.—A letter from Neemuch, dated 5th October, says: "A stop has been put to the murderous games that have been carried on for some time by the sepoys of the cavalry and infantry here. It appears that the officers of these regiments were afraid of the same affair occurring at this station as occurred some time back at Jaulnah, in the case of poor Lieut. Johnstone. The sepoys even tried to create a disturbance in the Uagah's camp. Pickets are placed all round the cavalry lines. The men are not allowed to pass out of the lines after seven p.m. Two patrols go by night through the bazaar. It seems clear that all this has occurred from want of proper bazaar authorities. A certain Parsee dressed in a little brief authority, instead of duly bringing every case before the bazaar master to decide, settles them himself at his own house. In fact, the manner in which he goes on is scandalous. The bazaar master is ignorant of all this."

LIEUT. BURTON, assistant to superintendent of canals in Scinde, has been granted a donation of Rs. 1,000 for proficiency in six native languages.

CAPTAIN NOURSE, of the ship Baron of Renfrew, having left his ship, in a boat manned by three of the apprentice boys, proceeded towards Mazagon. When a short distance off the shore, the boat was suddenly caught by a smart puff of wind, and immediately capsized. She sunk at once, nothing remaining above water but the upper part of her mast. One of the boys managed to get hold of this, and clung to it, and he was shortly afterwards picked up by a Jews' boat that was passing by. Captain Nourse and two of the boys (one of whom was the captain's brother) must have sunk immediately.

AN OFFICER at KOLAPORE has just been found guilty by a court of inquiry of the appropriation of very large sums of public money; the case will be brought before a court-martial almost immediately. There are unpleasant rumours of like proceedings on the part of officers of long standing and high rank nearer home. Very "dashing men" of limited incomes, and no means of lawfully improving them, can only maintain appearances by borrowing or doing worse: appearances need deceive no one who knows the practice of Indian house-keeping, and has Mal-laly's pay-tables at command.—Times, Oct. 16.

FURLOUGH REGULATIONS.—The proposed retirement of Col. Melvill to Europe is assumed by the discerners of the face of the political sky to augur favourably for the fate of the furlough regulations,—it being supposed that the shadow of the coming privilege of returning to England for a year without vacating a staff appointment, has already been distinguished by the discerning.—Ibid.

CEYLON.

The sittings of council have been for the present brought to a close by the serious illness of the acting Queen's advocate. The Governor now sojourns at Galle. His Excellency's measures of law reform have been warmly discussed, and it is pretty evident that the right of suitors to employ counsel must be ultimately conceded. The chief justice and many of the ablest and most experienced judges in the country have pronounced against the provision which would leave small land cases to the unassisted "common sense" of Ceylon commissioners of requests.

Lord Stanley and Mr. Stuart Wortley are likely to spend a vacation here. The heir of the house of Derby and supposed aspirant to the reversion of the Colonial Office is still in Ceylon, detained by the serious illness of his relative, Capt. Hornby. This delay has given Lord Stanley an opportunity of witnessing an oriental entertainment in the shape of a dinner given to his Excellency the Governor by the Tamil gentlemen of Colombo. The banquet was served in a temporary edifice erected amidst a grove of cocoanut-trees.

We regret to record the first murder of a European planter which has occurred since the pursuit of coffee-planting commenced in earnest here in 1836-7. The victim is a young gentleman only recently arrived, and, from the accounts which have reached us, it is evident that the murder was committed by native Singalese with a view to robbery; the temptation being a sum of money which Mr. Morgan, alone and unprotected, as it would appear, was carrying out from Kandy to the estate of his employer, Col. Braybrooke.—Colombo Obs. Oct. 15.

CHINA.

The LONDON MAIL of July 24th arrived at Hong-Kong on September the 10th (per Pekin).

The rebellion in the south of China has now been of such long duration, and the means of obtaining correct reports of its progress are so meagre, that we confess to being fairly tired at having to furnish, month after month, details of such a vague nature regarding it.

Governor-General Seu is now at Kou-chau-fu, in the south-west of the Kwang-tung province, from whence he has ordered out more troops, and a body of several hundreds of Tungkwang district men passed up the Canton river on the 20th inst., bound to Lo-ting-chau, about a degree and a half north of Kou-chau, and immediately on the borders of Kwang-si.

Kwei-lin-fu, the capital, the taking of which has been several times reported, is now supposed to be indeed in the possession of the rebels. We have a letter from a Kwang-si man, stating it as a fact that the place has fallen, and that Tien-teh is gathering forces together, with the view of falling on Fuh-san, a short distance from Canton, where Colonel Chesney and others were assaulted some years back; but the Canton merchants (the cry of wolf having been raised so many times without any apparent result) are much less fearful now than they were a year ago.

One supplement is filled with papers having reference to certain frightening placards that were posted about the walls at Shanghai, in which total extermination was threatened to the "hateful barbarians." The fears to which the appearance of these placards gave rise are now apparently subsiding, the last numbers of the North China Herald, and private letters, being silent on the matter.

The health of the troops in garrison is but indifferent. Yesterday the number of sick amounted to 127, viz., of the 59th regt. 93; of the Ceylon Rifles, 17, and of the Ordnance, 17; the prevailing disease among the Europeans being ague and bowel complaint.—Friend of China, Sept. 29.

AUSTRALIA.

The latest advices from Sydney state that all attempts to discourage a rush to the gold mines, lest it should disturb the relations of labour, had been ineffectual, and that a general avidity had manifested itself to share in the diggings, which are now said to be more productive than had been anticipated. In one hole, lumps of the metal had been found weighing 106 lbs., which had fetched 4,100l. A single lump of 50 lbs. had been picked up in another place. One man had obtained 2 lbs. of gold in one day; another had realized 80l. in a fortnight. A party of eleven had been for some time raising their 11 oz. per man per day. The consequence was, that the small shopkeepers at Sydney were selling off, with the view of proceeding to the district, and that mechanics and servants of all kinds were making similar arrangements. Sydney, therefore, had the prospect of being nearly deserted, and this condition of things would be likely to continue until the influx of emigrants from England and elsewhere should take place upon a large scale. The markets were glutted with all kinds of goods, since no one thought of encumbering himself with stocks of any article, and the neighbouring colonies, whence people were likewise preparing to depart, found their commerce equally deranged.

Notwithstanding the gold fever, the anti-convict movement was not neglected. At a public meeting at Sydney on the 29th of July, resolutions were passed referring to the recently published despatches of Earl Grey, together with his speech of the 5th of March, and agreeing that the time was come to petition the Queen to dismiss that nobleman, and to cause the pledges regarding the cessation of transportation to be fulfilled. The meeting also bound themselves to accept no settlement of the question other than the rescinding the order in council by which any part of Australia is made a place to which offenders may be transported.

PERSIA.

Our latest advices from Persia are of a melancholy nature. Cholera was making fearful havoc among the inhabitants of the villages along the shores of the gulf, and its progress was rapidly extending inland. The report of the death from that fell disease of the British agent at Bussorah, Mr. Busseigh, has, we regret to state, been confirmed. Upwards of 1,000 souls have died, it is said, in and near Bussorah from the cholera; and in Bussorah alone the disease has carried off one-fifteenth of the entire population. Among the deaths are the names of Mr. Constantine Malcolm, an Armenian physician of great repute in Persia, and whose name will be familiar to many of his profession at home.

The king of Persia, Nusseerodeen Shah, had paid a visit to Ispahan, with the object doubtless of arresting the turbulent and rebellious spirit which has been lately evinced by the people of that portion of his territories. Since the death of the late king, Futeh Ali Shah Kajar, that portion of the kingdom has been rendered very unquiet by a numerous, powerful, houseless, and turbulent band of marauders, termed Persian Looties, who have kept the country in a state of the greatest confusion. Owing to the very weak and ineffective state of the means provided by the Government for the suppression of robbery, and the protection of the rights of the people, these hordes have been allowed to commit the most flagrant outrages with impunity; and had become so impudent that the people had almost ceased to withstand them.—Bombay Telegraph, Oct. 19.

EGYPT.

ALEXANDRIA, NOV. 9.—The intelligence from Constantinople that the Sublime Porte had removed all opposition to the construction of a railway in Egypt has been confirmed, and, by a steamer which arrived on the 4th, the Viceroy received a firman from the Sultan signifying his approval of the contract his Highness had made with Mr. Robert Stephenson for that purpose. The engineers are all at present at Cairo, taking the surveys and preliminary measures to commence their work in earnest. The Alexandria detachment is expected down here to-morrow, and, on the arrival of Mr. Stephenson from Marseilles, the precise line the railway is to take through the country will be decided upon.

Mr. Tucker, the engineer sent out from Malta to make a report with regard to the conveyance to England of the obelisk, returned to Malta by the Vengeance, after having collected all the information he required. He has covered the obelisk up entirely from view, so as to preserve it from the injuries too often inflicted upon it by travellers and by the natives, who clipped off pieces for sale.—Times' Correspondent.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The intelligence, which is to the 23rd September, from Cape Town, is of a more unfavourable character than preceding accounts, the British troops having sustained severe losses, in two encounters with the Caffres, one in a patrol under Col. Mackinnon, and the other (in consequence of a panic of a party of the Fingoe Levy) under Lieut. col. Fordyce.

Col. Mackinnon's official report states that he marched from King William's Town on the 6th September, with 1,200 men, namely, 2nd Queen's, 395; 6th regiment, 419; Royal Marines, 52; 73rd regiment, 152; Cape Mounted Rifles, 33; Armstrong's Horse, 29; Catty's Rifles, 64; levies and guides, 103. He detached Lieut. col. Michel with a part of the force by Fort Williams, and proceeded himself by Line Drift. On the 7th the whole force met at Fort Williams, and on the 8th moved to Foonah's Kloof. During the march, the Caffres were seen to drive some cattle into a deep valley which leads down to the Fish River, and he made arrangements for attempting their capture the following morning.

On the 9th, leaving a sufficient force for the defence of the waggons, he detached Col. Michel, with the 6th regiment, Catty's riflemen, Armstrong's Horse, and 50 of the levy, to the right of the valley, and proceeded himself with two companies of the Queen's, the detachment of the 73rd regiment, and Cape Corps, to the left. He directed Commandant Davies, with 50 of the levy and the guides, supported by 200 of the Queen's under Capt. Oldham, to enter the valley and follow the traces of the cattle. He watched the progress of Commandant Davies and Capt. Oldham for some time, and saw them burn some huts at the upper part of the valley. Some firing took place, but it ceased, and the detachment entered the valley. Col. Mackinnon then proceeded along the high ground to the left of the valley, intending to gain a rising ground about two miles distant. He, however, soon perceived a large body of Caffres and Hottentots at some distance to his left, and moved to attack them. He extended the two companies of the Queen's in skirmishing order, keeping the 73rd in reserve. The Queen's engaged the enemy with great spirit, and drove him into a deep valley or kloof, which runs down towards the Fish River. As the enemy possessed a great advantage here in firing upwards at our men, he withdrew the Queen's from the edge of the kloof, and formed the 73rd in skirmishing order behind the scattered bushes at some distance from the kloof, retiring the Queen's through the intervals of the 73rd, to draw the enemy into more favourable ground. This manoeuvre was entirely successful. The enemy thought our men were retreating, came out, and suffered heavily. He then proceeded towards the rising ground, when, seeing nothing of the detachment, and hearing no firing, he concluded that Commandant Davies and Capt. Oldham had scoured the valley, and had effected their junction with Col. Michel.

The enemy now appeared again on their rear and flanks, apparently intending to oppose their progress towards the camp. They again drove them off. Capt. Tainton, with 180 Fingoes, now joined the force, which, up to this time, had had three privates of the Queen's wounded (two of them are since dead), and two privates of the Royal Marines and two of the 73rd wounded; eight privates of the Queen's were reported missing. The Cape Corps and Fingoes, with the captain of the company to which the missing men belonged, were sent to search the ground near the point where they had last been seen. The search was unsuccessful.

Col. Michel returned with his detachment, and reported having met with no opposition. He worked along the heights to the right of the valley (the route being circuitous), and after twice crossing the Fish River, entered the mouth of this valley. He effected a junction with the detachment under Capt. Oldham and Commandant Davies at a most critical moment. It appears that the enemy attacked the rear of this detachment soon after they entered the valley, and that they met another body of them in their front. The levies and guides outmarched the Queen's, and the latter got separated, Capt. Oldham with one company leaving the path down the valley and losing his road. He was surrounded by Caffres, was killed himself, and his men suffered severely. The loss of this detachment was 1 captain and 19 rank and file of the Queen's, and Quartermaster Ebdon and 2 rank and file of the levy, killed; 20 rank and file of the Queen's, and Commandant Davies, 1 sergeant and 1 private of the levy, and 2 Caffre guides, wounded. The opportune junction of Col. Michel's column enabled the detachment to bring away their wounded in safety.

On the 10th inst., Col. Mackinnon proceeded to Breakfast Vley for the purpose of co-operating with Lieut. col. Eyre, who was to have moved from Committee's that morning. He had, however, been diverted from his intended movement, and had made a night march by the Goga upon a hill to the left of the road between Breakfast Vley and Committee's, where he found a body of Caffres and Hottentots posted. He attacked them and routed them with considerable loss. Col. Eyre joined at Breakfast Vley with 300 of the 73rd regiment and 60 cavalry. Col. Mackinnon then moved to Fort Williams, sending the wounded to Fort Peddie. On the 11th, the troops rested, and procured some supplies from Fort Peddie. On the 12th, he returned to Foonah's Kloof, and made arrangements for again scouring the valley where the division suffered so severely on the 9th. On the 13th, he detached Col. Michel, with the 6th, Catty's Riflemen, and 100 of the Queen's, to the right, over the ground he before traversed. He sent Major Armstrong, with the cavalry, the levy, and 100 of the Queen's, to the rising ground on the left of the kloof, and proceeded himself with the 73rd, 100 of the Queen's, and the Fingoes, down the kloof. A drenching rain, or the large force displayed, deterred the enemy from any serious opposition. Our troops thoroughly scoured the kloof down the Fish River, and formed a junction with Col. Michel near the river. Down the kloof a number of dead Caffres were found, which confirms the account given by a Caffre prisoner, that the enemy suffered severely from the fire of Capt. Oldham's detachment. On the 14th he proceeded to Breakfast Vley, and on the 15th in the direction of Committee's, towards the point where Col. Eyre's combat of the 10th was fought. A body of Caffres and Hottentots were quickly routed by the 6th and 73rd regiments, with severe loss, but had one private of the 6th killed, and one of the same regiment wounded. On the 16th, sending the waggons under Col. Michel, with the 6th regiment, two companies of the Queen's, and Armstrong's Horse, round by Line Drift, Col. Mackinnon proceeded with the remainder of the division by the mouth of the Qalagha to the Tamaka, killing several Caffres. On the 17th he returned to King William's Town. The casualties during these operations, including Col. Eyre's loss on the 10th, were as follows:—2nd Queen's Royals.—Killed: Officer (Capt. Oldham), 1; sergeants, 4; rank and file, 19; wounded, 23; missing, 8 (2 since dead). 6th Royal Regt.—Killed, 1; wounded 1. Royal Marines.—Wounded, 2 (Lieut. Walters wounded severely). 73rd Regt.—Wounded: Officer (Ens. Thursby, severely), 1; rank and file, 5 (1 since dead). Cape Mounted Rifles.—Killed, 1. Wounded: Officer, 1 (Capt. Tekusch, severely). Armstrong's Horse.—Wounded: Officer, 1; sergeant, 1; rank and file, 2. (Quartermaster Ebdon, killed.) Levies and Guides.—Killed: Officer, 1; rank and file, 2. Wounded: Officer, 1; sergeant, 1; rank and file, 2. (Capt. Davies, wounded severely.) Total.—Killed: Officers, 2; sergeants, 4; rank and file, 23. Wounded: Officers, 4; sergeants, 2; rank and file, 35. Missing: Rank and file, 8.

Lieut. col. Eyre, in his report, states that he moved on the 9th September, with 300 73rd regiment, 75 Cape Mounted Rifles, and 25 Armstrong's Horse, from Trompeter's Drift to Fort Peddie, and being there joined by 100 Fingoes, under Capt. Rae, proceeded to the Goga, where, soon after daylight on the 10th, the enemy showed himself, but not in force. He therefore moved on; on observing which, the enemy came forward with great boldness, and in considerable numbers, shouting and evidently challenging a combat. The Hottentot rebels, fifty in number, were drawn up in two ranks, like regular troops; the Caffres were in considerable force, and advantageously posted. They were drawn up in various groups on the brow of a hill, with a valley and dense bush in front, between the enemy and us. Round the head of this valley, and to the British left, was a connecting ridge, over which several paths led through an open bush which was perfectly practicable to all arms. Col. Eyre directed Major Armstrong to make a dash with his mounted force to seize this ground, thence to threaten the enemy's right flank, and to cut him off from a deep kloof, into which he would probably endeavour to escape. With the three companies of the 73rd and the Fingoes, Col. Eyre moved at once through the bush to attack the enemy in front, who made but a feeble resistance, evidently siding off to attack the Cape Mounted Rifles and Armstrong's Horse, as they attempted to cross the head of the valley on the left. Major Armstrong dismounted his men, and, in skirmishing order, held the ground with great spirit. As the main force of the enemy was evidently there, Col. Eyre halted and moved to Major Armstrong's support, whom he found warmly engaged with the enemy, who lay scattered and concealed within a few yards' distance behind a thick bush. On reaching the ground, Col. Eyre immediately extended the grenadiers of the 73rd, who, led on by Capt. Bewes, gallantly dashed into the bush under a sharp fire, driving the enemy and pursuing him down to the bottom of the kloof, and burning or destroying his huts in the bush. The enemy made several attempts to steal on our flanks, but were driven off on each occasion. After repulsing the enemy, and silencing his fire, Col. Eyre retired from the position, and marched unmolested to Breakfast Vley, where he joined the patrol under Col. Mackinnon.

In his General Orders, Sir H. Smith observes:—"These operations have been well carried out, and the enemy has been driven from his holds with great loss upon his part, while that of her Majesty's troops has been severe, especially in the column under Capt. Oldham and Commandant Davies. The experience of the latter officer, and his unvaried gallantry in the bush, were much relied on, and the support he would receive from Capt. Oldham and the renowned 'Queen's' equally so. The operations of war are always eventful, especially so in the bush, where an excess of boldness is occasionally as detrimental as over-caution. In this instance, the ability and wily nature of the enemy were not adequately estimated, and the conspicuous gallantry and dash of the column occasioned it considerable loss; nor, however, without the infliction of severe punishment on the enemy in the conflict. Capt. Oldham fell as becomes a soldier; the fame of valiant deeds ever outlives the man, and posterity will class Capt. Oldham among British heroes, as well as those soldiers of his grenadiers who shared his fall. Nor will the gallantry and fall of Quartermaster Edden, of the levies, be forgotten."

In the other case, the enemy having, from his fastnesses in the Kroome River forests, displayed increasing daring, by sending out marauding parties, in the absence of Gen. Somerset in Albany, it became necessary to check his depredations by attacking him in his strongholds. Lieut. col. Fordyce accordingly collected all the force at his command, and marched on the 7th September from his camp, at Riet Fontein, to assail the enemy.

His report states that his force consisted of detachments of 245 men 74th Highlanders, 28 Cape Mounted Rifles, 13 European levy, and 327 native troops, including 212 Fingoes, and, being joined by Lieut. col. Sutton, from Fort Beaufort, with 32 Cape Rifles and Fingoes, he had 550 infantry, and 103 mounted men. On reaching the scene of operations at the Kroome Bush, it was found that the Caffres had withdrawn to the Water Kloof, Fuller's Hoek, and Blinkwater valleys; that it would be impossible to succeed in any attempt upon the Water Kloof without a much larger force; but that, by moving to the eastern summit of the Kroome range, there was open and safe ground, where a descent might be made at night down either the Fuller's Hoek or Blinkwater Valley. They accordingly, next day, ascended by a very steep and difficult path a ridge which brought them to the summit of the Kroome—an open, undulating plain of irregular shape, crossed by gentle ridges and valleys, surrounded by dense bush. From this plain the various kloofs of the Kroome descend on two of its sides, and the Water Kloof from another of its sides. The Fuller's Hoek descends in a direction opposite to the Water Kloof, also from an open plain, separated from the other by a belt of bush a mile distant, and about three-quarters of a mile broad, which could be crossed only by a narrow rocky pass. Large numbers of Caffres on foot, and some on horseback, were observed collecting about this bush, with the apparent intention of disputing the passage. Col. Fordyce, thinking that to attempt such a passage by night would be unwarrantable, determined not to attempt it, but to continue his march after dark, and descend the Kroome by the pass at the west end of the range. Meanwhile, he desired that the men should rest and refresh themselves in a hollow, posting strong pickets on the surrounding ridges. An alarm was given that the Caffres were approaching. They came in swarms, rushing upon the position from every point of the head of the Water Kloof, but chiefly from the belt of bush which crossed the open ground. Col. Fordyce formed the infantry in extended order behind a ridge—three companies of the 74th on the right, with their right flank directed upon the pass by which they had ascended; the Kat River levy on the left of the 74th; then the Fingoes, and on their left the remaining company of the 74th, with the left thrown back, thus forming a nearly semi-circular line of skirmishers—the mounted men under Col. Sutton remaining in the hollow in rear, ready either to support or attack. There were probably nearly 2,000 of the enemy on the open ground. They came on with the speed of greyhounds, and as soon as they got within range, commenced firing, which they kept up without much intermission. This was returned with interest by our men, who, being well covered by the ground, could fire deliberately, without exposing themselves. Observing that the greater body of the enemy appeared to be brought upon his right, along the Kroome Bush, with the probable intention of cutting them off from the pass by which they had ascended, he caused the whole line to take ground to the right, and requested Col. Sutton to dash out upon the enemy. This he did, and opened a fire upon their flank with excellent effect. After a skirmish of about twenty-five minutes, the enemy withdrew to the bush. Their apparently formidable attack was thus completely repulsed, with scarcely any loss on our side—the 74th had not a man injured; three Fingoes were killed, and one or two wounded. It was thus open to Col. Fordyce to remain until night, as he had intended; but, considering that their ammunition had been nearly half expended, and that the Caffres were now thoroughly roused, and could easily line all the passages by which it was possible to descend the Kroome, he requested Col. Sutton to proceed at once to secure the head of the path by which he proposed to march. This service, effectually performed, appeared to have anticipated a similar movement made towards the same point by a body of between 200 and 300 mounted Caffres, who were observed moving round their left flank. Macomo was among these mounted men. The descending path at this pass is very narrow, allowing only two or three men to pass abreast. It runs along the right side of a deep ravine, lined on both sides with dense bush, and is about a mile and a half in length. The enemy were in possession of the bush, and kept up a fire upon the troops as they marched along the path, but with little effect, until the rear of the 74th had passed the middle of the line. At this time, while the movement was proceeding with perfect regularity,—the mounted men being in front, followed by the 74th detachment,—the Fort Beaufort Fingoe levy, which was in rear, appeared to be suddenly panic-stricken by the sight of some Caffres who lined the bush. They rushed down the path in a confused mass, shrieking and firing their guns in all directions, until, by their mere weight, they so crowded up the two rear companies of the 74th, that the men were rendered helpless, and could neither return the fire of the enemy with any steadiness, nor use their arms until they cleared the bush at the bottom of the pass. The Caffres, seeing their advantage, rushed from the bush, shooting and stabbing many of our men while thus disabled; all of the eight men of the 74th who fell, and all, except one, of the nine men wounded, fell or received their wounds between this part of the pass and the bottom of the hill. These casualties must, therefore, be chiefly, if not entirely, attributed to the misconduct and bad discipline of the Fingoe levy. Capt. Verity, who commanded the levy, exerted himself to the utmost to restore order, and to keep his men to their duty; and while they were skirmishing in the open plain, and not in immediate contact with the Caffres, no men could behave better. The Caffres continued their attack, and kept up their fire occasionally until the bush was cleared, but scarcely showed themselves beyond it. Their loss, he says, must have been very great.

Private accounts state that many extraordinary instances of personal valour and strength occurred in the 74th, while fighting hand to hand, as the lurking natives now and then dared to emerge from the concealment of the bush.

It is said that the Hottentots employed fierce dogs, which pulled down several of our men, and rendered them an easy prey to the clubs of their enemies.

Our troops are being collected. The Lancers and Rifles had arrived, and proceeded to the frontier. A simultaneous withdrawal of the Caffres from the advanced hiding-places indicated a concentration of their forces for some fresh effort. Some apprehensions had been entertained at Graham's Town of an attack to be made upon that place, as soon as 5,000 natives should assemble in the neighbourhood. A wounded deserter gave the information, and that nearly half the required force had been collected. The inhabitants had, in consequence, marshalled themselves into a provisional guard.

Col. Eyre had been directed to occupy an important station midway between Graham's Town and the Fish River.

The next movement of the troops, it was expected, would be to throw supplies into Forts White and Cox, by which time the arrival of the Rifles and Lancers might be expected, enabling the Commander-in-Chief to commence operations upon a more extended scale.

Some apprehension is expressed for Mount Coke and Fort Murray, Seyolo hovering in their vicinity, and seeming to threaten an attack upon one or other of those points. Other reports say that the design of this chief is to attack Fort Peddie.

"It appears," says the G. T. Journal, "that there are now assembled within the colony two numerous and powerful encampments of the enemy, together about 6,000 strong,—one at the Kaga, under Macomo, the other near Committee's Post, under the chiefs Seyolo and Stock. With each of these the colonial forces have within the last fortnight measured their strength, and in both instances have been very severely handled, and retired without having gained any decisive advantage. To say that the foe is emboldened by being thus enabled to hold his chosen positions, is an undeniable suggestion, whilst to presume that some deep plot against the lives and properties of the colonists is now meditating, is equally admissible."

A vine-growing association is forming at Adelaide, after the example of that in New South Wales, the object being the collection and circulation of information as to the cultivation of the vine, and the manufacture of its produce, the soil and climate being favourable.

The Madras Government have announced that they are prepared to reward liberally any party who may produce the best machine for pulling punkahs,—the reward to be given after trial of the machine.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—In the last number of the Edinburgh Review, there appeared a learned and ingenious dissertation, under the usual form of an essay, taking Professor Bopp's "Comparative Grammar" for its text.

Being zealously, but with due humility, devoted to the cause of Persian literature, my attention was forcibly drawn to the disclosure of the writer's ideas,—as they appear in the following extract,—on a point whereon irreconcilable differences of opinion exist:—"The language of the Zendavesta, most intimately connected with the language of the Veda, the inscriptions of Cyrus, Darius, and Xerxes, and the Pazend, or pure Persian, spoken under the Sassanian dynasty, the grand epic of Firdusi, and the language now spoken in the country, exhibit a complete biography of the Persian tongue."

The great differences of opinion, to which I refer, turn upon the agitated question, whether the Zend is a genuine or fictitious language?

Passing over the singular blunder of the reviewer, in calling Pazend "pure Persian," spoken under the Sassanian or any other dynasty, when, as the name itself implies, it is nothing more than the language, Persian or other, written in explanation below the Zend text, I proceed to inquire what may be the reason and authority for the Zendavesta being placed at the top of a biographical sketch of the language of Persia.

Sir Wm. Jones, it is well known, was the first to discover and announce the fact of the co-existence of an abundance of Sanskrit and Zend cognate words and terms, and of their grammatical relations. But as the remote antiquity of the Sanskrit is never doubted, it does not, therefore, follow that this language was the parent of the Zend, in any other sense than furnishing the materials, it constituted the framework on which the Zend was fabricated, to appear in writings, but never to be the spoken language of any human being.

All our knowledge of Zend is confined to and derived from the contents of three or four books produced by the Parsees, and by them affirmed to be the writings of their prophet, Zartosht, or Zoroaster, a sage of whom neither the epoch when he flourished, nor the fact of his existence itself, has yet been determined. The copies extant of these writings are of no antiquity. They profess to propound, together with an absurd cosmogony, the doctrines, rules, and observances of a polytheistical worship, and the Vendidad, the chief work, instead of making good its pretensions for acceptance as the revelations of divine intelligence, from beginning to end, in style and substance, only exhibits, under Dr. Wilson's unsparing exposure, a human composition utterly despicable.

The opinions of Richardson and Sir Wm. Jones, adverse to the acknowledgment of the Zend to a place among genuine languages, have long been known to Oriental scholars, and were entirely concurred in by that sound and able philologist, the late General Vans Kennedy. From his valuable work on the "Origin and Affinity of the Principal Languages of Asia and Europe," I will content myself with quoting a short passage, strongly recommending chap. xi. (on the Persian language) to the careful notice of every student of the history of languages, for a masterly array of facts, and lucid deduction of argument, in support of the opinions he holds on this curious question: "But the sole authority on which the authenticity of the Zend and Pahlvi books depend, is the traditions of the Parsis. Before, however, these traditions can be admitted as testimony, it must be satisfactorily proved that the Zendavesta and its Pahlvi translation actually existed at the time of the Arabian conquest, and that they have been carefully preserved until the present day by the Parsis of Persia and India. But no such proof has ever been adduced, nor has it been yet established that the Parsis of either country possess any well-authenticated traditions, which ascend uninterruptedly up to that event. On the contrary, the silence of Tabari and Firdausi respecting them is a strong presumption that they were not invented at the time when these writers lived, though those respecting Zartosht seem to have been well known to Muhammad Amir Khwand, who lived about 450 years after the latter." Tabari died A.D. 923; Firdausi, A.D. 1025, and Amir Khwand, A.D. 1497. "If, therefore, no proof can be adduced to establish the authenticity and antiquity of the Parsi books, it necessarily follows that they cannot be received as evidence of the existence and antiquity of the languages named Zend and Pahlvi."—pp. 168, et seq.

On the other side, I produce Colonel Rawlinson, who, in a memorandum written at Bombay, in 1840, and given in "Wilson on the Parsi Religion" (p. 402), thus expresses his opinion on the Zend: "It has been asserted by some of our most distinguished British orientalists, that the language in which the sacred writings of the Parsis is composed is a fabrication of the Zoroastrian priests subsequent to their expatriation from Persia, and that these writings, in consequence, are, as far as regards antiquity, entitled to no consideration whatever. Against this assertion I offer the following remark. In various parts of Persia are to be found, at the present day, inscriptions in a character which we denominate cuneiform, exhibiting historical records of the sixth and fifth centuries before Christ, written in three different languages. The inscriptions in the simple literal cuneiform character invariably occupy the most distinguished place of the three upon the tablets, and exhibit other points of evidence to indicate that the language in which they are written must have been the native and vernacular dialect of the sovereigns by whose order they were engraved. To the analysis of these characters, and the examination of this language, I have devoted many years of research; and I can now safely assert, that the Persian language of the ages of Cyrus and Darius is unquestionably the parent of that tongue which we call the Zend, and which has been so successfully elaborated by continental students, and by none with greater skill and perspicuity than Mons. Burnouf, in his admirable Commentaire sur l'Yçna. I am merely desirous, on the grounds I have mentioned, to record my conviction that the Parsi writings were imported from Persia in their present state during the seventh century of Christ, and are thus entitled to the same degree of consideration among the Parsis of the present day, which they enjoyed among their ancestors at the period of expatriation."

I now turn to the learned doctor himself. "Whether or not," he says, at p. 406 of his book, "the Parsi priests in India, from their traditional reminiscences of the ancient languages, could have fabricated some of the Zend writings, I shall not positively assert. There is a poverty in the expression of some of these writings, particularly of the minor liturgical pieces, which shows that their authors had no ready command of the language in which they wrote. There is an approach to Gujarati idiom in some instances, and to a Gujarati corruption of Sanskrit, which at one time awakened considerable suspicions in my mind. Viewing the matter of the Zend language, however, in its general aspect, I have no hesitation in declaring that none of the exiled and depressed Parsi priests in India can be supposed to have had the ability to invent that language, with its extensive grammatical forms, and with its abundant and regular analogies to the Sanskrit, Persian, Greek, Latin, and Germanic languages, as so distinctly evinced by Bopp and Burnouf."

It is to be regretted that Dr. Wilson, remembering Kennedy's filiation of languages from "Babylonian or Sanskrit," to the exclusion of Persian, did not abide by and work out his first impressions, whence the framers of the Zend drew their materials. His reasons for abandoning his earliest view of the subject, with some weight, are still unsatisfactory.

Coming at last to the labours of Professor Bopp and M. Burnouf, I readily agree in the praise awarded to their untiring industry, research, and ingenuity; but I venture to ask, what facts, in the history of the language upon which so much time has been expended, have they established? It will have been seen that Colonel Rawlinson, inverting the order assigned by Anquetil du Perron for the succession of the ancient Persian languages, places Persian before Zend, and makes the former the parent, the latter her offspring. Now, here is a point, in the history of these languages, uncleared up by the labours of the two learned gentlemen whose works we are considering. It would have been information, indeed, could they have pointed to, and told us from some authentic record the time when, the country where and the people by whom the Zend was spoken and written; but nothing of the kind is attempted.

In a word, I am compelled to conclude that, in the language of the Zendavesta, there is no vital principle. It has not been shown that, at any time and in any place, this language was found as the interpreter of thought and volition in the mouth of man, woman, or child. A sort of galvanic vitality, only through the approximation of Sanskrit cognates and grammar, seems to struggle for a semblance of life. The industry to effect so much has been great, and the process commendable for its ingenuity, but, as concerns historical notice of Zend, nothing more.

I shall here introduce, in the words of the reviewer, an instance of a most ingenious application of the Sanskrit rules for the permutation of letters, exhibiting the stumbling of an attempt (there may be many such) to make out similarity between words which really have no relationship: "Professor Bopp identifies the Bengali bohini, 'sister,' with the Sanskrit svastī. This reminds us of the old etymology of 'fox,' which was aloplex, loplex, pex, pax, pox, fox. The fact is, that the Bengali bohini, 'sister,' is simply the Sanskrit bhāgini, 'sister.'"

"Comparative Philology" may, like "Comparative Anatomy," have quite as much value as is claimed for it. But as spurious bones or muscles would be certainly rejected by the last, so the reception by the first of specimens of language, unauthenticated by testimony of their ever having been used in human speech, should, surely, be as carefully avoided. These essentials must not be taken for granted. The forgeries of the author of the Desatir, and of the language of * Formosa by George P'salmanazar, are instances of what may be effected by bold and unscrupulous invention.

The discovery of truth being the end and object of this inquiry, it is penned in no controversial spirit. Yet it may be as well to remark, that there is a species of criticism at whose assault the Persian poet thus warns us not to "throw away the shield."

"Han! ta sipur n'uf-gunee uzh umlu-e-fuseeh,
K'ora jooz een moobalugh-i-moostizar neest,
Deen wurz o mazrifut, ki sookhun dan shujuzgo,
Burdur silah darud, wu kus dur hisar neest."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

WEDNESDAY, November 19, 1851.

"A VAST demagogical conspiracy is now organizing in France and Europe: secret societies are endeavouring to extend their ramifications: they have agreed to meet in 1852, not to construct, but to overthrow." This terrifying announcement was made by no less a personage than the President of the French Republic, in his Message to the National Assembly, on the 4th November. From his position, and with his means of information, Prince Louis Napoleon is likely to be well-instructed in respect to the designs and movements of the revolutionary agents, whose existence and whose activity are notorious.

But this is not the only warning. Some months ago, the Voix du Proscrit, a journal published in London by M. Ledru-Rollin and his party, emitted the following prediction: "1852 verra la suppression définitive et générale des trônes." The writer of the article adds, in terms which furnish a measure of his religious opinions, "the sovereign people, like the Son of Man, has prophesied his own resurrection—1852 will witness his ascension."

We seem, then, to be on the eve of another general political convulsion. The tranquil year of the Exhibition is to be succeeded by a year of turbulence and discord. The Ormuzd and the Ahriman, the two antagonistical principles which divide the politicians of Europe, are again to engage in a struggle for the mastery. Democracy is once more to attack the monarchies of the Old World, and endeavour to assimilate the basis of its theory of government to that of the New World, where, saving in the swarthy empire of Soulouque, and in the "kingdom of Mosquito," republicanism is dominant. Louis Kossuth, in his recent reply to an address of the foreign "Republicans, Revolutionists, and Socialists," resident in London, is reported to have said: "I am convinced that there is nothing possible henceforth in Europe but the Republic, based on universal suffrage, with the principle of the solidarity of peoples and the independence of nations." Sympathetic tokens of the future heaving of the surges are not absolutely wanting even in India. The East-Indians of Madras, we are told, are about to get up a public meeting "to improve the political condition of the inhabitants of India,"* the means to that end being, according to the "accredited organ" of that class, a "popular government," an open council, a right to share in the legislation, a control over the finances, free admission to all offices and appointments, &c. &c.

Absolving, however, the East-Indians of Madras from a suspicion of having formed a compact with the Ledru-Rollins, the Louis Blancs, and the Proudhons of Europe, it is impossible to resist the conviction, founded upon a variety of concurrent evidence, that certain parties are secretly sowing pretty widely the seeds of democratic doctrines in the chief European states, and endeavouring to combine their forces for the purpose of overthrowing their established governments; calculating that from the United States of America they shall receive, not merely sympathy, but covert, if not open, succour. That these agitators have been busily at work in this country, no one can doubt who is aware of the extent to which cheap publications, of a socialist, communist, and revolutionary character, are disseminated amongst the working classes, and of the avidity with which they are read. The Times, more than two months ago,† called the public attention forcibly to the "amount of evil-teaching actively going on, quite enough to startle, if not alarm, the most firm-minded man amongst us."

"Systems (it continues) the most destructive of the peace, the happiness, and the virtue of society, are boldly, perseveringly, and without let or hindrance, openly taught and recommended to the acceptance of the people, with great zeal, if not with great ability. Cheap publications, containing the wildest and most anarchical doctrines, are scattered broadcast over the land, in which religion and morality are perverted and scoffed at, and every rule of conduct which experience has sanctioned, and on which the very existence of society depends, openly assailed, while in their place are sought to be established doctrines as outrageous as the maddest ravings of furious insanity,—as wicked as the most devilish spirit could by possibility have devised. Murder is openly advocated,—all property is declared to be robbery,—the rules by which marriage is declared sacred and inviolate are treated as the dreams of dotage,—obedience of every description is denounced as a criminal cowardice,—law, as at present constituted, is asserted to be a mere device for enslaving mankind,—and morality is described as an efficient auxiliary to law for the same mischievous purpose."

The last Quarterly Review, in an article upon "Revolutionary Literature," has given some extracts from these abominable publications, and the Reviewer observes: "Let us not flatter ourselves that, while committees of foreigners, congregating in London, are agitating and disturbing to their inmost recesses all the nations of the continent, the same sort of intrigue and influence is not working, both directly and by contagion, on our own population. The fact is notorious and indubitable."

The evils attending an eruption of the nature not obscurely indicated by the President of the French Republic, and openly menaced by the Proscrits, are not simply the disorganization of authority and the bloodshed which follow the development of a revolutionary spirit; nor the chances of its success, which, after the experience of the last three years, are not very promising; but also the motive with which any insurrectionary movement would inspire the absolute governments of Europe to put their formidable military resources into action, and the weight of public opinion which it would unhappily throw into the scale of arbitrary power. On the first outbreak of demagogic resistance to constituted authority, the military states of Germany would unite their forces with those of the autocrat of the North.

This is no vague speculation of timorous or slavish minds; the intentions of the German governments in this matter are all but avowed. The Preussische Zeitung, of November 2nd, in an article (believed to be of an official character) on the affairs of France, published before the President's Message, has the following significant passage:—

"The cry for aid, if raised by an endangered society, wherever it may be threatened, reaches hundreds of thousands of bayonets in a few minutes through the wires of the telegraph. In a few days the railroads could transport armies to the threatened point. A social revolution itself, should it break out in France, will burn out in its own crater. The territory of misfortune will be respected, but it will be prevented from extending."

The plain meaning of this paragraph is, that the appearance of a "social revolution" in any continental state would be the signal for the assemblage of large armies, not, indeed, avowedly to invade the "territory of misfortune," but to keep down insurrection in other states. It is no very bold assertion, that such an armament would be regarded by liberal governments, in America as well as Europe, as a declaration of war against constitutional principles, the effect of which would be to convince the most obstinate of the anti-war party how illusory is their theory. Mr. Sturge and the extreme peace partisans, apparently foreseeing this result, have issued an address, in which they warn their friends against giving way to "the impulses of generous emotion," which would lead them to overthrow the power of the oppressor by a resort to brute force, instead of "ideas," which have proved "mightier than swords." But we doubt whether Mr. Cobden himself would not consider war in defence of constitutional principles just and commendable. In the address presented to M. Kosuth at Copenhagen House is the following passage:—

"We desire that it may be recorded, that, had our wishes received Government aid, the intervention of Russia would not have been met alone by protests upon paper, but, upon the field of action, by the force of British arms. Our regret for the past is mingled with humiliation for the futility of our desires, but it is alleviated by our hopes and our resolves for the future."

Forewarned, however, is to be forearmed. The continental governments, as well as our own, have had timely notice of the machinations of the demagogues, who are the real enemies of liberty, and they have doubtless taken measures to counteract them. The convulsions of 1848 really strengthened the continental sovereigns, by revealing the sources of danger, and conciliating in their favour the friends of order; and they are not likely to neglect a lesson of dearly-bought experience. ¹

Let us not be ranked, on account of these reflections, amongst the advocates or apologists of arbitrary government. We rejoice to think that the foundations of despotic rule are becoming weaker every day, through the sure though silent operation of causes that are checked by the sudden outbursts of demagogism. The improvements which European society is continually undergoing, by the rapid interchange of thought between nations, by the progress of inquiry, by the diffusion of sounder views respecting the science of government, and above all by the potent influence of the Press, will render the stern enforcement of autocratic power in time as impracticable as it will be unnecessary, and all its harsh incidents will disappear of their own accord. Constitutional principles will be found to be the safest for the ruler as well as the best for the ruled. But the change must be slow and gentle. Attempts to precipitate tend to retard its advent. When the entire framework of a society is sought to be broken up, in order to reconstruct it upon a better model, some alarm may reasonably be felt lest the skill and the unity of purpose should be wanting which are essential to such reconstruction. The danger of beginning experiments in government is well illustrated by a saying of Robespierre, that a man never goes so far as when he sets out without knowing where he is going. There is no mutual affinity in the political elements which disposes them, when disunited, to combine again; and this makes reflecting men backward in supporting what are termed organic changes. Centuries may elapse before France, having been thoroughly revolutionized, and having tried during sixty years every phase of rule, shall settle down into a stable government.

Meanwhile, let us hope that England may still be permitted to enjoy internal peace,—peace in that sense which is idiomatically expressed in the Oriental salutation, "Peace be with you!"—that is, not merely tranquillity, but health, plenty, and social happiness.

WE have before us a Circular (an abstract of which, copied from a Calcutta journal, appeared in our last issue), entitled, "The case of the Family of the late P. M. Wynch, Esq., B.C.S.," the allegations contained in which deserve prominent notice; they are of a nature to awaken sentiments of pity and indignation,—pity for the innocent sufferers, and indignation towards the authors of their ruin. The allegations are, indeed, ex-parte, and, therefore, subject to the deductions usually made from averments without proof; but as the aim of the Circular is to explain the causes which have reduced Mrs. Wynch to the painful necessity of appealing to public benevolence, not to inculpate individuals, its mistakes, if any, cannot be suspected of having a malicious origin. Their substance is as follows:—

Mr. Paul Marriott Wynch had been in the civil service of the East-India Company for twenty-two years, when, in 1833, severe illness compelled him to quit India and relinquish the service. Heavy losses, through the failure of the East-India firms, disabled him from making a provision by annuity for his family, and, having ceased to contribute to the Fund, he forfeited his claim to a pension from that source. At his death, in 1841, he left £9,300, invested in Government securities at Calcutta, in trust for his wife and children. Of this fund, Sir Thomas Turton, as Ecclesiastical Registrar of the Supreme Court, took possession, without apprizing Mrs. Wynch, who, after much delay, sought the friendly interposition of Sir John Peter Grant (a judge of that Court), by whose means, it would appear, the money was rescued from the clutches of the Registrar, though, as it has happened, it would have been better for Mrs. Wynch if Sir Thomas had retained and dissipated it. In 1844, Sir William Casement, one of the trustees, died, when Sir J. P. Grant, it is stated, proposed to Mrs. Wynch that he and his son, Mr. W. P. Grant, should be appointed trustees in his stead. She consented to this proposal, expressing at the same time her determination that the money should remain invested in Government paper. Contrary to this direction, however, Sir John Grant and his son, it is alleged, "removed the whole of the property from the

4 and 5 per cent. Government loans, and stated that they had purchased eighty shares in the Union Bank of Calcutta, of which Mr. W. P. Grant was a director." Mrs. Wynch immediately desired that the money should be reinvested in the Government loan, and, her directions being unheeded, she placed the matter in the hands of her solicitor.

Up to this point, the transaction is bad enough. What follows makes it a great deal worse. Two months after this, the Union Bank failed, and it appeared that no shares in that deplorable concern had ever been purchased in Mrs. Wynch's name! No part of the money, we are told, has been recovered. Sir J. P. Grant is dead, and died insolvent. Mr. W. P. Grant is alive, but he, too, has become insolvent, having been removed from his office of Master in Equity in the Supreme Court for misconduct as a director of the Bank in which Mrs. Wynch's shares were not purchased. This lady, who does not appear to have been guilty of any laches or want of due vigilance in this affair, has thus lost £9,300—nearly her all, a pittance of about £50 a year only remaining wherewith to support herself and two children.

The Circular, as before observed, having for its sole object the exposure of the destitute condition of the family, does not afford the information necessary in order to fix the fraud,—for fraud it must have been, if the allegations are true,—conclusively upon the guilty parties. We are not told whether other trustees besides Sir Wm. Casement were appointed by Mr. Wynch, and if so, who they were. It is not stated at what date Sir John Grant and his son "removed the whole property from the Government loans,"—by which we understand that they converted it into money, or exchanged it into some other security. The Circular is silent as to any call made upon the Grants to say what became of the property, as it was not invested in shares of the Union Bank,—a concern to which Mr. W. P. Grant, though a director, was, according to Chief Justice Peel,* deeply indebted, a great part of the debt being unsecured, and of the condition of which concern he, with his co-directors, in the two half-yearly reports of January and July, 1847, put forth statements, the same authority tells us, "of a deceptive character." If any call was made upon them, we are left in ignorance of their reply,—whether they admitted or denied the receipt of the money, and, in the former event, whether they gave any other account of its appropriation than that they had purchased eighty shares in the Union Bank, a statement which is alleged to have been untrue. The inference to which the allegations in the Circular seem to lead is, that Mr. Justice Grant got the property out of the hands of Sir Thomas Turton, and that he or his son, or both, put it into their pockets, falsely telling the poor widow that they had invested it in Union Bank shares. But this would be a fraud of so base and odious a character, that strong evidence would be required to fix it upon any individual whose character is not absolutely worthless. Still, there is the fact, that the money has disappeared, and that Mrs. Wynch, having lost, as she says, "every hope of obtaining redress or compensation against or from Mr. W. P. Grant," is compelled to cast herself upon public charity.

We leave the case in this state for the present.

In consequence of the gold discoveries in New South Wales, a line of American steamers from Central America to Sydney is likely to be formed at an early period.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—I observe in your last number that, in your recent account of the late Moplah affair, on the western coast of India, you refer to a short history of the Moplahs, which I put forward when in India, immediately after the unfortunate mishap of Capt. Watt and his party. Having been on detachment duty some time on the spot, between two outbreaks, I had an opportunity, in some measure, of studying the character of these people, and I embodied my views of them in the letter to which you refer. Not having with me a copy of that letter, I am obliged to trust to memory; but I perfectly remember stating that half measures would never do when coping with these infuriated fanatics; an example is what is required, and I am surprised that in this late affair a more experienced officer than an ensign was not sent to cope with them. The Madras sepoys have, wherever employed, proved themselves worthy of confidence, and it is a farce to attribute cowardice to them in the case under consideration. I can speak say from experience: when on duty at this very place, Malliappooram, in a conversation I once had with one of the native officers, he distinctly told me that there was a feeling prevalent amongst the sepoys that these fanatics were not men, but demons, who had devoted themselves to death, and were possessed in consequence. During my stay amongst them, there was no occasion for the sepoys being called out; had there been, I am satisfied that it would have been the most prudent step first to dispossess the minds of the men of the idea that these foes were otherwise than men, like themselves. I think it unfortunate that, after past experience, the European detachment which was stationed near this spot should have been withdrawn. The native soldier, we all know, is reckless of life, and consequently as brave as he should be; but, in a case of this kind, when superstition acts upon his fears, he is hardly a responsible agent; at any rate, he should not have been left to bear the brunt of his own dark forebodings alone. Confidence should have been established, and that could easily have been done by the presence of a few Europeans from the neighbouring station of Cannanore.

Your obedient servant,

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—A competent knowledge of the Hindoostanee language by civil and military officials has been always and justly deemed an essential condition of the prosperous administration of British India; the importance of such knowledge has been urged by the ablest men who have written and spoken upon Indian affairs, and indeed it is so evident that it is needless further to insist upon it: it is more essential to indicate the fact that little attention is accorded by our Indian Government to so weighty a subject, and that the rules laid down by that Government with respect to it are inefficient, and based upon error.

I observe by your Indian Mail of September 19th, that the Governor-General of India, in a General Order, dated 7th July, after stating, that "having had under consideration the system pursued in the periodical examination of military officers in native languages, by station committees, and being of opinion that it is open to objection, with a view to insure a more uniform and satisfactory test of proficiency, directs that the examinations shall hereafter be conducted under the following rules:—Examining committees will be assembled annually on the 10th of January and 10th of July, at the several stations of the army, as at present, and will be composed, when practicable, of one officer of the civil service, and of two or more military officers. The committees will meet and conduct the examination as at present, but, instead of passing an opinion as to the qualifications of the candidate, they are to transmit their proceedings, which are to be fully recorded, together with the translations, exercises, written questions and answers, and their opinion on the manner in which the candidate has passed the vidua voce examination, to the secretary of the College of Fort William, to be laid before the college examiners, by whom the decision on the candidate's proficiency will be pronounced. In transmitting their proceedings, committees are to make up each candidate's papers separately, designating them by a figure, or some distinctive mark, and not by his name."

This order sounds well, until we come to dissect it. Its value, of course, depends upon the composition of the examining committees. These, it appears, are to consist of Englishmen. Now the question is—are these English gentlemen fully capable of examining? Have they themselves undergone an examination equivalent to that now prescribed by his Lordship?

* Judgment, 6th June, 1848. Mail, No. 106, p. 486.

No. I conscientiously assure you, Mr. Editor, that I never in my life met, either in India or England, with an Englishman who could correctly read, write, or speak any of the languages current in India, or who was able to decipher a common Persian letter, or to compose half a page of Oordoo or Hindoostanee without making gross mistakes both in idiom and orthography.

A broad distinction must be made between the philological researches of a few learned professors, and the colloquial proficiency, correct pronunciation, and idiomatic fluency essential to intercourse with the less educated classes of the various Indian races. I recollect several incidents strongly illustrating the necessity of such a distinction. At Benares, a very few years ago, an English officer who had passed college for high proficiency in the native languages, and obtained medals, &c., having been appointed interpreter on a court of requests, was hardly able to understand or translate what the bunneah (grocer) of his regiment said, and an old major, a member of the court, had to do the duty instead of him. I have frequently attended the general parades in India, where a General Order, or sentence of some court-martial, was to be read, and the sepoys were assembled to be made acquainted with it. Although the translation had been before-hand revised by the regimental moonshee, and put in such plain language as would be perfectly intelligible to the sepoys; yet, owing to the bad pronunciation of the interpreter of the corps, they did not understand a word of it, and I have heard them say to each other,—" Saheb ne girja kya," a slang expression commonly used by servants and others, and signifying "the gentleman said his prayers."

Some years ago, an English gentleman in civil employ, in the Cis-Sutlej states, asked the defendant in a cause, "Have you any witnesses?" The defendant replied that he had none except Khooda and Russool (i.e. God and the Prophet). The Englishman took a note of this, and desired him to attend the court the next day, when his witnesses should have been summoned by the nazir. The next morning the defendant made his appearance, and the gentleman desired the nazir to take the evidence of his witnesses. "Khoodawund" (my lord!), said the nazir, "he has got no witnesses." At this the Englishman became angry, and taxed the nazir with deceiving him, producing the paper on which he had noted down "Khooda" and "Russool." The nazir, who had learned a little English at a missionary school, explained the error of the Englishman, who, noways abashed, laughed at his own blunder, and replied, in Hindoostanee, at least as bad as the nazir's broken English, "Gultee kya (instead of ghultee hooee), "I have made a mistake." A more glaring one could certainly hardly have been committed, the words Khooda and Russool being of such extremely common use.

I could multiply instances of this kind, which are of daily occurrence in India, were I not fearful of trespassing too much on your space, and desirous rather to indicate what appears to me an easy and natural remedy for the evil, than to adduce further examples of it.

The remedy that suggests itself to me is the following. Let no aspirant for a commission in the Honourable East-India Company's service receive it until he has passed in England an examination precisely similar to that passed "up country" in India, by ensigns and lieutenants, when candidates for the post of interpreter. Let no candidate for civil employment obtain it until he has undergone the yet more rigid examination passed by officers at the Fort William College. To the medical department the importance of a thorough knowledge of the language is immense. I could tell you many a tale, strange and lamentable, but strictly true, of grievous mischief, and even mortality, attributable to an imperfect understanding between young surgeons and their patients. I would suggest also the appointment of one or two well-educated moonshees as assistant teachers at the Colleges of Haileybury and Addiscombe, under the professors of those establishments. The examinations I advocate might perhaps detain the student a year longer at college; but it would be a year well employed, both for his own good and for that of the service. The delay, too, might tend to diminish the number of mishaps and scandals attributable to the very tender age at which some young gentlemen are sent out in India.

We read in the Bombay Telegraph of the 1st September, "It seems somewhat strange that the resident at Baroda should have been imposed on by false translations of the Settanee's petitions; was he not acquainted with the language in which the petitions were written?" This was a case in which a misappropriation of Rs. 60,000 had occurred. How is it that the kutcheries and courts in India are infested with dishonest umlahs, corrupt serishtadars and nazirs, who, to my certain knowledge, never allow a single cause to be decided (unless the parties concerned be English, or conversant with the English language), until they have received their hukue, literally their "right," but the true meaning of which is "bribe?" In consideration of a bribe, the izhar-nuvees (or deposition-taker) will frequently construe the questions and answers so as utterly to misrepresent their true purport. In short, endless confusion, trouble, and injustice are occasioned in Hindoostan by European deficiency in the language. Inquire of the natives at almost any station as to an English official's knowledge of Hindoostanee, "Saheb does not understand," will be the invariable and truthful reply. Europeans who have witnessed examinations at the Indian-English college will doubtless remember to have there seen young native boys able to read, write, and speak English as well as Englishmen, a fact easily proved by reference to the annual report of the examining committee. Meanwhile, the rulers of the country, those on whom depends the stability of the British sway in India, and to whom are confided the interests and welfare of the immense population of that magnificent dependency, are deficient in the language of the land they are appointed,—each in his own post and degree,—to govern and improve.

A knowledge of Latin and Greek is considered an indispensable part of the education of an English gentleman's son. Now that the vast extent of the Anglo-Indian empire annually absorbs so many young Englishmen, either for the civil or military services, might it not be proper and advantageous to include a living language, spoken by many millions of British subjects, as an equally necessary complement of a liberal education? Why should not Persian or Hindoostanee have its class at every school, as well as Greek or German? I say nothing of Arabic and Sanscrit, for, independently of their great difficulty, and of the long time necessary to attain anything like a perfect knowledge of them, they are falling into disuse in India. Few native gentlemen now instruct their sons in either. Even the pundits do not think it worth while to teach their children Sanscrit, preferring Persian or English. On the beauty and elegance of the Persian and Oordoo languages it is unnecessary for me here to expatiate.

I must crave your indulgence and that of your readers for this desultory and imperfect glance at a subject of paramount importance. I make no pretence to treat, in the comprehensive and detailed manner it deserves, a subject well deserving the utmost efforts of far more skilful pens than that of,

Sir, yours obediently,

London, Nov. 1851.

A MAHOMEDAN MOONSHEE.

THE RAILROAD IN EGYPT.

The following is the evidence given by Mr. R. Stephenson, M.P., before the Select Committee on Steam Communications with India, &c., on the subject of the railroad in Egypt:—

"I went to Egypt last October, not with the intention of investigating the question of a railway across the Isthmus; but when I arrived there, Mr. Waine, the consul at Cairo, called upon me to say that his highness the Pacha had heard of my being there, and wished to have a conference with me with reference to the railway from Alexandria to Cairo. I waited on his highness; he put a great many questions respecting the feasibility of making a railway from Alexandria to Cairo. He was particularly careful to guard against the impression in the first instance that he wished the railway made to Suez; as I afterwards learned, the reason of that was, that the French interests are very much opposed to the establishment of a railway across the Isthmus, believing, rightly or wrongly I do not know, that it is much better for France and all the countries lying on the Mediterranean to have a canal instead of a railway, in order to make the Mediterranean the high road to India both for passengers and for commercial purposes; therefore they have for a long time been endeavouring to establish the feasibility of making a canal across the Isthmus. What the French had done with reference to the canal was this: M. Lenon, the engineer to the Pacha, is a Frenchman, and has been resident in that country since the French were in Egypt in 1799. The expedition of that year reported that the difference of level between the Red Sea and the Mediterranean was about thirty-three feet; and as the intervening country was very level, and gradually, as they supposed, falling towards the Mediterranean or the port of Pelusium, which was their object at that time (which is on the east of the Delta, and occupies a position very much like Alexandria on the west, excepting that Alexandria is a very good port and Pelusium is a very bad one), Lenon wrote some five or six years ago to a friend of his in France, with whom I was intimately acquainted, wishing him to revive the project, or to commence a project for establishing a water communication, which he said he felt convinced was easily attainable, between Suez and Pelusium. M. Tullabot, the gentleman I allude to, wrote to me on the subject, and wished me to join him and an Austrian engineer, named Nigrelli, in investigating it; and we sent a staff out. We united and spent a good deal of money over it, I think as much as £4,000, in investigating the feasibility of this project; for, upon the showing of the report of the savans of 1799, I was certainly very much inclined to believe that water communication might be established between the Red Sea and the Mediterranean on account of this difference of level. Lenon's idea was to open a canal through the Desert, which was not very sandy; and I do not think there would be any difficulty with reference to the sand; I think we might keep the canal open; the difference of level would have given a constant current from the Red Sea into the Mediterranean of about three and a half miles an hour, without any locks at all; that was the advantage to be derived from having a constant fall. In that case, there would have been a sort of Bosphorus between the Red Sea and the Mediterranean, as there is between the Black Sea and the Mediterranean. This idea I certainly was very much enamoured with at the time; but, however, the result turned out to be, after we had spent this money in investigating it, that, instead of there being about thirty-three feet difference of level, there was no difference at all, and therefore the whole thing fell to the ground, at least in my mind. I must state, however, that the French engineer still thinks that a canal communication might be established, not, however, without the introduction of very large locks, inasmuch as the utility of any water communication there must be dependent upon the facility of sending through very large vessels; the question of small vessels would be of no importance at all. Therefore, after being on the ground, and after having walked over a great part of the Isthmus from Alexandria to Suez, I was satisfied that a canal would be enormously expensive, and I believe, inasmuch as there would be no current, it could not be kept open; consequently, my opinion is, that you could not maintain a canal, and that it is useless to attempt it. The question, therefore, resolves itself into a railway, and I told the Pacha what I am now telling the Committee, that I was certainly, after having seen the spot, decidedly against a canal, and would not recommend any one to go into the matter. After I left Egypt, I heard from the Hon. Charles Murray. I had a communication from him, in fact, which amounted to a decided intimation, or authority rather, on the part of the Pacha to me, to commence the railway immediately; that I was to enter into contracts and proceed at once with it.

"How do you propose to carry that line?—To commence from the harbour of Alexandria, an extremely fine harbour, though it is sometimes difficult to make it in thick hazy weather; but the harbour itself, when you are in it, is the most perfect thing imaginable. I propose making a jetty in it, alongside of which the steamers may lie, and the passengers will be transferred at once on to the rail. The first project was for a railway from Alexandria to Suez, almost direct, which, however, I found would be an injudicious course to pursue, for it would have to cross the Nile, where it was very wide indeed, and would have to cross the three branches of the Nile, both the Rosetta, the Damietta, and Pelusiac branches; and independently of that, an enormous number of small bridges would be required to carry the line over a great number of canals, which are used for navigation throughout the Delta. I therefore proposed a line to proceed almost direct from Alexandria to Cairo, up the west side of the Delta, which is perfectly level; you require nothing but a ditch to be cut on each side, or to make a small embankment of about three or four feet in height; with that exception there is nothing required to be done; the canals there are very few in number, and these few are very small in width. I estimated that a single line, with a few miles of double line in the middle, may be executed, I am quite sure, under £6,000 a mile. The construction of the embankments and the bridges would be done by the fellahs, and the ironwork and the superstructure will be sent from England.

"How many miles will that line be?—The distance from Alexandria to Cairo is 140 miles; from Cairo to Suez, if his Highness decides on going on, which I have no doubt he will do afterwards, but at present the arrangement is only meant to apply between Alexandria and Cairo; you leave the Delta, and from Cairo it becomes a question; but I think it is pretty well decided whether you should take the direct line across the desert, by the Indian mail line, or by the old canal of Sesostris, which passes round the end of the promontory, over which the old road passes. My own opinion is, that there would be no such difficulty in pursuing the direct course as to render the other, although easier of execution, and an absolute level when finished, the more desirable; I still think it would be preferable to take the short route, which will be about 70 miles.

"Making in all 210 miles?—The direct route from Alexandria to Suez, I do not know precisely what distance it would be, but I imagine about 50 miles shorter. But as Cairo contains at present upwards of, I think, 200,000 souls, and Alexandria about 70,000 or 80,000, I should deem a railway communication between those two places, as regards Egypt alone, without reference to the Indian mails, a very important step.

"Does the first of the plan from Alexandria to Cairo contemplate the completion of it as far as the bridging of the Nile at Cairo goes?—No, the construction of that bridge across the Nile is a very difficult operation; they have almost brought to completion one of the most remarkable engineering works of modern times,—that is, the barrage across the Nile. The Nile below Cairo divides into two branches, the Damietta and Rosetta, and at that point they have almost completed a bridge; it may be called a bridge, with small arches and sluices, which is intended to shut the Nile up at that point to make a cascade over, or to allow it to pass over the dam; they propose to raise it, I think, about eight or nine metres, that will be about twenty-six feet above low Nile; that will enable them to irrigate the whole of the Delta during the whole year; at present, the land may be said to be unproductive about three months after the Nile begins to fall; then it becomes exceedingly difficult and expensive to raise water by manual labour, and therefore they produce as much in three months as they consume in the twelve. By raising the level of the Nile at that point, they will be enabled to throw water throughout the Delta during the whole year, so as to carry on agricultural operations throughout, almost without interruption, because at all seasons the land there would produce.

"Have you formed any opinion as to the time which would elapse or be necessary to make the line round by Alexandria to Cairo?—I have engaged to complete it in two years or two and a half if they will construct the embankments; employing their own labour, in about ten or twelve months.

"How is the money to be advanced; by the government or by the Pacha?—By the Pacha.

"I think you said the French interest was hostile to a line between Alexandria and Suez; was it also hostile to a line between Alexandria and Cairo?—Quite so.

"Do you think the French interests would be sufficiently powerful to deter the Pacha from completing the line from Cairo to Suez?—I think not. The barrage being nearly completed, and a very great engineering difficulty having been overcome very successfully by Mussoul Bey, the French engineer, I propose to make use of that barrage as a railway bridge; it is perfect in every respect for that purpose; perhaps it would not have been placed precisely in that position if it had been placed for merely railway purposes, but being there, and having cost about between half a million and £600,000, I propose to make use of it, and to save the enormous expense of another bridge for the railway.

"How will it affect the railway, with reference to its position?—The barrage is about eleven or twelve miles below Cairo, where the river divides into two branches.

"Having passed the barrage, is there any difficulty in getting to Cairo on the other side?—Not the least.

"What is the highest level you have to make on the line from Alexandria to Cairo?—From Alexandria to Cairo it is as smooth as this table.

"From Cairo to Suez?—From Cairo to Suez the elevation of the ridge is about 960 feet; it attains its highest level at about the Number 12 Station, which is about six or seven miles probably from Suez; the ascent up there would be about 60 or 70 feet in a mile.

"With regard to the proposal of Pelusium and the canal, would it be possible at any moderate expense to make a harbour there?—I believe impossible; we had a very elaborate survey made of it, and the water does not maintain a depth even at high water of above six feet for about five miles out, therefore excepting you could get a scour by this difference of level, you never could scour the mud away, because all the mud of the Delta, by the current existing in the Mediterranean, is swept away from the Alexandrian side to the east.

"Would there be any great difficulty in providing facilities for shipping and unshipping goods at Suez?—None whatever; I examined the western coast of the Red Sea for two days down at Suez; the water is very shallow, and the vessels are obliged to lie about three miles off Suez; there is Res Ataka on the west side of the Red Sea, where you might get deep water, and I think the railway could be carried up almost to the jetty, which would be similar to the one I propose at Alexandria, but not at Suez.

"I suppose you anticipate a very considerable traffic in merchandize if the railway were completed?—Very considerable."

THE WAR IN CAFFRARIA.

On the 11th November, a public meeting, called by the Peace and the Aborigines Protection Societies, "to investigate the causes of, and to consider a remedy for, the deplorable war now prevailing in South Africa, and the best means to obviate the recurrence of such a calamity," was held at the London Tavern, and was very numerously attended. Mr. Samuel Gurney presided, and opened the proceedings, observing that, in the war now raging in the Cape Colony, there had been an awful infringement of the principles of both these societies.

Various speakers addressed the meeting, which adopted the following resolutions:—

"That this meeting deeply laments the war which is now being waged in South Africa, not only as entailing a vast expenditure of the national funds, as inflicting heavy calamities on our colonial fellow-subjects, and threatening the aboriginal population with ultimate destruction, but especially as being dishonourable to us as a civilized people, and derogatory to our character as Christians; and this meeting would express its conviction that the present deplorable conflict may be regarded as the direct result of a long-continued system of aggression on our part upon the native tribes of the country, and of our utter disregard of their natural rights, aggravated by our unceasing endeavour to undermine and destroy the influence of their chiefs.

"That this meeting, firmly believing that in our intercourse with barbarous tribes, as with civilized nations, the adoption of strict justice as the basis of our measures can be neither impolitic nor practically ineffective, and that at the present critical juncture an intimation on our part of a desire for peace, conjointly with the establishment of an open inquiry on the spot, under the presidency of impartial and independent civil commissioners, specially appointed, would tend to allay animosity and probably cause an immediate suspension of hostilities, would respectfully press this suggestion upon the attention of her Majesty's Ministers, earnestly recommending that our future relations with the Caffres be regulated in conformity with the conciliatory and humane principles sanctioned in 1835 by the most competent authorities, and subsequently vindicated in their application by several years of encouraging experience.

"That this meeting recommends the committees of the Peace and Aborigines Protection Societies to prepare a memorial to her Majesty's Ministers, earnestly requesting their attention to the preceding resolutions."

In connection with this subject, we extract from the Times the following remarks, in which, keen and trenchant as they are, there is too much truth:—"Never was there a more striking illustration of our mischievous system of colonial rule. Lord Grey has, so far as England has been concerned, had full license to do as he pleased. He has indulged without let or hindrance in every croquet that his fancy has suggested. He has exhibited every phase of his variable temper with respect to the unhappy colonists, and has finished by considering them generally as his personal enemies. Because he could not make the colonists acquiesce without a murmur in all he proposed, his sensitive dignity deemed itself insulted, and he consequently insulted in return, and oppressed the helpless objects of his petulance and anger. In no instance in our colonial history can the misfortunes which have occurred be more directly and fairly traced to the conduct of the Colonial Secretary than in the case of the Cape Colony. The present disastrous condition of affairs there is the legitimate consequence of Lord Grey's conduct. To his mischievous meddling the outbreak of the Caffres is solely attributable. The unprepared state of the colony is the result of his policy. The discontent of the colonists was produced by his ill temper and unwarrantable conduct. From the first moment of his colonial rule he has in every colony resisted to the utmost every attempt on the part of the colonists to manage their own affairs, and in South Africa he has been especially successful in giving efficiency to this the cardinal principle of his policy. He has compelled the colonists to submit to enforced inaction; but, while thus retaining them in the leading-strings of the Colonial Office, he has not failed to keep alive in them feelings of bitter indignation. He has thus rendered it impossible to employ them usefully in the defence of the colony, while he has left untouched every mischievous power they possessed."

Next year, 1852, Russia will celebrate throughout the vast expanse of her empire the completion of her thousandth year of national existence, which will be kept with all the solemnity due to the importance of the event. The Russian empire was founded in 852, in which year the Russians, or Rossians, probably of Scandinavian origin, made their first appearance on the shores of the Bosphorus, as Warangiens.—Morning Post.

LAW.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, Nov. 14.

Englis v. the East India Company.—This was a special case for the opinion of the court. The question was, whether the plaintiff was entitled to recover 1,075*l*, the amount claimed as arrears of salary due from the Company during his absence for twenty-seven months in England by reason of illness. The question depended upon the construction of a deed of indenture dated 6th of November, 1840, into which the plaintiff had entered with the Company, who covenanted to retain him in their service for five years as an engineer in their establishment at Bombay, and to pay him a salary at the rate of Rs. 400 a month. The deed contained a covenant that the plaintiff should not absent himself from the Company's service without the certificate of their medical officer, and leave obtained; and it provided that, if the engagement should be continued beyond the five years, it should be upon the terms contained in the deed. The covenant upon which the present question turned was, that the Company would retain the plaintiff in their service for five years from the day of his arrival in Bombay, if the plaintiff should so long live, and be able to perform and should actually perform such service; and, upon the like condition, and not otherwise, would pay to the plaintiff, for so long time as he should be actually in their service, a salary of Rs. 400 per month, to commence on the plaintiff's arrival at Bombay, and to cease on the day of his quitting or being dismissed from the service, or on the day of his death. The evidence given at the trial showed that the plaintiff arrived at Bombay on the 15th April, 1841, and remained there for more than five years, down to the 15th February, 1848. He then obtained the leave of the Company to absent himself for six months, and went to Aden for the benefit of his health; and subsequently obtained further leave and arrived in England in June, 1848. On his arrival in England, he applied for and obtained an allowance from the Company, to the extent of 120*l*. per annum, being one-fourth of his salary. Matters continued in this state during the rest of the year 1848, and until the month of December, 1849, when the Company's medical officer certified that the plaintiff was not in a fit state to return to India. Upon that, on the 11th February, 1850, the secretary of the Company wrote to the plaintiff, saying, that, as he could not return to India, the Company must dispense with his services altogether. The plaintiff then demanded the full amount of his salary during the two years he was absent (from his service by illness, as well as the 12 months' notice, or the further sum of one year's salary in lieu thereof. The claim was resisted by the Company, and the plaintiff brought the present action to enforce his demand. At the trial it was agreed, that the facts, deed, &c. should be turned into a special case.

Mr. Humfrey, Q.C., now contended that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. The company having given him leave of absence, he must be regarded as still in their service, and entitled to his salary.

Mr. Justice Wightman said the covenant was to retain the plaintiff for five years from his arrival at Bombay, "if he should so long live, and shall actually perform such service."

Mr. Humfrey said, the plaintiff's salary was to commence on his arrival at Bombay, and to cease on his quitting or being dismissed from the service. Now it was admitted that the plaintiff was still in the Company's service during the period now in question.

Lord Campbell said, a lamentable misfortune had befallen the plaintiff, but he had been treated by the Company with great kindness and forbearance. They had given him leave of absence, and allowed him one-fourth of his salary. That allowance he had received for a long time, but now he said he was not contented with one-fourth, and demanded the full amount of his salary. The deed, however, did not contain an absolute covenant to pay the full salary; it was a conditional covenant, that if he should be able, and should actually perform his service, he should be paid his full salary. He (Lord Campbell) regretted that the present action had been brought, as he feared it would have the effect of preventing the Company from showing similar indulgence to others.

The other judges expressing similar opinions, a nonsuit was ordered to be entered.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE INDIAN NAVY.—On the 5th inst., a Court of Directors was held at the East-India House, when Capt. Sir Henry J. Leeke, R.N., was appointed Superintendent of the Indian Navy.

FOURTH ORDINARY MEMBER OF THE SUPREME COUNCIL OF INDIA.—Mr. N. Senior, it is said, has been nominated to this office, vacant by the death of Mr. J. E. D. Bethune.

A CORRESPONDENCE has passed between Lieut. Tyler, R.E., on behalf of the Executive Committee of the Great Exhibition, and the Court of Directors of the East-India Company, with reference to the collection of specimens in process of formation under the authority of the Royal Commission. The Court of Directors intimate that Dr. Royle has received instructions from them to meet the wishes of the Commissioners to the utmost practicable extent.—Times.

BANK OF CEYLON.—A special general meeting of the shareholders of the Bank of Ceylon was held on the 6th inst., when the following resolution was agreed to. The proceedings were entirely pro forma, the business of the establishment having become incorporated with that of the Oriental Bank, and no liabilities being due to the public:—"Resolved unanimously, That the affairs of the Bank be forthwith wound up, and that thereupon the company be dissolved, and that the Court of Directors do take all necessary measures for that purpose."

AN AMERICAN COMMISSIONER is appointed to proceed to China, by the government of the United States.

NEW PROFESSORSHIPS AT SYDNEY.—The Vice-Chancellor of the University of Cambridge has been requested to make it known that the authorities of the University of Sydney and of Sydney College, New South Wales, propose to appoint three professors, viz. a classical professor, who is to be ex officio principal of the College; a mathematical professor, and a professor of chemistry and experimental philosophy, with salaries respectively of 600*l.*, 500*l.*, and 300*l.* a year, and an additional allowance to each of 100*l.* a year until proper residences can be provided. The salaries of these professors to commence from the day of their landing in the colony.

FURTHER SEARCH FOR SIR J. FRANKLIN.—Lieut. Pim, R.N. (employed in the expedition of the Herald and Plover), has laid before the Geographical Society a plan for a further search for Sir John Franklin and his companions. His opinion is, that they are to be sought, not on the coast of America, but that of Asia, and he had proposed to the Admiralty to travel, with a companion and servant, by way of St. Petersburg, Moscow, Tobolsk, Irkutsk, and Jakoutz, to the mouth of the Kolyma, and thence explore the coast of Siberia, east and west. The Admiralty had declined to adopt the proposal, but had granted him unlimited absence. He intended, therefore, with 500*l.* given by Lady Franklin, to proceed to St. Petersburg, and invoke the aid of the Emperor of Russia. Supposing that the negotiation with the Court of Russia terminated favourably, his track would lead from St. Petersburg to Moscow by railway; from Moscow to Irkutsk, by Teligi, on sledges, a distance of 3,544 miles; and from Irkutsk to Jakoutz, also on sledges, 1,824 miles; the whole journey occupying about four months. At Jakoutz all regular travelling conveniences terminated, and the 1,200 miles to the river Kolyma, as well as the 2,000 miles of search, would have to be performed in a manner best adapted to the resources of the country.

LIEUT. COL. R. H. WYNTARD, C.B., commanding the troops in New Zealand, is appointed lieutenant-governor of the province of New Ulster in that colony.—Observer.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 14th of May, 1851, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.
20		£1,000	£19 6 8	£10 12 8
30	On or before	1,000	24 8 4	13 8 7
40	14th of May,	1,000	31 10 0	17 6 6
50		1,000	42 15 0	23 10 3
60	1846.	1,000	66 11 8	36 12 5

* * The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assurers to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.—Under the provisions of an Act of Parliament, this Company now offers to future insurers FOUR-FIFTHS of the PROFITS, with QUINQUENNIAL DIVISION, or a LOW RATE of PREMIUM without participation of profits.

The divisions of profits will be declared in June, 1855, when all participating policies which shall have subsisted at least one year at Christmas, 1854, will be allowed to share in the profits.

At the several past divisions of profits made by this Company, the reversionary bonuses added to the policies from one-half the profits, amounted, on an average of the different ages, to about one per cent. per annum on the sums insured, and the total bonuses added at the four a-pennial divisions exceeded 770,000*l*.

FOREIGN RISKS.—The extra premiums required for the East and West Indies, the British Colonies, and the northern parts of the United States of America, have been materially reduced.

INVALID LIVES.—Persons who are not in such sound health as would enable them to insure their lives at the tabular premiums, may have their lives insured at extra premiums.

LOANS granted on Life Policies to the extent of their values, provided such policies shall have been effected a sufficient time to have attained in each case a value not under 50*l*.

ASSIGNMENTS OF POLICIES.—Written notices of, received and registered.

HER MAJESTY'S PUBLISHERS.

MESSRS. ROBERT COCKS and CO.'S NEW SUCCESSFUL PUBLICATIONS.

RECOLLECTIONS OF WALES.—Welsh Airs elegantly arranged by Brinley Richards. No. 1. Poor Mary Anne. No. 2. The Ash Grove. No. 3. The Rising of the Lark. No. 4. March of the Men of Harlech (to be continued). "In the arrangement of the Welsh Melodies, it is universally acknowledged that Mr. Brinley Richards has far excelled all his competitors, doubtless from the fact of his being a native of Wales, and consequently imbued with the spirit of its music."

Also, by the same composer, "The Angel's Song." 2s.; "The Sturm March Galop." 3s.; "The Vision." 2s.; "Far from all I love," adapted from Kücken's admired Canonet, 2s. "The Student's Practice," a collection of composition of a moderate degree of difficulty, intended as an introduction to "The Classical Pianist," a selection of movements from the works of the great masters; both works in books at various prices.

THE BEST PIANO METHOD.—Twenty-fourth edition, only 4s.—HAMILTON'S MODERN INSTRUCTIONS for the PIANO-FORTE. Fingered by Charles Czerny. "A work which has already passed through more than a score of editions needs, we think, little beyond a mere reference to the fact stated in its commendation. This unbounded popularity at once demonstrates that, in the opinions of those most competent to judge, it is unapproachably superior to any other extant. That, in short, the instructions are communicated with a clearness and simplicity, and the gradations from the simple to the more complex styles of music are effected with an ease that no teacher who values the pleasure of the pupil in the study, or his rapid advancement in it, should fail to take Mr. Hamilton's work as his text-book." Large music folio.—Vide "Caledonian Mercury," Oct. 16.

MUSIC.—There is not any other house in Europe who can offer such a list of valuable publications as the Messrs. ROBERT COCKS and Co., Burlington Street, London. The house has for many years taken the lead in musical publications, and everything they publish is selected with the greatest taste and judgment, and at once commands an extensive popularity. The stock of engraved music plates in the possession of this house, we have authority for saying, is unequalled by any other publisher. The extensive catalogues of Messrs. COCKS contain an endless variety of music fitted to every degree of proficiency of students and amateurs. These catalogues may be had gratis, and postage free.—Vide "Isle of Man Times."

MERCHANTS, SHIPPERS, &c., are respectfully invited to inspect the warehouses of Messrs. R. COCKS and Co., 6, New Burlington Street, London, where will be found an excellent stock of superior PIANO-FORTES, from 22 guineas upwards, manufactured by them for all climates. Their Musical Publications, likewise, will be found to exceed, in excellence and number, those of any other house in Europe.—Catalogues of instruments and music to be had gratis, and postage free, on application. N.B.—Piano-fortes carefully packed in cases lined with zinc.

COCOA is a nut which, besides farinaceous substance, contains a bland oil. The oil in this nut has one advantage, which is, that it is less liable than any other oil to rancidity. Possessing these two nutritive substances, Cocoa becomes a most valuable article of diet, more particularly if, by mechanical or other means, the farinaceous substance can be so perfectly incorporated with the oil, that the one will prevent the other from separating. Such an union is presented in the Cocoa prepared by JAMES EPPS, and thus, while the delightful flavour, in part dependent upon the oil, is retained, the whole preparation will agree with the most delicate stomach.—1s. 6d. per lb.

CHOCOLATE.—Those who require a very light beverage, will find the prepared chocolate adapted to their particular taste: it is thinner and more highly flavoured than the Cocoa, possessing more the advantages of Tea and Coffee.—2s. 6d. per lb.

Prepared by JAMES EPPS, Homœopathic Chemist, 119, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, and 82, Old Broad Street, City.

HINDUSTANI WORKS BY JOHN SHAKESPEAR, Esq.NEW EDITION, with GREAT ADDITIONS.

This Day is published, the 4th Edition, in 1 vol. 4to. price £5. 5s. in boards, SHAKESPEAR'S HINDUSTANI and ENGLISH DICTIONARY, GREATLY ENLARGED: to which is added, a DICTIONARY, ENGLISH and HINDUSTANI, ENTIRELY NEW.

To the First Part of this Dictionary, the author has, by laborious study of Hindustani works, both printed and manuscript, made the most extensive additions. In the Hindustani and English Part, the Hindustani words are printed in their proper characters, together with the pronunciation in Roman letters. The Derivatives, which are traced from the Sanskrit, Arabic, Hebrew, Persian, and Greek, are given respectively in the character peculiar to each of those languages.

In the Second Part, English and Hindustani, is ENTIRELY NEW. It comprises the most common English words, and also numerous usual phrases, with the fittest corresponding translations into Hindustani.

REVIEW IN "TIMES," Jan. 3.—"Much attention has been paid to the collecting of scientific terms, especially botanical ones, as well as to the correct rendering them into the technology of Europe." "The Hindustani and English Part of it now contains upwards of 53,000 words and phrases explained, being 7,000 more than in the last edition, and 11,000 more than in any other Dictionary of the like description now extant." "In India, as well as in Europe, the character of this work has long been fully established, and the present edition will greatly enhance its reputation."

INTERESTING FACT.—The following singular and authentic case of restoration of the human hair is worthy of observation, more particularly as it relates to an article of high and universal repute during the last half century. Mr. H. Herrmann, of Queen Street, Soho, had been quite bald for some time past, and had tried various preparations for the recovery of his hair, but without any beneficial result. He was then induced to try the effects of "Rowland's Macassar Oil," and after daily applying it for about two months, he, much to his gratification, had his hair quite restored, and now possesses a beautiful head of hair. This fact speaks too strongly for itself to require comment.—Bell's Weekly Messenger.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL is celebrated throughout the world for its genial and nourishing qualities for the Human Hair. For Children it is especially recommended, as forming the basis of a Beautiful Head of Hair.—Price 3s. 6d. and 7s., family bottle (equal to four small) 10s. 6d., and double that size 21s. per bottle.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for improving and beautifying the Skin and Complexion, eradicating all cutaneous eruptions, sunburn, freckles, and discolorations, and for rendering the Skin soft, clear, and fair.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, for preserving and beautifying the Teeth, strengthening the Gums, and for rendering the Breath sweet and pure.—Price 2s. 9d. per box.

Beware of SPURIOUS IMITATIONS.—The only genuine of each bears the name of ROWLANDS, preceding that of the article, on the wrapper or label, with their signature at the foot, in red ink, thus—A. ROWLAND & SONS. Sold by their agent at 20, Hatton Garden, London; and by chemists and perfumers.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

AN AGED MAN CURED BY THEM OF A COMPLAINT IN HIS STOMACH, AND SHORTNESS OF BREATH.—I desire to bear testimony to the good effect of Holloway's Pills. For many years I was afflicted with a tightness in the stomach, accompanied by shortness of breath, that prevented me from walking about. I am eighty-four years old, yet, though so far advanced in years, these Pills have had so good an effect, that I now take exercise without inconvenience, and I feel quite relieved of the stomach complaint.—(Signed) HENRY COLE, North Street, Lynn. Messrs. Thew and Son, proprietors of the "Lynn Advertiser," will confirm the statement.

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

DUNN'S PORCELAIN WAX CANDLES, 11s. per dozen lbs.—Among the various candles introduced to public notice, these are acknowledged to be one of the most superior articles ever manufactured, and have been universally admired. They give a brilliant light, are transparent as wax, do not require snuffing, free from smell, and have the most perfect appearance of the finest wax. DUNN'S Sovereign Sperm Candles, 11s. 6d. per dozen lbs., are much admired, being delicately white, brilliantly illuminating, exceedingly hard, requiring no snuffing, and are altogether very superior candles. DUNN'S best Composite Candles, 8s. 9d. per dozen lbs.: these are very excellent candles, and are infinitely superior to those candles usually sold as "composite," are hard, white, require no snuffing, and burn with a silvery flame. All these candles are packed for the country in boxes containing 24 lbs., 36 lbs., and upwards. No charge for boxes. JOHN DUNN and Co., Wax-chandlers, &c., 59, Cannon Street, City.—Delivered free 7 miles.

DUNN'S FINE ARGAND LAMP OIL, 4s. 6d. per gallon.—This very superior oil, so largely patronized and recommended by the nobility and gentry, is equally applicable for the Argand, Solar, French Fountain, and every description of Patent Oil Lamps. Its characteristics are the strength and brilliancy of light, without smoke or smell; extreme purity, as it will not corrode the most delicate lamp; greater economy, in the slowness of consumption, compared with other oils, and not chilling with the cold. Half a gallon or upwards delivered free 7 miles.—Sold only genuine by JOHN DUNN and Co., Oil Merchants, 59, Cannon Street, City. N.B.—From the great satisfaction this oil has given during the last 12 years, J. D. and Co. are anxious to assure the public that it only to be obtained at their warehouse, as above, as the same name has been assumed for oils of a widely different character.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

BOMBAY, it appears, has been the scene of disturbances of a religious character amongst the native community, in which the Mahomedans were the agents, and the Parsees the patients. The former were roused into a state of frenzied excitement by a supposed insult offered to their faith, and, congregating in a large body, they overpowered a small party of police, and then wreaked their vengeance upon the property as well as the bodies of the Parsees, until they were put down by the authorities. "The strongest language we could use," says the Bombay Telegraph, "would fail to convey even a faint idea of the present state of the native community of Bombay. The Parsees are terror-stricken; their conveyances are smashed in pieces upon the public roads in open daylight; the occupants are dragged forth, male and female, and maltreated in the public streets; hundreds of that sect have been for many days past confined to their houses, afraid to move abroad to attend to their usual vocations; their women are dragged forth by ruthless ruffians, dishonoured, and consigned to eternal disgrace." Full details of this affair, which is another proof of the irritability of the natives of India in matters touching their religion, will be found in another page.

There is now no doubt that military operations were to be undertaken against the hill tribes in the neighbourhood of Peshawur, conjointly with the occupation of the places indicated in our two last Summaries. A force of 2,500 men, under the personal command of Sir Colin Campbell, was to be despatched from Peshawur against the Momund district of Mitchnee, occupied by a powerful hill tribe, amongst whom disorders had broken out of a serious nature, and Mr. John Lawrence was expected at Peshawur, to make arrangements for the settlement of that territory. According to the Delhi Gazette, it is intended to build four or five forts on the skirts of the hills, each calculated to hold two companies.

A letter from Peshawur attributes the disorders amongst the Momunds to a fracas in the family of Saadat Khan, chief of Lalpoorah, one of whose sons had slain another, and taken refuge with the Luary tribe of Shiriwarees, who enabled him to set up as a robber on his own account. By way of commencement, he had plundered a small kafilah of Jellalabad Momunds, who were returning homewards from Peshawur by the Abkhanah route.

Captain Coke, with the force destined to take possession of the Meeranzaie valley, marched from Kohat on the 4th October, with 1st Infantry, 1st Cavalry, 2 9-pounders and

DATES OF ADVICES.

1 24-pounder howitzer of Sladen's battery, and a company of sappers, and had arrived within one march of the Koorum, in the valley. They met with nothing but civility from the people, who are described as "fine strapping fellows, who have plenty to eat." The correspondent of the Delhi Gazette says:—

"Wherever the British force appeared, it was received with every demonstration of friendliness by the villagers, who are evidently partial to a power strong enough to rule without being oppressive. The country between Hungoo and Nuryoob is described as being extremely beautiful—a succession of lovely valleys running between picturesque hills. The territory is in a high state of cultivation, and enjoys the advantage of abundant rains, in addition to the numerous streams that, descending from the hills, intersect it in every direction."

Another expedition upon a smaller scale was about to be despatched from Peshawur against Muchnee, a kusba in the Doab, formed by the Lundaie and Kabul rivers, and situate on the left bank of the latter stream.

Severe sickness was again becoming prevalent amongst the European troops at Peshawur, seventy men having been during the month sent down the country invalided, owing to the great and sudden variations in the temperature. Two officers at that station had recently had a narrow escape from being carried off by the Eusofzyes while out on a shooting excursion. All communication between Peshawur and Suwat was broken off, as the traders from either district, on passing within the boundaries of the other, are in great danger of being seized and imprisoned, or otherwise illtreated.

A report prevailed at Peshawur, on the 21st of October, of the death of the Ameer of Cabul; but no official intimation of the event had reached Lahore at the date of the latest advices.

Maharajah Golab Singh was, it is stated, so seriously ill, as to render it probable that an European medical officer would be sent to attend upon him.

The Nizam's affairs remain in the same condition as before. Letters from Hyderabad state that no further measures appear to be taken to procure money, though the premier speaks confidently of extinguishing the debt. The Englishman's correspondent says that the Nizam "does not respond to the urgency of the Governor-General to dismiss the Arabs; he observes that they have served the state for forty years, and that he will take care, by a just severity, to keep them in order." This, however, will not do. These foreign mercenaries are the scourge of the country. Dr. Walker, of the Nizam's army, in a recent statistical report upon the soubah of Hyderabad, says that fiscal oppression weighs far less heavily on the defenceless population than the bands of foreign mercenaries, Arabs and Rohillas, "who, having their head-quarters at Hyderabad, issue forth, like the Tondeurs and Ecocheurs of the middle ages, to plunder and destroy, with murder, rape, and robbery in their train."

The Governor-General and Commander-in-Chief had not left Simla, but were expected to set out shortly, the former on his return to Calcutta, and the latter on his projected tour of inspection through the Punjab. The Governor-General was to go to Pinjore from Simla by the Hindostan and Thibet road, taking with him guns, camels, mules, &c., laden, for the purpose of trying and opening the road. His lordship's camp left Umballah for Pinjore on the 19th October, with a wing of the 3rd regiment Irregular Cavalry, and two horse-artillery guns. His lordship held a durbar on the 24th, at Government House,

Simla, at which all the neighbouring rajahs, ranaes, and other distinguished native visitors, met with a most cordial reception. "During the whole of the forenoon," says the Delhi paper,

"The road was lined with very irregular troops, bearing matchlocks, spears, swords, banners, &c., in many instances accompanied by bands of what is called by courtesy, music; the hill sides were crowded with sable spectators from the interior, who had come many miles to see the show. The Governor-General occupied the state chair at the upper end of the drawing-room; on the right of his lordship chairs were ranged in double rows for the rajahs, ranaes, &c., and on the left sat the Commander-in-Chief and staff, Col. Sir H. Lawrence, Col. Low, Sir Theophilus Metcalfe, Bart., and the staff of the Governor-General. The 'distinguished visitors' were introduced and led up to the state chair by Mr. Edwards, c.s., and presented to the Governor-General by Sir H. M. Elliot. After depositing their offerings at the feet of his lordship, a tray of shawls and some ornaments were presented, pawn and utter were handed round, and the guests took leave to make way for a fresh batch."

The apprehensions entertained of a famine in some districts of Bengal, in consequence of the extreme drought which had prevailed for months chiefly in the western parts, had been dispelled by a change in the weather, in time to save the cold-weather crops, though it is feared too late for the rice.

Railway matters look well. It is announced that the Court of Directors had decided for the adoption of the line proposed by Major Kennedy, from the collieries to Rajmahal, and thence up the valley of the Ganges to Mirzapore. The Bombay Railway was proceeding "rapidly."

From the Penang Gazette we learn that the coal-mines at Labuan are being worked with very considerable success. "Coal to the extent of 1,000 tons has been raised from the mines at Fort Raffles during August last, and a considerable quantity of it has been exported to China."

The intelligence by this mail is very meagre.

OUDE.

The following is from Lucknow, September 30:—"The approaching marriage of the heir-apparent is the chief topic of conversation among the natives of Lucknow. No expense will be spared by the king to make it magnificent and costly. Almost the whole of the city is to be illuminated. Fourteen lakhs of rupees have already been paid out of the king's treasury, to meet the expenses; six only remain in it, but the Chukildars have been ordered to send in cash, and not merely receipts for money paid to the troops, promissory notes, &c. Thus the troops in the district have decidedly an advantage over those in the city, the former placed at the disposal of the Chukildar, who finds it his interest to please them, are paid by him, and their receipts sent in as part of the revenue collected; while the latter, as well as the officers and Nawabs residing in Lucknow, have had fifteen months' pay due to them; indeed, now some even seventeen months.

"The resident has, with his usual foresight and penetration, defeated an intrigue, in which, among others, Vazee Ally has had to do.

"I told you of the apprehension of one Makrond Sind. I trust Thakoorpersaud (the brother of Gunga Buksh, who was beheaded last year for his robberies and murders, but who is better known as the defender of Betiah, where Elderton lost his life), will likewise be apprehended. At present no clue can be obtained to his whereabouts. He is the only notable robber chief remaining that had a hand in the defence of Betiah. Bhugwan Sing, the nephew of Gunga Buksh, was killed about eight months ago, in an engagement with Captain Hearsey's men, at Huraya, near Misric.

"The upper districts are in a disturbed state; there is a family war raging between the talookdar of Toolseepore, Rajah Dan Bahadoor and his son Sahebjee. The father and son have been some time in arms against each other, and several engagements have taken place, in which some of their sirdars have lost their lives. The cause of this quarrel is variously reported, but the real one is, the grasping disposition of the son, who would fain possess a large slice of the raj, and to which the old rajah, of course, is not inclined to submit without resistance. But a short time ago, Sahebjee came suddenly upon his father's fort of Bankee, and took it after a severe loss on both sides. Some of the king's troops have been sent to attempt an amicable arrangement between the parties. This quarrel is naturally very injurious to the country, fields are trodden down, crops destroyed, life and property placed in jeopardy. In fact all the horrors of war afflict that locality. Such is the confidence reposed in Rajah Dan Bahadoor by the government of Oude, and so regularly has he paid in the revenue that no chucklidar is sent into his ilaqa. This arrangement dates from the vuzeer-ship of Hakeem Mehndee."—Englishman, Oct. 7.

ALLEGED CRUELTY AND MURDER.

A Benares correspondent, whose information is, we fear, too correct, sends us the following account of a horrible domestic tragedy at that station:—

"On the 9th inst., the Rev. Mr. Reuther, a missionary living at Bhelooport, in the suburbs of Benares, was called over to the house adjoining his, inhabited by Mr. Mackay, a catechist and schoolmaster of the Church Missionary Society, and his sister Miss Mackay. On arriving, he found that Mr. Mackay's youngest child, a girl of seven years of age, had dropped down dead, while undergoing punishment from Miss Mackay. The civil surgeon was sent for, and examined the body, which he found one mass of livid and discoloured marks, stripes and wales, showing that the poor child had undergone the most inhuman flagellation not only recently, but also at some remote period. An inquest was held the following morning. The body was then opened, and the result was, that the stomach was found to be quite empty, the heart contained only a teaspoonful of blood, and the small intestines were so collapsed, as to indicate that the child had been deprived of due nourishment. These appearances, conjoined with the external appearance of the body, satisfied the civil surgeon that death had been caused by severe flagellation, recent, as well as remote; and hastened on by the state of extreme inanition to which the poor child had been reduced. Mr. Mackay's eldest child, a girl of eight years of age, was also found to have been subjected to the same brutal torture as her poor sister; only slightly less in degree. She herself begged to be removed from her father's house, and was accordingly taken away at once. Further inquiry elicited that, for some months past, both Mr. and Miss Mackay had been in the habit of severely flogging the poor children. The civil surgeon said, 'I have seen a man receive 600 lashes, and his back was not so severely cut as was the body of the poor child now dead.' The instrument of punishment was discovered, and turned out to be a piece of gutta percha, to which were attached lashes of stout cord, of the thickness of the thong of a buggy whip, knotted in several places. These cords were covered with blood. It further came out that the deceased child had, before its death, been kept a day and a night without food, and that it had then been locked up for the night in a godown infested with rats and mice.

During its confinement it came across a piece of bread, or something of that sort, and, ravenously hungry, of course, ate it. For doing this, it was, in the morning, accused of stealing, and severely flogged. Shortly after it was called up to say its multiplication table, and on not being able to do so, was again flogged. In the afternoon, it was being made to walk up and down the Verandah, as a punishment, when it suddenly dropped down dead. It was also proved that some time previously, the members of the mission, to which Mr. Mackay was attached, had expostulated with him regarding the treatment his children were being subjected to. But in vain, for the expostulation was met by Mr. Mackay, with an assertion that the course of treatment was perfectly justifiable, and that he was the best judge as to whether it was necessary to persevere in it, or not—with a pretty plain hint, that it would be persevered in. These facts being elicited, the accused were ordered to be put on their trial; but as they are both British European subjects, their trial here can only be preliminary to their eventual arraignment before the supreme court in Calcutta.—Mofussilite, Oct. 21.

BENGALI GAMES.

The most superficial observer of Bengali manners must know that their games and sports are, for the most part, sedentary. The amusements of a numerous people, that do not supply the British army with a single sepoy, cannot be expected to bear a military character. The Bengali is certainly the least pugnacious animal in the world. The gods did not make him war-like. Possessed of lax nerves, of a feeble body, and of a timid soul, nature has not meant him to handle a gun, or wield a sword. Gentle in his manners, idle in his habits, timid in his dispositions, unenterprising in his thoughts, and slow in his motions, all his amusements and games must be for the most part sedentary. To a hasty description of some of these games, we now address ourselves.

The royal game of Chess merits the foremost notice. The history of this singular and intellectual game has been variously stated. The invention has been ascribed to the Hebrews, the Babylonians, the Persians, Chinese, and Hindus. Sir W. Jones, in his ingenious dissertation, "On the Indian Game of Chess," ascribes it to the last-mentioned people. The Sanskrit name of this game, or of one similar to it, is Chaturanga, or the four divisions of an army, of which word the term Shatranj—the name by which the game is designated in Persia and India—is supposed to be a corruption.

"Thus," says Sir William, "has a very significant word in the sacred language of the Brahmins been transformed by successive changes into axedres, scacchi, echecs, chess, and by a whimsical concurrence of circumstances, given birth to the English word check, and even a name to the exchequer of Great Britain."

It must be confessed, however, that the game of Chaturanga, as described in the Hindu books,—in the Bhavishtya-Purana, for instance, extracts from which have been given by Sir W. Jones, and in Raghu-Nandan's "Institutes of the Hindu Religion,"—is materially different from the Persian chess. Instead of two, the Hindu Chaturanga consisted of four armies, which were ranged in battle array in four parts of the board; and, what is more, the moves of the pieces were not regulated by the skill of the players, but by the throws of the dice. Sir William supposes this to have been a later invention, or rather modification, of the original chess.

Whatever may be the way in which the questio vxata of the invention of chess is solved (and we leave the matter to professed antiquaries), it is interesting for us to know that the Shatranj is universally prevalent in Bengal. The Bengali chess-board is the same as the European, with this difference, that the shrewd Bengali, averse to extravagant expenditure, usually draws his figure of sixty-four squares on a common sheet of paper. The pieces used in Bengal are of the same number as those of Europe, some of them, however, having different names. The raja, or king, is of course the commander-in-chief in this mock battle: next to him is the mantri, or minister—the phers of the Persians, the viere of the French, and the queen of the English; next in order are the elephants—the Persian phils, the French fols, and the English bishops; and the horses—the Persian aspensuar, and the English knight. The English castle, the European rook, and the Persian rokah, has been ingeniously derived from the Sanskrit rath, or chariot; but in Bengal, the castle, or rook, has been most unaccountably changed into a boat. Sir W. Jones justly remarks, that the intermixture of ships with horses, elephants, and infantry, on a plain, is an absurdity not to be defended. The banes of the Bengali are the beydals of the Persian, the pietons of the French, and the pawns of the English.

The moves of the pieces are similar to those of the European nations. All the pieces on one side of the board, agreeably to their Bengali names, are as follows: the king, the minister, two elephants, two horses, two boats, and eight foot-soldiers.

The game of chess is held in high repute in Bengal. That the Bengalis are well skilled in the mysteries of this princely pastime, is not surprising; their intelligence and sagacity, in which, perhaps, they are second to no nation, peculiarly fit them for eminence in this game; the deep cunning, moreover, which forms no small ingredient of the national character, enables them with facility to dive into the depths of state policy, and to extricate the entanglements of political schemes, of which this "game of state" is represented by some to be an apt emblem.

The Pashu is considered to rank next to chess, which is regarded as the prince of all games. Its well-known board consists of two long rectangles, intersecting each other at right angles in the middle, and making four small rectangles besides the middle square. Each of these four rectangles consists of twenty-four squares; so that altogether there are ninety-six squares, excluding the space or large square contained in the middle. The pieces made use of in the game are sixteen in number, four on each side of the board. Unlike chess, where everything is left to ingenuity and skill, the moves of the pieces in the páshá are regulated by the throws of three dice, of the usual form, generally made of ivory. This, like the preceding, is also represented to be a military game. That this game is of long standing in Bengal, is evident from the fact that Yudhisthir is said in the Hindu Shastras to have played it with Dúryadhan. There are two ways of playing at páshá,—the rang and chau-pári; in the former, only two, and in the latter, four persons being engaged. The Bengalis, naturally a talkative race, preserve wonderful taciturnity while engaged in chess. Around the chess-board everything is quiet as the grave; the spectators look on the combat with mute attention, while the players themselves are too thoughtful to give vent to words. The ordinary kisti (check), uttered in a slow voice, is answered by the basti (removal of the king), pronounced in a tone still feebler; the final check-mate being announced with due éclat. The páshá-board is, on the contrary, a scene of noisy vociferation. The combatants breathe hatred and vengeance against each other; the throws of the dice are accompanied with tremendous noise, and the sounds of kache-baro and baro-panch are heard from a considerable distance. It is altogether a lively scene, in strong contrast with the apathy generally attributed to the Bengalis. Around the páshá-board is thrown away much "excellent indignation," which, if properly husbanded and directed in one strong current against the oppressing zemindars of their country, might lighten the burdens of the people, and augment their social happiness.

In point of gentility, in the estimation of the Bengali, playing-cards occupy the third place. Every one is acquainted with the fact, that the mysteries of managing fifty-two quadrangular pieces of painted pasteboard are not Hindu in their origin. Whether cards were invented in France towards the conclusion of the fourteenth century for alleviating the ill-humour of a king, or in Spain by an abbé; or whether they were introduced into Europe by the Moorish invaders, who imported it from the East, or by the crusaders of the eleventh century; whether the pack originally consisted of thirty-six or fifty-two; whether the "combat on the velvet plain" was an allegorical representation of the feudal system—the king representing the feudal monarch, the knaves the powerful barons (the queens being a later invention of French gallantry), and the numerical cards the degraded serfs; whether the suits symbolized the four classes of society—spades the nobility, hearts the clergy, clubs the husbandmen, and diamonds the vassals or the soldiers; and whether the technicalities of the Aristotelian logic may not be conveniently taught by the apt-embles of the quadrangular pieces, as a hot-brained friar of the sixteenth century is said to have imagined and actually practised—all these we leave to be determined by those who delight in such researches. We suppose the Bengalis learnt the art of dealing and shuffling from their enlightened conquerors, the Europeans. The king and the queen they style saheb and bibi; and the Bengali pramárá is, doubtless, a corruption of the European primero. It is scarcely necessary to add, that the cards used by the Bengalis are precisely those used by the Europeans.

Besides primero, the most usual play is what is termed Grábu: it is played by four persons, with a pack of thirty-two cards—the twos, threes, fours, fives, and sixes, being excluded. That gambling of some sort existed in the country from a remote age, is unquestionable; but the Bengalis are by no means deep gamblers, and we are greatly mistaken if their gambling propensities have not been increased by the introduction of European cards. Cowries (shells) were, and are still, used by the peasantry for gambling transactions; but these, it ought to be remembered, are games of small hazard.

The chess, the páshá, and cards, constitute the whole circle of the games of the largest proportion of the intelligent and sober part of the Hindu community: they are played in the halls of the rich, the chandi-mandalas of the middling classes, and under the shades of trees. The Bengalis are a very sociable and pleasure-loving people. Gregariousness is one of the prominent features of their national character. In every village the people assemble together in separate parties, subsequent to their afternoon nap, for purposes of recreation and interesting talk. We do not here speak of the lower orders of the people, but of the gentry of Bengal. In the cool of the evening, parties of respectable natives may be not unfrequently seen sitting under the umbrageous bakul, and amusing themselves with chess, páshá, or cards. Laying aside for a season the pride of wealth, and even the rigorous distinctions of caste, Brahmins and Sudras may be seen mingling together for recreation. The noisy vociferations and the loud laugh betoken a scene of merriment and joy. The hákah, a necessary furniture of a Bengal meeting-place, is ever and anon by its fragrant volleys ministering to the refreshment of the assembly; while the plaudits of the successful player rise higher than the curling smoke issuing from the cocoa-nut vessel. The games over, they separate for a short time; and, when the shades of evening thicken around them, re-assemble within-doors, and amuse themselves again with music and cards.—Calcutta Review.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MESS COMMITTEE closed their proceedings on the 8th, and sent in the reports to Government on the same day. Our correspondent says there is but little doubt entertained of the result, and that compulsory messes will be the order of the day. Of course nothing certain can be known until the views of the Governor-General on the subject are recorded, and even then the final order must come from the Honourable the Court of Directors. Whichever way this important question is decided, it is well known that the necessary investigations have already had a beneficial effect, inasmuch as that several regiments have been, and still are, making strenuous efforts to reduce the amount of their liabilities, which are, in some instances, considerable.—Delhi Gaz. Oct. 15.

THE HORSBURGH LIGHTHOUSE ON PEDRA BRANCA was lit for the first time on the 27th ult., in the presence of the Governor of the Straits Settlements and a large party of ladies and gentlemen on board the H.C. steamer Hooghly. The lantern presents a brilliant light for about fifteen seconds each minute, and the light was visible from the deck of the steamer at a distance of fifteen miles.—Hurkaru, Oct. 21.

MR. ARRATON, whose case Sir Charles Napier took up so warmly just as he was leaving India, appears to be a person of great energy and enterprise; and we are glad to learn that the Governor-General is disposed to forward his attempt to open a timber trade with the people amongst the Himalaya mountains.—Hurkaru.

THE MAGISTRACY.—We are informed that Lord Dalhousie has intimated in no mincing phrase to the local authorities, his displeasure that his wishes in regard to the chief magistracy have not been attended to, and that a civil servant has been appointed to replace Mr. Mills, after his lordship's elaborate minute advocating the transfer of such berths to the unenvied service. It is said, Mr. Hume was selected on obvious grounds for promotion to the chief seat, so as to secure for the vacant place in the junior magistracy, a competent and active lawyer; Mr. Wylie, of course, succeeding to the senior seat on the bench. We are told to conclude from this circumstance what chance the Post-office Commissioners have of carrying out their plan of securing the Post-Master-Generalships to their own service, and also of nominating a director of posts. Lord Dalhousie's sentiments on the latter class of appointments have been as openly declared as his ideas on the police.—Citizen, Oct. 7.

MAJOR P. ARBOTT, the officiating executive engineer, Delhi, riding out on his tour of duty, his horse suddenly fell, and throwing his rider heavily, rolled over him, crushing him severely. The gallant major is not in any danger.

THE INDIAN MARRIAGE ACT.—The new Act of Parliament for regulating marriages in this country has been officially promulgated here, accompanied by the draft of an Act for giving effect to its provisions. The only objectionable point in the latter is that it names the "Police Courts," which nobody will visit if they can help it, as the places in which the notice of marriage is to be published at the presidency towns. The new law is to come into operation on the 1st January next.—Hurkaru, Oct. 22.

LIEUT. D. McNEILL, lately commanding No. 3 Punjaub battery at Dera Ismael Khan, has, in consequence of some misunderstanding, been directed to vacate his appointment. Lieut. H. LeGeyt Bruce will, it is said, succeed Lieut. McNeill, and proceeds at once from Simla to take command.—Delhi Gaz. Oct. 15.

ASSAULT IN KUTCHERRY.—We have just heard the following from Moradabad:—"An incident occurred yesterday (11th Oct.) at this station, which occasioned some excitement amongst our very quiet society. While the usual routine of business was being transacted at the kutcherry, a man in the court suddenly snatched a sword from a peon near him, drew it from its sheath, cut down the peon, and laid about him right and left, calling out, "Where is the Burra Sahib?" (meaning the magistrate). The crowd rushed out of the court as fast as they could, and the man was not secured till he had wounded seventeen men, some of them very severely. It appears the man's brother was sentenced to imprisonment by the magistrate, and conceiving that the sentence had been an unjust one, he determined on being revenged; but the magistrate was far out of harm's way, at his summer residence at the Lake."—Ibid.

MR. MARTIN GUBBINS has, with much propriety, applied to be relieved of his office of magistrate, during the approaching inquiry by Sir Robert Barlow. Mr. Spankie will act during his period of relief. Mr. Henry Lushington, junior, officiating for Mr. Spankie.—Lahore Chron.

BURMESE INSULTS.—The arrival of two of H.M. ships (the Fox and the Serpent) is quite an event. What may be their object we know not, but we should rejoice to hear that the commodore, after enjoying the official hospitalities prepared for him, had sheeted home his topsails again, weighed, and with his consort made all sail for the Irrawaddy. The grossest and most disreputable insults to British subjects, and to the power of England, are now of constant occurrence, every arrival appears to tem with the report of increased and insulting indignities. The last is of equal atrocity to the immediate preceding one of a month or two ago. The commander of the British ship Champion has been dragged before the Burmese officials, to answer to a false and shameless charge of murder, preferred against him by a small portion of his lascar crew. Had there been even the slightest proof, it having been affirmed to have occurred on the high seas under the British flag, no cognizance of the affair whatever ought to have been taken by the Burmese. The commander of the Champion appears to have withstood their unjust and arbitrary demands for some time, with determination and pluck, but eventually was obliged to succumb, and pay the sum of Rs. 200 as a preliminary douceur. This case assimilates to the previous one of the Monarch, which we have alluded to; a charge of murder was then made against the commander, and although eventually admitted to be perfectly groundless, yet a fine of two or three thousand rupees was imposed after much litigation and annoyance, and great detention to the ship. A perfect and invariable system of unauthorized insult and atrocious squeezing, now appears to be permanently established at Rangoon.—Englishman, Oct. 22.

YOUNG DULFER SING is shortly going to pay a visit to Agra to see the sights. We hear very interesting accounts from Futelghur of his deportment; we understand that he voluntarily attends daily family prayers at Dr. Login's house, and that he has, or had, a young son of the late lamented Major Scott, the pension paymaster at Luknao, attached to his suite as a playfellow. In fact, he is progressing so well under the tuition of his guardian, Dr. Login, that we trust he will be able to appreciate what he sees when he visits England.—Lahore Chron. Oct. 25.

THE DAK RUNNER conveying the mail from Atok to Peshawur, was waylaid on the night of the 1st October by four or five Afreedes, about five miles from Atok, on the right bank of the Indus. They gagged and carried him into the neighbouring hills, where they broke open the bags, in the belief that they contained money. They were disappointed, except as to a solitary rupee on the runner, and then proceeded to discuss the question of killing him or letting him off. He was allowed to depart, and came in to Atok on the evening of the 2nd, where his bags being put in order, they were again started off.

LIEUT.-COL. SIR RICHARD SHAKESPEAR, has been re-appointed to officiate as assistant to the Governor-General's agent for the affairs of Sind-deeah's dominions, Major Malcolm taking the title of "political agent at Gwalior."

ON-DUTY.—Mr. Mansel proceeds to Nagpore as resident. Mr. Montgomery succeeds Mr. Mansel in the board of administration. Mr. George Barnes goes to Lahore as commissioner, and Major E. W. Lake, of the Punjab commission, about to proceed on sick leave to the Cape for two years, takes Mr. Barnes' place at Kangra. During the absence of Major Lake, Mr. E. C. Bayley will act for him at Kangra, and Mr. Edward Thomas proceeds with the Governor-General as deputy secretary. — There is reason to believe that Major Burn, deputy secretary to the Board of Administration for the affairs of the Punjab, has been appointed town major, Fort William, in the room of Col. Warren, who becomes a brigadier. Major Neville Chamberlain is spoken of as Major Burn's successor. Capt. Bagot, aide-de-camp to the Governor-General, does not accompany his lordship to Calcutta, but, after proceeding with the camp as far as Allahabad, will return to Jutogh, and resume his duties as second in command of the Nusseeree battalion. Lieut. C. W. D'Oyly, of the 58th N.I., will, it is said, succeed Capt. Bagot as aide-de-camp to the Governor-General. Major Taylor is to leave Bunnoo, and will be succeeded by Lieut. Nicholson, of the second Punjab cavalry. Lieut. Cox is also to give place to Lieut. Pollock. Capt. Gastrell is appointed to succeed Lieut. M. Fitzgerald in the revenue survey department, and is ordered to join Lieut. Blagrave at Batala. Dr. George Craigie proceeds to Calcutta immediately, to take the duties of marine surgeon.

ACCIDENT TO THE PRECURSOR STEAMER.—The Precursor, with ship letter-bags for Europe, left Calcutta Oct. 21st, but having anchored at Kedgerree on the 22nd, unfortunately drove from her anchors, and went on shore a little below Kedgerree, with the loss of her rudder. The mails and passengers were immediately transferred to another steamer (the Erin), which vessel was to leave Calcutta on the 27th ult. for Suez.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

NAVIGATION OF THE INDUS.

Notification.—Foreign Department, Simla, Oct. 16.—The Governor-General has much satisfaction in notifying, for public information, that additional vessels having been provided, and former difficulties removed, a regular communication, by Government steam-vessels, has been established on the river Indus between Kurachee and Mooltan, for the conveyance of passengers and merchandise.

A survey of the Upper Indus, and of the river Jelum, has been for some time in progress; and the Governor-General has every reason to expect, that in the course of the ensuing year the regular communication with Kurachee may be extended to Jelum and to Kalabagh on the Indus, at such stated periods as may be found necessary, and under such regulations as shall facilitate the conveyance of passengers and goods, and shall meet the convenience of those in distant stations and of the public generally.

The Governor-General has directed that, except on occasions of public emergency, the government vessels appointed to maintain the regular communication between Kurachee and Mooltan, shall so far be reserved exclusively for private passengers and merchandize, that such private passengers and merchandize shall invariably have the preference, and that thereafter any vacant tonnage or accommodation which may be left, shall be available for Government stores or passengers.

COURT MARTIAL.

ENSIGN DOUGLAS REID, 2ND GREN. N.I.

Head Quarters, Simla, Sept. 30.—At a general court-martial, assembled at Rawul Pindee, Sept. 15, 1851, Ens. D. Reid, 2nd gren. N.I. was arraigned on the following charges:—

1st. For violent and outrageous conduct at Rawul Pindee, on July 27, 1851, in having shaken his fist in the face of his superior officer, Lieut. James, interp. and qr.-mr. of the reg., and used violent language to that officer when required by him to retract certain very disrespectful and insubordinate remarks, which he, Ens. Reid, had just made at the regimental mess, regarding the officer commanding the regiment.

2nd. For behaving with great disrespect, in the presence of his commanding officer, Lieut.-Col. Hamilton, c.a., commanding the 2nd gren. N.I., at Rawul Pindee, on July 28, 1851, when called on to account for his conduct of the previous evening, as alleged in the first charge; and for having, when told by his commanding officer that he must apologize to Lieut. James, in a highly disrespectful manner refused to do so.

3rd. For insubordinate conduct in having, at Rawul Pindee, on July 27, 1851, when placed in arrest, broken his sword in two before he sent it to the adjutant.

Finding.—On the first charge, guilty of having used violent language to his superior officer, Lieut. James, interpreter and quarter-master of the regiment, when required by him to retract certain very disrespectful remarks which he, Ens. Reid, had just made at the regimental mess, regarding the officer commanding the regiment, but not guilty of the remainder of the charge, of which the court do accordingly acquit him.

On the second charge, guilty.

On the third charge, guilty, with the exception of the words "insubordinate conduct," of which the court do acquit him.

Sentence.—To be suspended from rank, pay, and allowances, for (6) six calendar months.

(Signed) Confirmed. W. M. GOMM, General, C.-in-C., East-Indies.

Head Quarters, Simla, 24th September, 1851.

Remarks by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.—The Court having acquitted the prisoner of the "insubordinate conduct" alleged in the third charge, should have acquitted him of that charge altogether.

The sentence of suspension passed upon Ens. Reid, is to have effect from the date of publication of this order at Rawul Pindee, of which a report is to be made to the adjutant-general of the army, and to the assistant adjutant-general, at the presidency.

MADRAS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SOUTH OF INDIA SUGAR.—More than eleven thousand tons of sugar have been already despatched from the port of Madras, and the crop is not yet wholly exhausted. If with so many ingenious impediments in the way of trade, such results can be obtained, what might we not expect from a real government anxious to promote the welfare of the people? It is our firm belief, that southern India will, with fair play, become the greatest sugar producing country in the world. No labour can compete with that at the disposal of the Indian planter, and if the Company were selfishly wise, the slave owners of Cuba would soon give up the traffic in human flesh. When British capital is more extensively engaged in the export trade of Madras, results may be developed beyond the most sanguine expectations.—Athenæum, Oct. 23.

THE BISHOP OF MADRAS.—We understand that the Bishop of Madras has purchased the estate of Southdown, on the Neilgherries, whither his lordship intends to retire at convenient seasons. It would be a great comfort if Madras could be moved to the vicinity of the bishop, as the bishop is not able to stay in the vicinity of Madras. It is one of the most striking peculiarities of the Indian climate, that its depressing influences are most felt by the highest officers of the State.—Ibid.

THE MONEY MARKET.—The Madras papers inform us that the Agra Bank has been compelled to cease making any advances to the mercantile community there either in the shape of loans or discounts. The Bank of Madras is also closed to accommodations of all kinds, not having the wherewithal to discount even Court of Directors' bills, payable within a fortnight. Trade at Madras is completely paralysed, and money cannot be had on any terms.—Bombay Times, Nov. 2.

RESOURCES OF INDIA.—"Our Indian merchants have hitherto taken such a pound-shilling-and-pence view of the resources of India, that every thing has been neglected or very soon thrown aside, if it could not immediately under-sell the same commodity from the English market; but the day must come, sooner or later, when capitalists will be induced to attempt to supply each country with manufactures produced on the spot. It may be long ere such revolutions will take place, but the sooner they are commenced the better will it be for all classes of the community. The following are some of the latest important discoveries: a very valuable and rich ore of manganese has been found at Vizianagram; a large block, weighing nearly 50lbs. has been received from Mr. Crozier, who also forwarded several other varieties of the metal on a previous occasion, along with some fine specimens of antimonial ores. A very rich ore of copper, containing upwards of 70 per cent. of the metal, has been brought down by a soldier from Bellary. Some fine samples of malachite have also been received at the medical school from the same locality, along with very rich samples of copper ore."—Dr. Hunter, in Athenæum.

COLONEL LAWE, the chief engineer, will retire from the service about March next. The corps has agreed to buy him out for Rs. 35,000. If the claims of science are considered in the choice of his successor, we do not see how Lieut.-colonel Cotton, who will then obtain by promotion the senior lieut.-colonelcy, can be passed over. Colonel Lawe entered the service in 1815, and was thirty years obtaining his present rank. Colonel Cotton is a cadet of 1819, and has been thirty-one years creeping up to his lieutenant-colonelcy. We thought the senior lieutenant-colonel of the corps always claimed the chief engineership by right, and that consequently no favour or partiality could be exercised by Government in the matter. By Colonel Lawe's retirement, Major C. E. Faber, Captain J. T. Smith, 1st Lieutenant W. J. Birdwood, and 2nd Lieutenant C. V. Wilkieson, obtain promotion to the next superior grades.—Athenæum, Oct. 23.

LIEUT. NUNN.—The Madras Spectator states, that Lieut. G. O. Nunn, H. M.'s 51st regt. L.I. has been permitted to retire from the service by the sale of his commission, receiving in value the sum of 450l.

SELF-ACTING PUNKAH.—The offer of a prize by the Madras Government for a self-acting punkah has induced an ingenious mechanist in Calcutta to make a working model, which appears to answer the purpose perfectly, and the expense of fitting the machinery to a full-sized punkah will not exceed thirty rupees.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

COMMAND OF THE MADRAS ARMY.

Head-Quarters, Choultry Plain, Sept. 29.—Lieutenant-General Sir George Berkeley cannot give up the command of the Madras army, which he has now had the honour of holding for between three and four years, without expressing his great satisfaction at its uniform good conduct.

Sir George Berkeley found the Madras army in very good order. He has spared no pains to uphold its discipline, and those corps which have come under his own personal inspection, he has generally had every reason to be satisfied with.

In a large army like this, it would be invidious to particularize individuals. The Commander-in-Chief, however, begs that the heads of the adjutant and qr. master general's departments, both of her Majesty's and the Honourable Company's services, and also the Judge Advocate General, will accept his sincerest thanks for the unremitting attention, zeal, and ability shown by them and their subordinate officers, on every occasion, in carrying his wishes into effect.

To the major-generals and brigadiers commanding divisions and brigades, the Commander-in-Chief's acknowledgments are justly due for the high order and discipline maintained among the troops under their authority.

The Madras army, wherever it has been employed, has invariably upheld its high character. The courage, fidelity, and obedience of its soldiers are proverbial; and the Commander-in-Chief takes this opportunity of thanking all ranks for their soldier-like behaviour during the period he has had the honour of being at their head—a period he will always recollect with pleasure.

Sir George Berkeley recommends perseverance in this meritorious conduct. His best wishes will always be with this army, and he has confidence that honour and success will ever accompany its standards.

The Lieutenant-General in giving over the charge with which he has been entrusted, to his successor, His Excellency Lieutenant-General Sir Richard Armstrong, feels great gratification in resigning it to a highly distinguished officer, whose long services in India and in this presidency enable him fully to appreciate the merits of the Madras army.

EXAMINATIONS IN HINDUSTANI.

Head Quarters, Choultry Plain, Oct. 16, 1851.—No. 58.—In modification of G. O. C. of the 2nd ultimo, No. 43, requiring all officers now subject to final examination in Hindustani, to be prepared to appear before out-station committees, in April next, his excellency the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to direct that the order in question be considered imperative only on officers holding the appointment of interpreter, and those in charge of police duties.

2. Other officers to whom the rescinded rule is applicable, will be at liberty to forego the final examination in April next, and the case of those who avail themselves of this option will be finally provided for by the letter S being prefixed to their names in lieu of the H in black ink, hitherto adopted.

3. Officers who have on recent occasions lost the black H, from declining to appear for final examination, will in like manner be distinguished by the letter S prefixed to their names.

BOMBAY.

SIR C. NAPIER AND MR. ARRATOON.

To the Editor of the Bombay Gazette.

Sir,—I have just seen in an overland newspaper the following letters extracted from the Bombay Times of the 18th June, 1851. [Then follow the official letters respecting Mr. Arratoon's case, published by us, pp. 455 and 486.]

If these letters be forgeries, I have nothing more to say; but if they be genuine, then the governor-general "thinks it necessary that errors should be noticed and corrected." So do I. Therefore, when an erroneous statement is published by order of the governor-general of India, I "notice and correct" it accordingly. Lord Dalhousie asserts that I was "present in the station at Simla with the governor-general and Mr. Arratoon, when the communication with that person took place; that then and there, or afterwards and at all times, his excellency had ample and simple means of verifying the statements made, and of ascertaining whether Mr. Arratoon's story was true or not."

This silly string of words is intended, very disingenuously, to make it appear that I had received Mr. Arratoon's complaint at Simla, and had unfairly treasured it up, to bring forward, whether true or false, for the purpose of attacking his lordship on a future occasion. This attempt to affix, by implication, a disloyal line of conduct upon me, I answer thus:—

That I had not seen Mr. Arratoon at Simla, nor did Mr. Arratoon make his complaint of Lord Dalhousie at Simla, but at Ferozepore, after I had resigned my command and was on my journey home; other officers were present.

From that moment I resolved to make Mr. Arratoon's statement public. It was important to the prosperity of Simde that this matter should be cleared up; and I had no other way, so simple and so straightforward as that which I adopted, to discover whether Mr. Arratoon's complaint was "true or not," and to force an inquiry into a matter of so much importance to the public. It seems that I have succeeded! I gave myself no concern whatever, whether it pleased Lord Dalhousie or Mr. Arratoon! On the contrary, I hoped that the wrong-doer, whoever he might be, should be brought before the public in his true colours. Instead of losing his temper, Lord Dalhousie ought to have been obliged to me for giving publicity to Mr. Arratoon's accusation! Whether or not his lordship has been able to refute the grave charge made against him by the Armenian merchant, I have not heard; but the public ought to have the whole case placed before it. It is important, not only to Scinde, but to all India, and to England. The synopsis of the matter is just this: It is said that timber, abundant in quantity and fine in quality, grows near the sources of the Che-naub and Beas rivers, which rivers flow into the Indus. That in the same regions are to be found copper, lead, and other rich products. Now, have these woods, mines, and waters been turned to account, or have they not? They have been acquired at an enormous expense of blood and treasure. They ought to be remunerative. This fearful account must be settled by the present governor general of India with the British people now, and with history hereafter. To force a "Balance Cr." by parsimonious retrenchments, and especially by curtailing the size, number, and quality of barracks for European soldiers, where death stands in all its ghastliness on the "Dr." side of this terrible ledger, will not satisfy England. She demands a just and vigorous elicitation of the resources which abound in the rich countries placed by the soldiers at the disposal of Lord Dalhousie. No rival disturbs the tranquillity of those pregnant provinces teeming with riches.

It is not for the Governor-General of India to ask a poor Armenian merchant how the latent products of vast mountains, and the powers of great rivers, are to be roused into the service of an empire! The voice of a man, whose mind is formed for high command, should call forth the ever-ready energies of commercial enterprise, giving thereto vigour and hope, and not wither them with an official wet blanket, "prepared to accede to practicable and reasonable requests." England perhaps can, but India cannot, be ruled by "red tape and green ferret;" and so, leaving Mr. Arratoon and Lord Dalhousie to settle their own quarrels,—I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,

C. J. NAPIER, Lieutenant-General.

Oaklands, Aug. 25, 1851.

RIOTS AMONGST THE NATIVES.

For several days previous to the despatch of the last mail from hence, an extraordinary ferment pervaded the Mahomedan and Parsee sects in Bombay, in consequence of two members of the latter community having been converted to the faith of Islam. The excitement was much increased by an ill-timed article in a Guzerattee newspaper, containing a memoir of the Arabian Prophet, to which was prefixed a lithographed portrait of Mahomed, which appears to have been looked upon by the Mussulmans as a caricature. Large bodies of them assembled in the principal mosques of the town for the purpose of considering the means to be employed for obtaining redress for their supposed grievances at the hands of their Zoroastrian fellow-subjects, and the fanatical portion cried aloud for vengeance, even to the death, upon those who had thus insulted their religion. It unfortunately happened that some evil-disposed person had posted a copy of the drawing with some ribald and obscene jest, written under it in Guzerattee, on the main entrance of the Juma Musjid, or principal mosque: this further inflamed the already excited feelings of the Mahomedan population, and immediately led to an outbreak, which would no doubt have ended very disastrously for the Parsees were it not for the energetic measures taken by Mr. Spens, the senior magistrate of police, and Capt. Baynes, the superintendent, for putting it down.

The outbreak originated with the Mahomedans, who had assembled on the 17th October, at the principal mosque in the Green Market, to the number of several thousands. Friday being their Sabbath, it is usual for a large concourse of the "faithful" to meet at that place for worship, but on the present occasion the numbers assembled for this purpose were much greater than is ordinarily the case, and there could not have been fewer than four or five thousand men collected together. The cazee, or chief priest, took this opportunity of addressing them on the extreme impropriety of the apprehended outbreak, pointing out the unwisdom of visiting the imprudence of an individual of that sect on the Parsees generally, and assuring them that he had applied to Government for reparation for the insults they had received from this person. While thus remonstrating with them, an Arab got up, and insisted that, as their religion had been ridiculed and insulted, it was necessary they should have a jehad, or battle, against the infidels; and, notwithstanding the efforts of the cazee to prevent it, a large body of men, armed with sticks, bludgeons, and other weapons, one of whom carried a flag, sallied out of the mosque, crying out "Deen! Deen!" (the cry made use of by the Mahomedans whenever they consider their faith assailed), and at once set upon a small number of the police force assembled in the immediate vicinity to keep order, whom they overpowered, wounding several of them severely, and amongst others a European inspector, whom they treated in a very savage manner, and whose life was for some time afterwards despaired of. The rioters after this plundered a number of houses belonging to Parsees, and wantonly destroyed much valuable property: they also ill treated all who fell in their way, particularly such Parsees as they could lay hold of. The riot lasted altogether about half an hour, by the end of which time it was completely quelled by a small body of police, under the personal command of Capt. Baynes, the superintendent, who behaved with great energy and spirit on the occasion. Mr. Spens, the senior magistrate of police, proceeded to the scene of tumult the instant the news reached him, and, in communication with Capt. Baynes, took measures for restoring tranquillity. The number of persons wounded in the riot was sixteen, some of them severely, but the whole are now in a fair way of recovery. The value of the property ascertained to have been plundered or destroyed by the rioters, is about 750*l*. Upwards of one hundred of the rioters were taken into custody, of whom about thirty-five or forty have been identified as being concerned in the disturbances. These are now in gaol awaiting their fate.

As might be expected in a community usually so peaceable and orderly as that of Bombay, the occurrence spread great dismay and alarm throughout the whole island, and the most exaggerated and absurd rumours were spread abroad as to the intentions of the Mahomedans. On the following Friday (the 24th) it was expected that another outbreak would occur; but, with the exception of a trifling disturbance caused by some Parsees having thrown stones and tiles on the crowds of Mahomedans returning peaceably to their homes from the principal mosque, nothing occurred to denote that this sect have any intention to provoke a further breach of the peace. The civil authorities have, however, taken precautionary measures for meeting force with force should there be occasion for it, and parties of military are picqueted in various quarters of the native town who will be ready to act at a moment's notice. A detachment of 200 men of the 78th Highlanders has been moved into the town barracks within the fort from Colaba, so as to be at hand if required. Considerable excitement still prevails in the town, and a perfect panic has seized upon those Parsees who inhabit houses in the vicinity of the principal mosque. Many of these have left the neighbourhood and taken refuge amongst their caste-fellows in the fort, as they fear that something very dreadful is impending during the Mohurram festival, of which this is the ninth day. To-morrow the Taboots (representations of the mausoleums built over the remains of the slaughtered Hossein, one of the grandsons of the Prophet, who was killed at Kur-bulla) will be cast into the sea at Back-bay, after which it is hoped a state of perfect tranquillity will once more be restored. Much of the excitement which now prevails is attributed to the inflammatory articles daily promulgated by a portion of the local press, English and native; and should anything untoward occur, the blame will in great measure rest with the parties who have worked the press to this end. For our own part we see little reason to fear any further outbreak. The feelings of the respectable portion of both sects—Mahomedans and Parsees—are entirely opposed to tumult and disorder of any kind, and the Parsees in particular are a peace-loving people, whose chief object is to make their fortunes by industry, and spend them afterwards like princes. The only care, therefore, is to keep down the rabble, who, having nothing to lose, would doubtless be very glad of any opportunity for enriching themselves at the expense of others; and this is being done most efficiently by the police authorities, to whom the greatest credit is due for the measures they have taken, so as effectually to deter the evil-disposed from further disturbing the public peace.—Bombay Times, Nov. 3.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The LONDON MAIL of September the 24th arrived at Bombay on Oct. 23rd (per Moozuffur).

SCYTHIAN REMAINS IN THE DECCAN.—In reference to the discovery lately announced by Capt. Meadows Taylor, of Scythian remains in the southern part of the Deccan,* we have the pleasure of stating that similar objects of antiquity have been for some time remarked to the north of that district. It was in the end of 1847, that the Rev. S. Hislop first observed circles of stones in the dominions of the Raja of Nagpore; he found them near Gumgaum, Takalghat, and Nundeeopore, which lie at various distances from Nagpore, on the road to Haiderabad by Neermul. In passing through the Nizam's territories, in continuation of the same route, he met with relics, of the kind near Khaira, between the Wurda and the Paid Gunga, and again opposite the travellers' bungalow at Narkelpili, about fifty miles south of Haiderabad, on the road to Madras. He has also been informed by a friend that they occur on the road from Haiderabad to Kurnoul. Of the plains above specified, the localities where they are to be seen in greatest abundance, are Takalghat and Narkelpili. At the former place, Mr. Hislop counted as many as ninety circles of stone, some single, others double—all close together, and spreading over an area of about four square miles. One of them was opened, and, at a depth of three feet from the surface, an iron vessel was laid bare, of the size and shape of an ordinary frying pan, but having a ring on each side to serve as a handle. The bottom of the vessel was covered with little pieces of earthenware, neatly fitted to each other, like mosaic work, and designed no doubt to protect the human ashes, for the reception of which the mound had evidently been constructed.—Bombay Guardian.

EXUVIÆ OF SNAKES.—September and October are two of the most promising months for the naturalist in this part of India, and a subject of curious inquiry is, in what manner do snakes contrive to change their skins? On every hedge at present may be seen a long thin white semi-transparent tissue, exactly like a piece of lace lately wet; firm hard twigs, not too thick, and the horizontal rails of a wire fence, seem to be favorite places for the performance of exuviation. The skins are always turned inside out—they are often perfectly entire, without the slightest blemish or injury: the skinning seems to be begun just inside the lip around the mouth, and is then drawn right over the head, and so downwards till it is pulled off by the tail,—the whole, as already stated, being reversed. One very curious circumstance is, that there is always a pellicle of skin, almost as thick as that over the rest of the body all over the eye, and not a single hole anywhere save the mouth and vent. Is the vision of snakes imperfect before, and is it improved after, the process of skinning? The process seems always to be performed over-night, the skins being found fresh in the morning. A large class of our snakes change their habits at this season: during the rains they live chiefly in water, feeding on young frogs and other reptiles—from henceforth till May they must content themselves without it.—Bombay Times, Oct. 8.

ADEN.—The Bombay Times yesterday announced to its readers that an Aden commission will shortly be appointed, to examine into our past intercourse with the Arab tribes with whom we have, for the last thirteen years, come into collision, and to suggest such measures as may be deemed most suitable for "the adjustment of past differences, and for placing our mutual relations on a more solid basis than they have hitherto been." And our contemporary deems it not unlikely that "the members of the commission may elicit the distasteful inference that our defective policy has fostered ill-will towards us in some of the tribes—and that our exclusive exaltation of one chief over another, when the latter was the more deserving of the two, has fomented party jealousies, through which we have suffered in other respects besides the murder of our countrymen." We not only think this a very likely result of the labours of any commission of inquiry sent to Aden, but we feel assured that, if the commission be worth its salt, such a result is inevitable. The "political" administration of Aden has, for a succession of years, been such as to bring on us the hatred of the neighbouring Arab tribes, and the ridicule of European nations.—Telegraph, Oct. 28.

THE SECRETARIAT.—Some ugly rumours are afloat with respect to the Bombay secretariat, some of the clerks in which have, it is said, been tempted to betray the confidence reposed in them—for a consideration. Some severe strictures have been made by the local papers upon this establishment, which has long enjoyed an unenviable notoriety, in consequence of a remark recently made by Sir William Yardley, who is represented to have said, that "the entire secretariat seemed determined to pass through the Insolvent Court!"—Bombay Times, Nov. 2.

LIEUT.-COL. BRADSHAW.—We notice with much regret the death at Kussowlie of Lieut.-Col. Bradshaw, c.b., commanding the 60th Rifles. This officer commanded a brigade of the Bombay column throughout the siege of Mooltan, was present at the battle of Goojerat, and, after entering Peshawur with General Gilbert, was sent in pursuit of the Affghan force as far as the Khyber.—Bombay Times.

A DELICATE INQUIRY is, we understand, now going on in the secret department, in respect to certain papers having been intercepted on their way to Baroda, which turn out to be translations of the minutes of the governor and council in that department, the copies of which had been surreptitiously obtained for payment. The general impression seems to be, that copies of any papers in the secretariat may be had in the bazaar, at a scale of prices varying with the value, to the party interested, of the documents required.—Times, Nov. 2.

BARODA, which has for a long time been the seat of villanous intrigues, in which natives of rank are concerned, has latterly been occupying a prominent place in the public eye. The sympathy of the community is strongly enlisted in behalf of Col. Outram, the resident, who is generally understood to have been thwarted by the authorities in a most extraordinary manner, in the course of his prolonged endeavours to unkenneled the individuals, both at Baroda and in Bombay, whose nefarious proceedings have led to a general (though we believe an utterly unfounded) belief throughout Guzerat, that the highest British functionaries may be bribed. It is stated that Col. Outram, after many vain attempts to induce the Bombay Government to purify its secretariat, has at last compelled it to take up the matter, by supplying irrefragable proof of the corruption and treachery which pervades that establishment. He transmitted to Government, Goozrattee translations of some of his own letters, and of the minutes of the governor, and of members of council, supplied from the secretariat to certain of the Baroda intriguers.—Telegraph, Nov. 3.

PASSING IN LANGUAGES.—The following is, we believe, a correct list of the gentlemen who "passed in the languages," in the course of the quarterly examination held here, which is just over. In Persian.—Lieut. J. Kemball, 26th N.I., and Mr. A. Rogers, Civil Service. Guzarattee.—Lieut. Raikes, and Mr. Hernson, Medical Service. Maharattée.—Lieuts. COURT MARTIAL.

CAPT. EDWARD MAITLAND NIXON, 6TH N.I.

Head Quarters, Mahabuleshwar, Oct. 23, 1851.—At an European general court-martial, assembled at Bombay, Oct. 2, 1851, and of which Lieut.-Col. C. S. Stuart, 14th N.I., is President, Capt. E. M. Nixon, 6th N.I., was tried on the following charges, viz. :—

Capt. E. M. Nixon, late pay-master 6th N.I., placed in arrest by my orders, and brought to trial on the following charges, viz. :—

1st. For disgraceful conduct, in having at Bombay on or about August 5, 1851, embezzled and fraudulently misapplied the sum of Rs. 600, being a part of the sum of Rs. 13,000, intrusted to him by the presidency pay-master, for the payment of the 6th N.I., for the month of July, 1851.

2nd. For disgraceful conduct in having at Bombay, on or about Aug. 11, 1851, wilfully and knowingly rendered to Lieut. J. Harper, the acting pay-master of the 6th N.I., a false statement of his cash account, from August 1 to 11, 1851, showing an advance of only Rs. 12,400, as received in that period, whereas he had received from the presidency pay-master on, or about August 5, 1851, an advance of Rs. 13,000.

3rd. For disgraceful conduct, in having between Feb. 9, 1846, the date on which he assumed charge of the regimental pay-office, and Aug. 11, 1851, embezzled and fraudulently misapplied the sum of Rs. 1,724,14,9, or thereabouts, being moneys intrusted to him as regimental paymaster for military purposes.

(Signed) J. M. SMOAT, Lieut.-col. com. 6th reg. N.I.

Upon which charges the Court came to the following decision :—

Revised Finding.—The first charge guilty, with the exception of the words "disgraceful conduct in," and "embezzled and fraudulently;" of the second charge guilty, with the exception of the words "disgraceful conduct in," and "wilfully and knowingly;" of the third charge guilty, with the exception of the words "disgraceful conduct in," and "embezzled and fraudulently," the sum so misapplied being, in addition to that set down in the first charge, nine hundred and eighty-seven rupees and eight annas.

Revised Sentence.—The Court does now adjudge the said Captain Nixon to be cashiered.

(Confirmed)

J. GREY, Lieut.-gen., Commander-in-Chief.

Remarks by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.—After a full consideration of all that is recorded upon the proceedings of this trial, I have felt it my imperative duty to confirm the revised sentence, and to give effect to the same. I am compelled at the same time to record my disapproval of the revised finding of the court, for the following reasons, viz. :—

1st. It appears in evidence before the court, that the prisoner signed a receipt for Rs. 13,000 on account of the pay and allowances of 6th regt. N.I.

2nd. In virtue of the receipt, he obtained from the military pay-master at Bombay a cheque upon the Bombay Bank for the above sum.

3rd. Upon the delivery of the cheque he received bank notes and rupees amounting to the sum of Rs. 13,000.

4th. In the prisoner's letter (E in the Appendix), given in evidence before the court, he states, "It is true there is a total deficiency, which has from time to time been applied as advances of Rs. 1,500 to myself, with the full intention of reimbursing the treasure-chest. One item of the above amount, viz. Rs. 600, was taken as an advance, with the almost certainty of refunding the same in a few days. This amount I took as an advance when I drew pay for the regiment from the Bank of Bombay; an urgent pecuniary call caused me thus to act."

5th. In the prisoner's letter (E in the Appendix), given in evidence before the court, he states, "I have no excuse, and was tempted to this disgraceful act by my state of pressing embarrassment, with the full intention of repaying the amount as I had at the same time the promise of receiving a large loan."

6th. Private Ram Sing (fourth witness on the prosecution), the quarter master's orderly, states in evidence, that the prisoner received the sum of Rs. 200, out of the treasure chest, in addition to sums given to him out of the same chest on account of his pay, of which sum Rs. 504 had been repaid, leaving a deficiency of Rs. 1500 in the chest, Rs. 600 of which are stated to be an advance made to Captain Nixon on the 6th of August last.

7th. In addition to the above, there is a memorandum of a cash account (C in the Appendix), given in evidence before the court, and which is signed by the prisoner himself, in which the following false entry appears: "6th of August, received advance Rs. 12,400."—It is known that an advance of Rs. 13,000 had been received by the prisoner, Rs. 600 of which he has acknowledged to have applied to his own purposes. It is, therefore, most improbable that, with the foregoing evidence, this entry was made otherwise than knowingly and wilfully.

8th. It is also to be remarked, that this memorandum bears a prior date to that of either of the letters, in which the prisoner confesses the deficiency of money in the treasury chest. The conclusion naturally is, that he confessed only when his acts could no longer be concealed.

9th. Again, the examination of Balcrustna Purvoo by the same prisoner, was conducted by leading questions to prove that he, the prisoner, merely glanced at the rough draft of the statement of his cash accounts, and returned it to the Purvoo to copy, to which copy (Memorandum C in the Appendix) the prisoner affixed his signature. It is not credible that so important an item (Rs. 12,400) in so important a document could have escaped the prisoner's notice, when the circumstances under which the statement was directed to be drafted are duly considered.

10th. No evidence could more clearly establish the prisoner's guilt in the third charge upon which he has been arraigned, than that just recited, with the exception of the extent of the amount stated in the third charge to have been embezzled. Under a charge of embezzlement it is enough for a prosecutor to produce facts such as, in the mind of a reasonable man, must raise an unequivocal presumption of guilt, if not explained satisfactorily by the accused, and on the present trial facts were produced by the prosecutor, and no satisfactory explanation whatever offered by the prisoner, but, on the contrary, he confessed having committed a "disgraceful act," and has given as his only excuse, that he was tempted to it by his state of pressing embarrassment.

The above reasons were offered to the consideration of the Court, when called upon to revise its finding, and although I question not the conscientious discharge of their duty by the members composing it, by adhering to their former opinion, I feel confident that the officers of the Bombay army generally will join me in repudiating the very lax and dangerous principle which the finding involves, that an officer and gentleman intrusted by Government with the charge of public money may secretly appropriate the same to his own private use, and yet be absolved from having committed an act of a fraudulent and disgraceful nature, upon the mere plea that he has only taken it as an advance of pay, with the full intention, of the truth of which intention no one but himself can possibly know, of returning it.

(Signed) JOHN GRAY, Lieut.-gen., Com.-in-Chief.

The name of Capt. Edward M. Nixon is to be struck off the strength of the army from the date of publication of this order at Bombay, which is to be reported to the adjutant-general of the army.

CEYLON.

An event has taken place at Kandy, which is not the least gratifying amongst the signs of progress in Ceylon. At a large assemblage of Kandian chiefs and others, it was determined to form an association for the promotion of arts and sciences amongst the Singhalese, by the establishment of industrial schools and a native press. A sum of 50l. was at once subscribed, and subscription papers are scattered over the country. The proceedings of the meeting have been printed in Singhalese and circulated.

CHINA.

Keying, the governor-general of the two provinces of Kwang-tung and Kwang-se, afterwards guardian of the heir-apparent, a cabinet minister, &c., published a short time back a work, in which he bears the following remarkable testimony to the "goodness" of the Christian religion:—

"In the Dictionary of Kang-he, it is said, 'Jesus western nations designate the Saviour of the world.' The books translated by western men narrate the actions he wrought with great perspicuity. His religion regards the worship of God (shin), and repenting of sins, as its essentials; and its teaching is, that, in the world, there is only this one creating, celestial God (T'ien-shin), who has power to rule all things and creatures; who is everywhere present, and knows all things. Looking down upon the earth, he commiserated mankind, and commanded his ruling (te, 'imperial ruler') son Jesus to descend and be born into this dusty, toilsome world. He gave up his body to save the world; he died and rose again to life; and many were the miracles he wrought. Those who believe in him do not worship images; but in public places, or in their private rooms, they purify their hearts, and repent of their errors, and, turning their faces towards the creating God in the empty space (or firmament), they kneel and worship, beg forgiveness for their sins, and implore blessings.

"Last year, I was commissioned to go to Leang-kwang, and also received the emperor's commands to tranquillize the affairs of the foreigners, and I therefore made strict inquiry concerning the religion practised by western men, in order to ascertain whether it was corrupt or pure; and having carefully examined all the time I was there, I came to know that what they teach had really nothing in it which was not good. I felt that I ought, therefore, to memorialize the emperor, and request that, showing kindness to men from afar, he would not persecute or prohibit it.

"Now it happened that my private secretary, Le, told me of his sickness during the previous winter, and how that, when all recourse to the gods, to the doctors, and the diviners, had utterly failed, he chanced to hear of what western men teach concerning praying for blessings; and at once turning his face towards the sky, he prostrated himself (made the ko-to), and prayed, calling on the names of the God of Heaven and of Jesus. The next day he was quite well, and from that time, whatever he asked in prayer he at once obtained."

The original of his extraordinary statement is given in the Chinese Repository for January, 1851. It proves, moreover, that the correct rendering of the word "God" into Chinese is shin.

The North China Herald publishes the following translation of a placard, numerous copies of which had been posted about the city of Shang-hae, creating much excitement amongst the people:—

"The Patriots and Honourable Men of the People of the Ta-tsing Dynasty give Public Notice of their Mandates, for the information of the detestable Barbarians.

"Ye hateful barbarians! Hateful barbarians! Try and look at yourselves as reflected in a mirror. Ye are only distinguished from brutes by possessing the power of speech; in no other respect do ye differ from wild beasts. Our people, in addressing themselves to you, have a regard to reason, circumstances, and the laws; but to the last ye are blindly stupid, and will not understand. There is left then for us but one way to finish your business, and that is, to decapitate and so slaughter the whole of you. For, since you entered the Central Nation, to carry on free trade, your whole career has been most outrageous, and reckless of the consequences. You have injured our lives with your opium; with your ships you have seized upon the sources of our gains; insatiable as the devouring whale, greedy as the silkworm for the mulberry leaf, the more you get, the more you seek to obtain. You have forcibly rented and obstinately usurped land; destroyed people's graves; erected innumerable devil's buildings (i.e. Protestant churches) within the city; and now you wish to open a road for horses, to establish a place for keeping horses, and to build a Roman Catholic church in the city of Sung-kiang. The measure of your iniquities is full to overflowing, and your crimes swell up to the sky; but high heaven is in wrath, and has commissioned our people to destroy you with a godlike artillery. Ye flatter yourselves that, by your clever schemes, you will accomplish your ends, and you act as the tiger or the wolf does among other beasts; but know ye not that our people look on you just as birds in a cage,—fish in the pan,—dogs in a trap,—sheep in the pen? In a single morning, when the rage of the multitude simultaneously bursts forth, ye, detestable barbarians, will be utterly exterminated, and not a trace of you left behind. This our edict is issued for your information.

"Annexed are the Four Rules of the Agreement of the People for the Destruction of the Barbarians.

"1. We are to annihilate the detestable barbarians with a god-like artillery; every barbarian shall be murdered at sight, and left no longer to defile the land of the Central Nation. The mandates of our leaders must be obeyed as to whether they are to be captured alive, or to have their heads cut off forthwith.

"2. The object of the people, in exterminating the detestable barbarians, being the security and preservation of the country, no person else is to be rashly killed, nor a single family annoyed. Those disobeying this, will themselves be slain by the leaders of the people.

"3. We will secretly appoint a day for the execution of the work, and complete the massacre by treachery. Those natives of China who are studying in the schools of the barbarians, or who are employed as servants, as well as those trading with them, must quickly retire, and each return to his former occupations, as becomes the loyal people of the Ta-tsing dynasty; if they remain as before, then, when our godlike artillery opens, they will be destroyed indiscriminately with the barbarians (lit. the gem and the pebble will be confounded together), and after repentance will not avail them.

"4. The mandates of our people are most severe, and the work is to be performed according to justice and equity. After the extirpation of the detestable horde is completed, all their goods and property will be bestowed as rewards (on those who distinguish themselves)."

During the past few days Chinese hawkers have been vending roughly executed maps of the Kwang-si province, showing the different positions of the rebel and imperial armies. We have two of these maps now before us. Through the centres of both, as from east to west of the province, a large river is delineated (although that cannot be its correct course), dividing it into two parts. On the southern (the imperialist) half, bordering the river, are three forts—the easternmost, containing 3,000 men, the centre, 4,000, and the westernmost 3,000. In the south-east corner stands the battlemented walls of Kwei-lin-fu. Outside the walls of Kwei-lin General Tungkow is encamped with 3,000 men, having a great cannon, weighing 3,000 catties. In the south-west corner, other embattlemented walls represent a place called Woo-e (we fancy this must mean Woo-kang, in Honan, about eighty miles north of Kwei-lin), and here it is written the wounded soldiers of Ho-nan are left to be cured. General Chao-t'ien-tso, with 2,000 troops, is in possession of this town, he also having another great 3,000 catty cannon. On the northern half of the map we have T'ien-teh's head-quarters depicted, as near to the market-town of San-ho, which has a large dyke in front, in a very mountainous country. More than eighty-three rich villages are spoken of, with abundance of maize. On the north-east corner, the road to Hoo-kwang is delineated, and on the north-west the road to Nan-hung. Here and there spaces are marked—"soldiers (rebels) in ambush"—"an artificial mine filled with gunpowder"—"Tung-t'ien-hang's troop of 3,000 men posted along the Nan-hung road"—"Forces exceeding 30,000 in number encamped in the woods adjacent."—Tang-wing-hang's force of 6,000 men on one, and So-san-neang's force, also of 6,000, on the other side, of a high mountain, several thousand le in circumference, with bridges and flags, the principal bearing the characters T'ien-teh-wang, "king T'ien-teh."

It is rumoured in Canton that a great battle was (or was to have been) fought near Kwei-lin-foo on the 10th instant. The result of the engagement is looked forward to with much anxiety, as it will probably determine the fate of the empire. Kwei-lin-foo has a water-communication with Canton, the distance from the two cities being but a little over 300 miles; and yet we are nearly a fortnight in getting the news now given, although it is said to have come by fire express.—Friend of China, Sept. 24.

SIAM.

Under the new sovereign, or rather the joint sovereignty, of which the late prince and priest Chow-fa-mong-kut is now the reigning head, foreigners, generally, are said to be in high favour, and much good is anticipated to result from a reign begun under such auspicious circumstances. A report is current that his majesty is anxious Sir James Brooke should return and reconsider the treaty his excellency was desirous of concluding with the late sovereign. The king also proposes to erect a college for the sons of the nobility, and has already requested the American missionary ladies in Bangkok to attend at the palace, weekly, and give instruction to the princesses of his court.

AUSTRALIA.

THE HUNDRED-WEIGHT OF GOLD.—Mr. Suttor threw out a few misty hints about the possibility of a single individual digging four thousand pounds worth of gold in one day, but no one believed him serious. It began to be whispered about town that Mr. Kerr, Mr. Suttor's brother-in-law, had found a hundred-weight of gold. Some few believed it, but the townspeople generally treated the story as a piece of ridiculous exaggeration. The following day, however, a pair of greys in tandem, driven by W. H. Suttor, Esq., M.C., made their appearance at the bottom of William-street. In a few seconds they were pulled up opposite the Free Press office, and the first indication of the astounding fact which met the view was two massive pieces of the precious metal, glittering in virgin purity, as they leaped from the rock. The two pieces were freely handed about amongst the assembled throng, and the vehicle was pointed out as containing a square box, the repository of the remainder of the hundred-weight of gold. It was then conveyed to the Union Bank of Australia. In the presence of the manager, and the fortunate proprietor, Dr. Kerr, the weighing commenced, Dr. Machattie officiating, and Mr. Farrand acting as clerk. The two pieces alluded to weighed severally 6lbs. 4oz. 1dwt., and 6lbs. 13dwts., besides which were sixteen drafts of 5lbs. 4oz. each, making in all 102lbs. 9oz. 5dwts. From Dr. Kerr we learned that he had retained upwards of 3lbs. as specimens, so that the total weight found would be 106lbs., all disembowelled from the earth at one time. And now for the particulars of this extraordinary gathering. A few days previous to the finding, an educated aboriginal, formerly attached to the Wellington mission, and who has been in the service of Mr. W. Kerr, of Wallawa, about seven years, returned home to his employer with the intelligence that he had discovered a large mass of gold amongst a heap of quartz upon the run, whilst tending the sheep. Gold being the universal theme of conversation, this sable son of the forest was excited, and provided with a tomahawk he had amused himself by exploring the country adjacent to his employer's land. His attention was first called to the spot by observing a spot of some glittering yellow substance upon the surface of a block of the quartz, upon which he applied his tomahawk and broke off a portion. He then started home and disclosed the discovery to his master, who was soon on the spot, and in a very short time the three blocks of quartz containing the hundred-weight of gold were released from the bed where they had rested for ages. The largest of the blocks was about a foot in diameter, and weighed 75 lbs. gross. Out of this piece 60 lbs. of pure gold was taken. Before separation it was beautifully encased in quartz. The other two were something smaller. The auriferous mass weighed as nearly as could be guessed from two to three hundred-weight. Not being able to move it conveniently, Dr. Kerr broke the pieces into small fragments, and herein committed a very great error. As specimens, the glittering block would have been invaluable. From the description given by him, as seen in their original state, the world has seen nothing like them yet. The heaviest of the two large pieces presented an appearance not unlike a honey-comb or sponge, and consisted of particles of a crystalline form, as did nearly the whole of the gold. The second larger piece was smoother, and the particles more condensed, and seemed as if it had been acted upon by water. The remainder was broken into lumps of 2lbs. to 3lbs. and downwards, and were remarkably free from quartz or earthy matter. The locality where the gold was found is the commencement of an undulating table-land, very fertile, and is contiguous to a never-failing supply of water in the Murroo Creek. It is distant about fifty-three miles from Bathurst, eighteen from Mudgee, thirty from Wellington, and eighteen to the nearest point of the Macquarie River, and is within eight miles of Dr. Kerr's head station. The neighbouring country has been explored since the discovery, but, with the exception of dust, no further indications have been found.—Bathurst Free Press.

The same journal states, that a body of gentlemen in Sydney, at the head of whom are the colonial secretary and the speaker of the Legislative Council, have resolved to make an offering to the Queen of England which shall be worthy of the queen's acceptance,—“a crown of pure gold.”

COREA.

Christianity was first introduced into Corea by the Christians in the invading army from Japan, about the close of the sixteenth century. Its followers would, however, seem to have dwindled away, until near the end of the last century, when some members of the Corean embassy at Peking, who were studying mathematics under the Roman Catholic missionaries there, were converted by them. Returning to their own country, they revived and extended the worship of the western faith. Frequent and severe persecutions have harassed its followers, many of whom have died for their religion; and in 1839, when European influence in China seemed utterly crushed, and persecution against the Christians raged there, the Corean government, which had uniformly endeavoured to prevent the access of Europeans to their country, did not hesitate to condemn to death three French missionaries who fell into their hands. Many natives suffered at the same time; nevertheless it is computed that there are about 15,000 Christians still in the country.

There are at this time two European missionaries in Corea, where their lot is much worse than in China. The northern frontier is too strictly guarded to admit of communication by that route, while the coast is so extensive and the islands are so numerous, that a vessel may long search in vain for their messengers, as was the case with a lorch sent up last year. Hence, from the difficulty of sending them assistance, their life is one of misery and privation; their adherents are among the poorest of the people, and they themselves, although satisfied with the plainest fare, have been sometimes at a loss for their daily bread.—Visit to Corea.—Friend of China.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The following extract from the Bishop of Cape Town's "Visitation Journal" affords evidence of some weight in favour of the conduct of the Cape authorities towards the native tribes:—

"I feel it right to express here my firm conviction that neither the present Caffre war nor the rebellion of the Hottentots has been brought about by any oppression on the part of the Government of this country. There are features in our border policy of which I cannot approve; but our government of British Caffraria has been wise, just, and humane. We have, it is true, held military possession of the country; it was essential to our own safety that we should; but we have not interfered with the government of the chiefs more than was absolutely necessary; and, when we have interfered, it has been to protect the oppressed. The real causes which have led to the present war with the Caffres are,—1st, that under the system that was established the chiefs' power was gradually fading away; 2, cattle-stealing was put a stop to by a very efficient police; 3, the distress consequent upon the severe drought of last year; and 4, a knowledge of our internal divisions, and the alienation of feelings between the white and coloured races, and between the English and the Dutch. For the Hottentot rebellion there is no excuse whatever. The rebels of the Kat river had one of the finest parts of the country given them to live in. Government dealt most liberally with them. Sobriety and industry would have enabled them to take their place among the landed proprietors of the country. That the white man has failed in his duty to the coloured races in South Africa—the Christian to the heathen—I do not deny; I feel it to be a great reproach. But, whatever may be the amount of his shortcoming in this respect, it would be a grievous wrong to assign it as a justification of the rebellion which has spread over so large a portion of the eastern province."

In China, an author has recently been executed for a crime unheard of in any other country. Wanting a word to express his meaning, and not finding it in Kanghe's dictionary, he concocted a character. The penalty for this offence, according to the law, is death, and the block-cutter, who perpetrated it for printing, had much difficulty in preserving his head also.

It is remarkable that Sir George Anderson, the Governor of Ceylon, when on his way to India as a writer for the East-India Company's service, thirty-seven years ago, was a passenger in the same ship which brought the first band of Wesleyan missionaries to the shores of that island.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

M. Mohl, the sub-secretary of the Asiatic Society of Paris, at its twenty-ninth anniversary, in his annual report upon the labours of the Society during the past year, took a comprehensive view of the state and progress of Oriental studies.

He premised that the third and last volume of the Chronicle of Kashmeer, by Capt. Troyer, was in the press, and that, when this work was completed, the Council proposed to take into serious consideration a plan, long in preparation, for publishing a collection of Oriental Classics. "We shall select," he says, "important works,—that is, those which will supply wants greatly felt, and, happily, materials are not deficient; the National Library will furnish us with them in abundance. We shall add to the original texts French translations, because an Oriental book is not really accessible until translated, and we wish to open the treasures of Eastern literature to the general historian and the lover of letters. But we have a still more important reason. The French language has begun to be studied by the Musulman population on the shores of the Mediterranean, and we hope to be able to give a new impulse to this civilizing movement, by furnishing Arabs and Turks with the means of learning French in accurate translations of works they are accustomed to respect." It is not intended that the texts should be accompanied by commentaries. The prices of the works will be fixed as low as possible.

M. Mohl next recapitulates some of the principal articles published in the Journals and Transactions of other Asiatic Societies, beginning with that of Calcutta, "the most ancient and the most active;" and concluding with the American Oriental Society and that of Jerusalem. He then proceeds to notice the original works on Oriental subjects which have appeared since 1849.

Commencing with Arabian literature, he observes that, in the historical department, it had made a progress which, twenty years ago, would have appeared chimerical. Dr. Weil, Professor at Heidelberg, has published (1851) the third and last volume of his History of the Caliphate of Bagdad, the first complete history of the Caliphate written in conformity to the rules of European criticism, and deduced from original sources. It is confined to political incidents; but M. Mohl hopes that the learned author will perfect his work by adding a history of the empire in its social aspect. M. Wiistenfeld has brought out at Göttingen (1850) an autographed edition of Ibn Koteyba's Manual of General History, which has never before been published entire; it is one of the earliest essays made by the Arabs at general history, and contains a multitude of curious facts. The same author has also published (1850) the text of a little work composed by Mohammed Ibn Habib in the ninth century of our era, treating of the names of Arabian tribes. "It is the only thread which connects the traditions preserved in the Desert and not fixed by writing until several centuries after Islam;" and is a valuable auxiliary to ancient Arabian history. Dr. Haarbrücher has printed at Halle (1850) the first volume (with a translation into German) of the History of Religious and Philosophical Sects, by Sharistani, an author of the thirteenth century of our era, the subject of which at an early period attracted the attention of European scholars, and Mr. Cureton published some years since the original text, promising an English translation. Dr. Haarbrücher's first volume contains the author's account of the Musulman sects, Jews, Christians, and Dualists. Sharistani is remarkably tolerant for a Musulman, and expounds the opinions of the different sects with historical impartiality. Dr. Sprenger, principal of the Delhi College, has published, in conjunction with Mamluk al Aly, head mowlawy, a lithographed edition of the Tarikh Yanyyny, or History of Sultan Mahmud of Ghaznah, by Othy, a contemporary, who appears to have died before the prince, as his history does not contain the events of the later years of Mahmud's life. Othy, though an exact and minute chronicler, confines himself to court intrigues and military expeditions. It is, however, important to possess a faithful record of facts of this eventful period. M. Defrémery has given a translation of the travels of Ibn Batuta in Asia Minor, which he visited at a period of extreme disorganization. But the most considerable work in this department noticed by M. Mohl is Ibn Khakun's History of the Berbers, which the Baron de Slane has published (1847-51) at Algiers, by order of the French Government, and which attests his skill and erudition. "The difficulties which the original work offers are very great; not only is the style unequal and often obscure, but the matter is extremely complicated."

After noticing the Ouvrages Arabes of M. Dozy, of Leyden, and his Researches into the political and literary history of Spain during the Middle Ages, and referring to the continuations of various works, the commencements of which had been previously announced, M. Mohl passes to the antiquities of Mesopotamia, claiming for France the glory of having initiated the recovery of the Assyrian monuments. He rapidly reviews the results of Mr. Layard's labours at Koyunjuk and Babylon, and those of Mr. Loftus on the Lower Euphrates; and, in noticing the publication of the Assyrian inscriptions brought to England by the former, he regrets that printed characters were used, instead of engraved or lithographed, as, in characters imperfectly known and complicated, slight differences are apt to be overlooked or exaggerated. M. Grotefend, he observes, has given the figure of a new Babylonian cylinder, accompanied by remarks upon the analysis and sense of certain characters; and M. de Sauley has published "Researches" on these inscriptions. "He has endeavoured in the outset to establish the historical ground he intended to occupy by means of the chronology of the empires of Nineveh, Babylon, and Ecbatana, availing himself only of evidence, biblical and profane, known before the discovery of the cuneiform inscriptions." The result at which he has arrived is, that the language is Semitic and akin to the Chaldee, and that the alphabet, having been syllabic, had become alphabetic, preserving, however, numerous traces of its origin, especially in homophon characters. M. de Sauley has given a translation of the first part of the great inscription which M. Botta found at Khorsabad.

M. Mohl mentions, amongst other works, the Memoir, read by Mr. Hinks before the Royal Irish Academy, upon the inscriptions of Khorsabad, and the "Commentary on the Cuneiform Inscriptions of Babylonia and Assyria," by Col. Rawlinson, inserted in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, remarking, with reference to the last, that "this preliminary memoir contains only an indication of the philological and historical results at which the author has arrived, so that it is impossible to form any opinion as to the method he has followed, or as to the bases of his conclusions." He looks forward with great interest to Col. Rawlinson's great work on the Assyrian portion of the inscription of Bisutun, which, he says, will multiply the means of study, and "become for Assyrian inscriptions what the Rosetta stone has been for Egyptian hieroglyphics."

Upon the subject of Zoroastrian literature, M. Mohl observes that the text of the Zendavesta has recently occupied the labour of various scholars. Dr. Brockhaus has published at Leipsic (1850) a new edition of the Vendidad Sadeh, adding to the text a glossary, and a translation of the 9th chapter of the Yacna; and M. Lassen has printed at Bonn part of the text of the Vendidad in Zend characters. Two complete editions of all the Zend works are announced,—one by M. Westergaard, at Copenhagen, the other by M. Spiegel, at Erlangen,—each accompanied by a new translation and commentaries: M. Spiegel's will also contain a translation into Pehlevi.

After glancing at the posthumous work of M. Saint-Martin on the Arsacides, and Mr. Thomas's "Observations on the Oriental legends found on certain Arsacidan and Partho-Persian Coins," M. Mohl surveys what has been done for the literature of Persia, properly so called. M. Graf has published at Jena a translation of the Bostan of Sadi, and M. Rosen one part of the Mesnavi of Jelalleddin Rumi, both into German verse. To Mr. Forbes Falconer we are indebted for an excellent edition of the allegorical romance of Salaman and Absal, by Mulla Jami, with copious Adversaria. Mr. Morley has given us the History of the Atabegs of Syria and Persia,—a fragment of Mirkhond's work which has not been before printed in Europe; M. von Dorn, of Petersburg, pursues with laudable activity his illustrations of the history of the neglected provinces adjoining the Caspian Sea and the Caucasus, and promises a detailed work on Taberistan; and Mr. Bland, of London, has published an analysis of a Persian MS. on the game of chess, accompanied by many curious facts relative to the history of this game, which, in his opinion, was invented in Persia, carried to India, and thence conveyed under another form to Persia under Nushirvan. The great game which Timur was fond of playing might have been the ancient Persian chess.

Turkish literature next invites his attention. Dr. Pieper, of Hirschberg, in Silesia, has published a Turkish Anthology, rendered into German; M. Beresine, of Casan, a work on Turkish dialects, the result of several years' travelling amongst different Turkish tribes; and Mirza Kusem Beg, of Petersburg, has given an edition of the Derbend Nameh, a record of events in Daghestan.

M. Brosset has begun to print a Georgian history, entitled "Chronicle of Wakhtang V." The body of the work is more ancient; it has been completed to the commencement of the last century, by order of the king whose name it bears. In respect to Armenian literature, M. Dulaurier has translated from the Chronicle of Matthew of Edessa a narrative of the first crusade, detailing the events which occurred in Cilicia and the north of Antioch.

M. Mohl then reviews the course of Indian literature during the past year. The study of the Vedas is cultivated, he observes, with great ardour. "In contemplating the hymns of the Rig-veda, so simple, so bare of facts, the products of patriarchal piety in those times when the father of a family was still king and priest,—when we reflect that there have been but three great civilizing movements in the world, the Hindu, the Semitic, and the Chinese; that the history of the human mind is but the development of the conflict of these three elements; we can comprehend the importance of knowing the first effusions of the Indian intellect, and of following them into the unexpected shapes they took, and the immense consequences to which they gave birth." He bestows high commendation upon Dr. Max Müller's edition of the text of the Rig-veda Sanhita, and upon Professor Wilson's translation, which, he says, is made "with an exactitude very difficult to attain in texts of such an antiquity." M. Langlois has added a second and third volume to his translation of the Rig-veda into French; M. Weber, of Berlin, has commenced (1851) an edition of the White Yajur-veda; and M. Roth continues his edition of the text of the Yaska, one of the most ancient collections of interpretations of the difficult passages of the Rig-veda. Among other works on Sanscrit literature, M. Mohl enumerates a Sanscrit Chrestomathie by M. von Hoefel, published in German, at Hamburg; another volume (the 6th) of Sig. Gorresio's edition of the Ramâyana, to be followed by a translation into Italian; an edition of the text of Yajñavalkya, with a German translation, by Dr. A. Stenzler, at Berlin; and two chapters of the Suriya Siddhanta, by the Abbé Guérin, the text being accompanied by a French translation. M. Mohl ends his account of the progress of Hindu literature in Europe by noticing the light which the ancient rock inscriptions in India have cast upon Buddhism, and the further light which that creed and the state of India in the seventh century will receive from the translation, by M. Julien, of the Itinerary of the Chinese Buddhist pilgrim Hsuen-tsang, who, after spending seventeen years in India, on his return to China, wrote in Sanscrit an account of his travels, and of the Buddhist doctrines, which was translated into Chinese, one of his disciples adding a biography of his master. M. Julien has undertaken to translate both these curious works, accompanying his version with a valuable commentary.

The mention of this work leads M. Mohl by a natural transition to the subject of Chinese literature, which, he observes, other nations seem almost to have abandoned to France, although it abounds with materials from whence not merely the literary scholar, but the man of science, may derive advantage. Thus, Baron d'Hervey, in his "Researches into the Agriculture and Horticulture of the Chinese" (1850), has shown that that nation has made an astonishing advance in this branch of industry, and is able to instruct the agriculturists of Europe, as, through M. Julien's translation of a Chinese treatise on silk-worms, it has benefited the silk-manufacture of France. M. Pavie has published the second volume of his translation of the San-kuo che, or "History of the Three Kingdoms," a celebrated historical romance, describing the civil wars which distracted China from the fall of the Han dynasty to the accession of the Tains, or between A.D. 168 and A.D. 265. The Chinese are charmed with the historical reminiscences contained in this work, its dramatic adventures, exploits of illustrious heroes, and traits of character, which have given rise to innumerable proverbial sayings, so that its popularity, which transcends that of any European work, cannot be matter of wonder. It furnishes an example of the manner in which the Chinese employ their ancient ballads and popular traditions, individualizing human virtues and vices in characters more or less historical. In his translation of the Chow-le, or Book of Rites of the Chow Dynasty (1851), the late M. Edward Biot transports us to the twelfth century before Christ. This work, which is an object of religious reverence and incessant study amongst the Chinese, whilst it makes us feel that we are, as it were, confronting a race entirely distinct from ourselves, was composed by Chow-kung, brother of the emperor Woo-wang, who committed to him the moral and administrative reform of the empire. It is in the shape of an imperial Almanack, describing the functions of the several officers, and presenting a picture of the social state of China in that early age. It can be compared to no other work extant, except, in a certain degree, the Code of Menu, which exhibits, though in another form, the social state of ancient India. "Nothing is more curious," observes M. Mohl, "than the comparison of these two ancient literary relics, in which the opposite tendencies of the genius of each nation are so distinctly marked. In China, the spiritual life is wholly political, and the civil wholly imperial; in India, the spiritual life is entirely metaphysical, and the civil altogether municipal."

In conclusion, M. Mohl laments the difficulty experienced in Europe in procuring Oriental works printed and published in the East, the names of which are known, but copies can rarely be obtained. "It is in Europe" he remarks, "that scientific reputations are made, and in order that they should be made, the works upon which they are founded must be seen there. It cannot be credited that Europeans in India are wholly indifferent to literary renown, or to the benefit which their works might render to science."

Corrigenda: the Persian verses at the close of KAMGAR'S letter in our last number should have appeared thus:—

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

THURSDAY, December 4, 1851.

THE approach of the discussions in Parliament respecting East-India affairs, as the last Charter Act verges upon its expiration, is already indicated by sundry prognostics, from which we may collect that the Company's lease will not be renewed without a full consideration and recognition of the whole subject. This is as it should be; for not only are the Company bound, upon such occasions, to give an account of their stewardship, but these are the only opportunities offered of systematically amending and improving the anomalous scheme of administration under which accident and the course of events have placed our mighty Indian empire. The Court of Directors, the executive organ of the Company, having had no view, in undertaking the government of India, when their commercial privileges were withdrawn (as they expressly declared), beyond that of "being an useful instrument in the administration of an important national trust," would be the last persons to deprecate discussion with reference to either object.

One of these indications appears in a Lahore Chronicle received by the last mail, which announces, in a rather confident tone, that a change in the local government machinery is contemplated, and that it is proposed to create a new presidency, that of Lahore, by uniting a portion of the north-west provinces with the Punjab, transferring the seat of the Supreme Government from Calcutta to Simla, or Umbala. "We are given to understand," says the Chronicle,—

"That the Governor-General has, at no very distant period, recorded his deliberate opinion that the Supreme Government should be located in the north-western provinces. The great objection of the metropolitan press to the residence of the Governor-General in the north-west has been founded on the fact of his Lordship's separation from his Council. That objection will be removed, should the earnest recommendations of the Marquis of Dalhousie meet with due attention, by the Council itself being located at Simla. It is, we have recently learnt, his wish to unite a large proportion of the present N.W. Government to the Punjab, and to form the whole into one presidency, to be called the Lahore Presidency: the limits of the two to be somewhere about Allahabad, the Government of Bengal annexing the provinces west of the Soane, as far as Allahabad. The same high authority also contemplates, according to our information, in the event of this plan being carried out, the residence at Simla of the governor of these provinces, the subordinate offices, as well as those connected with the Supreme Government, being located at Umbala. A change will also take place in the constitution of the army, which will, it is said, be divided into 'Bengal' and 'Lahore.' We place sufficient confidence in our sources of information to believe in the authenticity of what we now communicate."

Without assuming that a proposition of this kind has been formally made, we think it not only not improbable, but, on the contrary, very likely, that the information given to the Lahore editor is, in its main features, correct. The "Board of Administration" was obviously a mere temporary expedient (which has well answered its end) for the government of the Punjab; and the necessity of removing the seat of the Supreme Government from Calcutta, which was felt when our frontier did not reach beyond the Sutlej, has, since our acquisition of the Punjab, become imperious.

The latter part of the scheme will, nevertheless, it is probable, meet with most opposition, and there are objections to the removal not wholly without weight. When this subject was agitated twenty years ago, the Governor-General, Lord William Bentinck, recorded his deliberate conviction that the City of Palaces had ceased to be a fit locality for the supreme authority in British India. "On the total inadequacy of a government stationed at Calcutta to control and superintend the administration of the western provinces," he said,* "I have frequently had occasion to remark, and actual investigation has amply confirmed the justice of the opinion." On the other hand, Mr. St. George Tucker† and Sir Richard Jenkins‡ maintained the inexpediency of a removal. The latter considered Calcutta to be the proper seat of a supreme government emanating from a maritime power, and looking to her for support and directions by sea; he argued that the position is most convenient for superintending and assisting the dependencies to the eastward, and urged, in the last place, that the seat of the Supreme Government should be in the most unassailable point, which could be retired upon in case of extremity. But the important changes which have taken place since these opinions were expressed,—by the extension of our western frontier to the Indus, by the steam and overland communication with India, which has made Bombay the port of sea communication with England,—have materially diminished their effect. Moreover, it is not intended to abandon Calcutta, which would, therefore, still remain "a reserve point."

Now that the British authority embraces the entire continent of India, it looks very like an absurdity to fix the metropolis, from whence that authority is to radiate, at an extremity which is the farthest removed from the centre. It has ceased, we think, to be a question whether the seat of the Supreme Government should remain at the mouths of the Ganges,—if, indeed, its head can be said to have resided there for the last two years;—the question is, whether it shall be removed?

Sir Charles Metcalfe§ suggested that the Supreme Government should not be fixed at any particular place, but be moveable to all parts of the empire, the Legislative Council being permanently located at the capital. But there would be manifest inconveniences attendant upon such a plan, which would render it indispensable that the offices attached to the Government, as well as the records, should be likewise migratory.

Before our frontier had overpassed the Sutlej, Allahabad and Agra were positions tolerably central, at either of which the Supreme Government might have been located with advantage; but the annexation to our dominions of so large a territory as the Punjab, still further to the north-west, renders it expedient that the seat of the Supreme Government should be pushed further in that direction, so that it may be near the point where danger is most to be apprehended. Simla and Umbala, though situated at a vast distance from the capitals of the three old presidencies, are favourably placed for that purpose; easy communications may be made between the former and the upper provinces on the one hand, and those of the Punjab on the other; it is a healthy locality, his residence in which will enable the Governor-General to devote his energies more uninterruptedly than heretofore to the high functions of his office, without incurring the evils which must arise from their suspension, or their exercise at a distance from his colleagues, his official advisers, and the public records of the Government.

The erection of the Punjab into a distinct government may be regarded as a measure for which the temporary contrivance of a Board of Administration was merely preparatory. That it will be termed a "Presidency" is not so certain. We can see no reason why this relic of the old commercial nomenclature should not now be discarded, and why Bengal, Madras, and Bombay should not be termed "Governments," instead of "Presidencies," a denomination which, like that of "Factors," has become inappropriate, and will be still more so when conferred upon the territory of which Lahore will be the capital.

ADDISON tells us, in the Spectator,* that there was not, in his time, a prince of any note in Germany "who had not two or three dressed, distinguished, undisputed fools in his retinue, whom the rest of the courtiers were always breaking their jests upon." It would appear from recent occurrences as if, in some of the German courts at least, the fools had got the upper hand, and from the minority become the majority, so that the public measures were tinged more or less with folly. We can hardly otherwise account for an extraordinary step taken by the Court of Vienna,—an attempt to subject the operations of the Austrian money-market to the control of the police, and to coerce by its inflexible will the invisible influences which govern the fluctuations of the exchanges.

The world is familiar with many reported freaks of despotism. Our own Canute tried the experiment of ordering the tides of the ocean to obey his bidding, and a greater despot, who preceded him, thought he could shackle the same element. Chinese emperors and Scythian shen-yus have presumptuously shot arrows and hurled stones at heaven, because it had disregarded their petitions. These extravagancies, however, produced no result which could afford the slightest encouragement to succeeding possessors of irresponsible power. In modern times, monarchs have ordered spurious money to be taken at a nominal value, and punished their subjects who exchanged commodities at their natural price. Nay, even in our own day, a British House of Commons voted that a shilling and a small piece of thin paper were intrinsically worth five pennyweights and eight grains of gold. But no government has, within the memory of man, gone the length attributed to that of Austria. On the 17th November (the precise date of this strange proceeding is worthy of record), the Minister of Police, M. de Weiss, with a commissary of police and a posse of policemen, went to the Exchange, and took note of the brokers, inspected their books, and made out a list of those who appeared to them to be "bearing" the market, and at the last date a considerable section of the mercantile or speculative world had received notice to quit, and were actually on their road to the frontier. The offence with which they are charged seems to consist in this,—that, the operations on the Exchange being based upon the fact that Austrian bank-notes are so depreciated that the difference between paper money and silver is no less than 5s. 11d. in the pound sterling against the former, the criminals sold the silver at its real market value. As it is justly observed in the Times,—which, by the way, has been accused of being bought by the Austrian Government, because it expressed an opinion somewhat adverse to the pretensions of M. Kossuth,—

"The real 'bears' of the Austrian money-market are not the poor brokers who get an honest penny by guessing the daily ups and downs, but the foreign creditors, the consigners of merchandize, the lenders of money, the owners of Austrian stock, who ask payment of their debts in some more solid and convertible form than Austrian notes. The brokers in Vienna are but the agents of the more remote creditors, and, till the latter are extinguished, which they can only be by payment, or the utter extinction of Austrian credit, it is child's play to bully the mere middlemen in the Exchange."

Again, then, we say this act of the Vienna authorities must be sheer folly. The depreciation of the Austrian paper will continue in spite of the police. As well might the farmers of England demand the aid of our police to keep up the market price of their corn.

It appears that, amidst the laughter of the whole commercial world, this farce is still persisted in; the Minister of Police and his myrmidons attend the Exchange daily, watch the fluctuations of prices, and pounce upon any unhappy Israelite who may try to take advantage of the "turn of the market." And this is the way in which the "credit" of the Austrian Government is to be maintained!

Imagine a similar proceeding at our Stock Exchange,—a visit by Commissioner Mayne, with a party of constables in blue and detectives in the ordinary garb. Suppose them to fasten their fangs upon a jobber who bargained for the future delivery of a million of Consols at 90. We apprehend that, amidst the iræ ursarum vincla recusantium, the extrusion of the Commissioner and his party into Copthall Court, and thence into the street, would be instant.

How surprising it is that, with all the explosive elements of political disorganization lying about them, ready to be ignited by the slightest spark, the German Governments are so alert to provoke danger! They have been warned that, next year, another attempt will be made to revolutionize the Continent of Europe, which can only be defeated by a combination of the friends of order; yet they not only neglect means of knitting this party firmly together, but they even strive to disunite them. Is this mistaken policy, or over-refined statecraft? Is it anything else but pure folly?

THE somewhat critical state of our South African colony, by reason of the determined and skilful resistance offered by the Caffres, the slight impression made upon those savages, and the prospect that other native tribes may take part with them, has directed public attention to the question,—upon what principle our relations with the African nations should be conducted?

Before this question can be debated with any hope of arriving at a satisfactory issue, the parties must agree better than they do at present in respect to certain important elementary points, the chief of which is, the character of the Caffre people, the descriptions of which, given by the coercion and conciliation parties respectively, diametrically differ. By the former, the Caffres are represented as little better than ferocious wild beasts, not to be mollified by kindness,—whose appetite for blood and rapine is ungovernable. Sir Benjamin D'Urban, when governor of the Cape, cited the testimony of the Wesleyan missionaries in proof of the irreclaimable nature of those particular tribes, whom they compared to wolves: "if caught young, they might be brought to an appearance of tameness, which they, however, invariably throw off, and return to their native fierceness, as soon as the temptation of blood and ravage, which never fail to elicit their natural ferocity, presents itself to their instinctive thirst for them." These gentlemen added, that, in their missionary labours, although they had succeeded in converting many Hottentots and Fingoes, "they could not flatter themselves that they had ever made a lasting salutary impression upon one of the race of Caffres." On the other hand, the conciliationists allege that the Caffres, uncivilized as they are, have evinced integrity and humanity when treated with justice, and that we have no title to represent them as irreclaimable until the question, whether they can be reclaimed or no, has been brought to the fair test of experiment. It must be acknowledged that other missionaries, as well as travellers in South Africa who are not reproached with any mawkish tenderness towards aborigines, have portrayed the features of the Caffre character in much more favourable colours.

The truth, in this as in other cases of similar discrepancy, lies probably in the mean between the two representations. The savage is, in his best aspect, a being of mere impulse, quick in his sense of wrong, and unscrupulous in his vengeance; but it is only in rare instances that he is insensible to kindness, and above all to equity of treatment, especially from those whom he regards as superior to him in power. If the Caffres, or any other wild tribes, experience, or think they suffer, injustice, they resort to hostilities against those who have wronged them, just as civilized nations used to do, except that, being unacquainted with the Jus Gentium, they believe they may, without a crime, gratify to the utmost their wildest passions at the expense of their adversaries. When we read the harrowing details of the ravages committed by the Caffres upon peaceful villages, and of their slaughter of unresisting men and even children, we are inspired with the same horror as we should feel if those deeds had been perpetrated by civilized armies; whereas this is the accustomed mode of savage warfare.

The circumstances under which the British settlers have been brought into contact with the native tribes, on the Cape frontier, and the tendency to encroachment which is the natural result of the expansion of the colony, must unavoidably engender mutual jealousies; in such cases, where the parties are, on the one side, strangers and intruders, on the other the aborigines of the country, the latter are sure to consider themselves the aggrieved. They behold their lands invaded, their hunting-grounds wrested from them, their means of subsistence gradually curtailed, and find themselves pushed upon and involved in war with more powerful tribes in the interior. The just as well as the safest rule, in our relations with the Caffre tribes, is, therefore, to act towards them with scrupulous equity, with forbearance and conciliation, resorting to force only in the most urgent extremity, and when unavoidable.

It is to be feared that this has not been the policy pursued by the Government of the Cape. The several wars, it is true, have been provoked immediately by the hostilities of the Caffres; but have the colonial authorities and the colonists been innocent of all provocation themselves? In the year 1835, Lord Glenelg, when Colonial Secretary, recorded his conviction* that, in the conduct pursued towards the Caffre nation by the colonists and public authorities of the Cape, the Caffres had "an ample justification" of war, in the encroachments on their territory, and the wanton and oppressive measures which accompanied them; and in the harassing incursions into their country, which, "though conducted under the express sanction and guidance of the authorities, civil and military, of the frontier districts, were yet, it is said, attended by a long series of acts of injustice and spoliation, in the highest degree indefensible."

If there be any foundation for this serious charge,—which is reiterated in terms equally strong in other parts of the same despatch,—the Caffres must not be stigmatized as they have been. A sense of the wrongs of 1835, even if not aggravated in the intermediate years, may slumber in the savage breast until roused into energy of action by some slight provocation in 1851. On the other hand, it must not be overlooked that the Bishop of Cape Town has recently testified, that "our government of British Caffraria has been wise, just, and humane," and that, though there are features in our border policy of which he cannot approve, it would be a grievous wrong to assign the short-coming of the white man in his duty towards the coloured races in South Africa, which he acknowledges to be a great reproach, as a justification of the Caffre rebellion.

Having, however, embarked in this unhappy contest, it must be brought by vigorous measures to as prompt a conclusion as possible. When it is terminated, no further penalty should be exacted from the Caffres than is absolutely required; and it will be well if Parliament were to lay down some stringent rules, which shall be peremptory, for the guidance of the colonial authorities in their dealings with the aboriginal races of South Africa.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—Your Correspondent, "A Mahomedan Moonshee," has done good service by calling attention, at this juncture, to the alleged deficiency of the civil and military officials in British India in a knowledge of the ordinary language of the natives. If his statement be correct (and his means of information, supposing his designation to be real, must be ample), that "he has never met with an Englishman who could correctly read, write, or speak, any of the languages current in India," I can well believe that "grievous mischief" must be the result of such a state of things, which calls loudly for a remedy. If the judges, magistrates, collectors, chief civil functionaries, military officers of all grades, surgeons, &c., are incapable of communicating with the natives without the medium of interpreters of the country, injustice and injury must be done in a multitude of instances, and oppression perpetrated in many.

Schemes have been devised for the amelioration of the Indian people which would be difficult to execute, or costly in the execution. Here is an improvement of vast and primary importance, which is simple and easy, and would cost nothing. Let patronage be rendered strictly subservient to competency. Let no civil or military servant be employed in India until he is thoroughly conversant in the native languages.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

M. G.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—It is now, I believe, placed beyond controversy, that the original and practical views, as to the railway system in India, of the "Old Indian Postmaster" (Mr. W. P. Andrew), so strenuously and repeatedly urged by him in his various publications, have at last found that favour in the eyes of authority, which they ought to have obtained years ago. Had these views been adopted in 1846, much valuable time, and a large and useless expenditure of money, would have been saved.

The selection of the route from Howrah to Rajmahal is due to Mr. Andrew, whose publications on the subject have now compelled the East-Indian Railway Company to abandon its own project for that propounded by him. Mr. Andrew's views were moderate and defined, yet contemplating great commercial and political objects, attaching the utmost importance to making the first move in the right direction, so that the first railway opened should not only prove that railways could be made, but that they would pay.

The promoters of the East-Indian Railway Company, dazzled, no doubt, with the magnitude of the results to be obtained from the gigantic and difficult design which they originated, viz. from Calcutta to Mirzapore, laid it down as an axiom, that "it cannot signify to the Government (who must derive considerable benefit from the measure under any circumstances) which line may be first completed." From this opinion Mr. Andrew, in 1846, entirely dissented, "as it is obviously the interest of the Government, as well as that of the people and the shareholders, that the first line opened should be the one, of all others, possessing the highest political and commercial advantages, combined with the greatest facilities for construction, the most moderate expenditure, and the best adapted for being an integral portion of a great whole." It is not a little remarkable, on reviewing the past and present condition of Indian railways, to perceive that the views of a private individual have prevailed against and finally overthrown the plans of the Indian Railway Commission, approved of by the authorities, and applauded by the press.

The railway companies in Bengal and Bombay that have obtained concessions are carrying out the views of the "Old Indian Postmaster" to the letter, so far as the limited capital at their disposal will allow them; and it may be predicted that, whenever a concession is given for a railway in Madras, it will be for the line that writer so strongly advocated, viz. from Madras to Wallahjanugger, the only short line in India which, in his opinion, would prove commercially remunerative.

"It might have been hoped that the Railway Commissioners would have cleared the way to a satisfactory decision on this subject (the introduction of the railway system into India), with an authority derivable from the soundness of the views enumerated, the variety of new and interesting data, the prestige of office, and acknowledged ability. But their report, beyond giving an official sanction to railroads in general, sheds no new light on the question at issue. The Commissioners, instructed "to suggest some feasible line of moderate length," have devoted the principal portion of their report to recommending the adoption of a railroad of four hundred and fifty miles in length, through the most difficult, unproductive, and desolate portion of a country, elsewhere easy, fertile, and densely peopled.

By recent advices from India, it appears that "the Howrah terminus, indicated by Mr. Andrew, to save bridging the Hooghly, had been adopted, and a section of the line, as far as Pandooah, is either in progress or under contract. The Railway Company have advertised for contracts for a further section, viz. from Pandooah to Raneeunge. There cannot now be a reasonable doubt that the line will be carried ultimately to Rajmahal."

What do ingenious and scientific gentlemen now say to bridging the Hooghly at Sooksauger, "with its banks ever trembling or in locomotion ;" and over the Soane, "to build a bridge as great in all its dimensions as the Blackwall Railway, and the foundations below an unknown depth of sand?"

* Despatch, 26th December, 1835.

I understand that both Major Pitt Kennedy, the late Government Railway Engineer in India, and Major Baker, the gentleman who at present fills that office, fully concur both in the objections of Mr. Andrew to the Mirzapore direct line, and in his suggestions as to the Rajmahl line.

It is apparent that the public owe a deep debt of gratitude to the "Old Indian Postmaster" for having saved the railway enterprise in India from a signal and lamentable failure.

It is manifest that the future destiny of India depends on the success or failure of the first railway opened in that country. If successful as a mercantile adventure, private enterprise would speedily connect the productive and densely-peopled regions, the great cities, and commercial entrepôts of the interior, with the ocean outlets, to the great and lasting benefit of England as well as India; but if the first line proved a failure, then would India sink down in a more hopeless apathy and irretrievable desolation than ever. The horrors of an abundant harvest, which cannot be sold or removed for the want of roads, would still add another pang to the miseries of those in the adjoining provinces, pining and dying for a handful of corn. Famine and pestilence would resume their reign, the happiness and prosperity of the people be retarded for ages, and England's independence of America, for the supply of the raw material for the greatest of her staple manufactures, be more remote than ever.

I believe that important information regarding the Madras line has for some time been under consideration in the India House, and that something definite and satisfactory may be expected very shortly to result from the long-pending negotiations between the India House and the Madras Railway Company.

I am, &c.,

A FRIEND TO INDIAN RAILWAYS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—As the relative of a young officer, who served at the siege and capture of Moulton, may I request permission for a few remarks in your journal on the distribution of the Moulton prize-money?

I need not refer to the long privation and gallantry of the brave men who achieved that brilliant conquest, nor to their subsequent rapid advance and junction with the army of the Punjab, which led to the glorious battle of Guzerat, when not only the Honourable Court of Directors, but all England, was alarmed for the safety of our Indian empire; when, as in other like captures, it was expected that the prize-money would devolve on the captors, in which case the Moulton treasure would probably amount to at least one year's batta, thereby giving six months' more batta to the captors than they have received; but, to their great disappointment, the Honourable Court now propose extending the Moulton prize-money to the whole army of the Punjab, and to make it a set-off to the six months' batta granted to that army, which will absorb the whole treasure, to the great injury of General Whish and his gallant companions, and without any emolument or advantage to the gallant army of the Punjab. These brave men will derive no emolument therefrom in addition to their six months' batta, to which, independent of the Moulton treasure, they are, as in former precedents, entitled. The result is, that if the Moulton treasure had devolved to the Moulton force, the Honourable Court of Directors would have to pay that force the difference between the six months' batta awarded to them and the value of the Moulton treasure, amounting probably to six months' more batta; whereas, by extending the treasure as a set-off to the whole army, the Honourable Court of Directors benefit by the difference, to the great prejudice of the Moulton division, and without any advantage, as before stated, to the gallant army of the Punjab.

In the hope that this view of the case will yet receive a consideration from the Honourable Court of Directors favourable towards the Moulton division, the first and last in the field, in which Lord Gough and the gallant army of the Punjab will doubtless unite,

I am, Sir, yours respectfully,

G. H.

STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH MAURITIUS.

The evidence taken by the Select Committee on Steam Communications with India, &c., comprises the following, upon which the Committee founded their recommendation that the Government should grant to the colony of Mauritius permission to enter into an arrangement to open a steam communication with Aden, for which object the Legislative Council had voted 12,000*l*.

Mr. R. Mc Kerrell, a partner in a firm at Mauritius, where he had resided seven years, stated that the Mauritius depends entirely upon India for the supply of food for the labouring coloured population. The imports from Calcutta, in 1849, amounted to 293,000*l*, and to 391,000*l* in 1848. The monthly consumption of rice in the colony is about 39,000 bags, for which a return is made in bullion and bills. A good deal of specie is also received from India, amounting in 1849 to 214,000*l*. As this supply of coin tends to regulate the exchanges of the colony, and to enhance the value of its sole export, sugar, it is another reason why a regular and speedy communication with Calcutta is of so much importance to the colony. The only communication at present is by sailing vessels,—not packets, but cargo vessels. Sometimes letters are directed to Ceylon, to go on by the steamers, but it is a chance whether they get up sooner. The post to England is by way of Ceylon: small schooners run up to Galle, and take the letters; but it is an expensive and very inefficient mode of communication; four or five months in the year they arrive too late for the steamer, so that the letters are three months coming home. The average passage from the Mauritius to England round the Cape is 100 days. A regular steam communication between the colony and Calcutta would be of great importance to it, as it depends upon Calcutta for food and labour, and receives so much specie from India, and moreover a quick and regular communication would make the colony better known. It is also of the utmost importance that it should have a speedy communication with England, where its sugar is sold, and any Acts passed by the Legislative Council, however urgent, are not valid until approved at home. Replies to letters to England are not got earlier than four months, and if the steamer is missed, which often happens, five months. Letters from Calcutta reach Mauritius in forty or forty-five days. In the autumn of 1850, the Legislative Council voted 12,000*l* for steamers to Aden, for a postal communication with England, and Messrs. Blyth and Co., ship-owners of Mauritius, proposed to carry it out; but the Colonial Office at home had not approved of it. The line to Ceylon would give much more satisfaction to the colonists; what they want is a double line,—a cheap and expeditious passenger and postal communication with Great Britain by way of the Cape, and a connection with India, and also Great Britain, by way of Ceylon. In 1850, the letters and newspapers sent from Mauritius averaged 10,000 a month; the postage yielded about 3,000*l* a year.

Colonel E. Archer, in Her Majesty's service, who is concerned very largely for property in the Mauritius, which he has visited on several occasions, stated that the colonists were very desirous of a quicker communication with England. With steam communication between the Mauritius and Ceylon there would be a very great improvement; but the Legislative Council and the colonists desired a communication with Aden. The difference in the communication between establishing a line from Mauritius, via Ceylon, and a line, via Aden, to England, would be in going two sides of a triangle instead of one. By Aden, the colonists could get their letters ten or twelve days before they could from Ceylon, with which their trade is not important. With the communication between Mauritius and Aden, letters would arrive in thirty-two or thirty-three days; by the screw-steamers round the Cape, the time would be from fifty to fifty-four days. The first and great object is a speedy postal communication, and that would be achieved by Aden.

Mr. J. Blyth, of the firm of Blyth and Green, of London, having a colonial firm of Blyth and Co. at Mauritius, said, their house was prepared to undertake the steam communication between Mauritius and Aden for the sum of 12,000*l*, offered by the Legislative Council: he believed the same sum would not have been voted for a communication to Ceylon. An Indian steam communication would be nothing compared with the importance of a rapid communication with England. There is no trade between the Mauritius and India likely to be carried on by steamers. There is a great deal of bullion sent from India. The Bourbon Government might contribute to the 12,000*l*, if the communication were direct with Aden, but not otherwise. He does not believe that the Mauritius would vote any considerable sum towards keeping up a postal communication with the Cape. The colonists are extremely anxious for a rapid communication with Europe. At present, the average course of post, out and back, to and from England, is from 150 to 160 days.

STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH INDIA, CHINA, AND AUSTRALIA.

The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have issued advertisements, inviting proposals from parties willing to contract for conveying her Majesty's mails fortnightly between England, Gibraltar, Malta, Alexandria, Aden, Ceylon, Madras, Calcutta, Singapore, and Hong-Kong; and every alternate month between Singapore, Batavia, Swan River, or King George's Sound, Adelaide, Port Phillip, and Sydney. The contracts thus proposed to be submitted for public competition embrace a complete revision of the whole mail service between this country, the Mediterranean, Egypt, India, and China, and are intended to supersede and replace the contracts already in existence, which are performed by the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, and which expire in 1852. The Lords of the Admiralty also propose to incorporate in this contract a stipulation for the conveyance of mails between Singapore and Australia, in correspondence with the outward mail packets from England.

The contemplated arrangements embrace many important alterations and modifications of the existing scheme, provide for a more frequent mail communication with our eastern possessions and China, and also a considerable acceleration in the speed at which the mails are to be conveyed, as will be seen by the subjoined particulars.

The service to be tendered for is classed in the proposed contract under the five following divisions:—

"First line.—A line from England to Alexandria and back, monthly, leaving England in the beginning of every month, and calling at Gibraltar and Malta, with a branch from Marseilles to Malta and back, conveying between those two ports the mails which are carried across France.

"Second Line.—A similar line from England to Alexandria and back, monthly, leaving England in the middle of every month, with a similar branch between Marseilles and Malta.

"The ports in England from which the vessels are proposed to start (subject to the approbation of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty), to be specified in the tender. It is to be clearly understood that the times of departure may be fixed and altered from time to time by the Admiralty, an interval of about a fortnight being left between the days of departure of the two lines. If circumstances should render it advisable to substitute any other ports in the Mediterranean for Marseilles and Malta, the Admiralty to be at liberty to do so on payment of a reasonable compensation to the contractors for any additional expense incurred.

"Third Line.—A line from Suez to Calcutta and Hong-Kong and back, monthly. This line will take the mails which have left England in the beginning of each month, and will touch at Aden and Point de Galle, whence one steamer will proceed by Madras to Calcutta, and another by Penang to Singapore and Hong-Kong. These steamers will be met at Aden, both on the outward and homeward voyages, by the vessels of the East-India Company, which will convey the mails and passengers between Aden and Bombay.

"Fourth Line.—A similar line from Suez to Calcutta and Hong-Kong and back, monthly, conveying the mails which have left England in the middle of the month, and proceeding in like manner to Point de Galle, and thence by Madras to Calcutta, and by Penang to Singapore and Hong-Kong. Vessels of the East-India Company will leave Suez at the same time, carrying the Bombay mails and passengers; and the return mails from Bombay will likewise be conveyed in vessels of the East-India Company to Suez.

"Fifth Line.—A line from Singapore to Sydney and back. Every alternate month, a steamer to leave Singapore on the arrival of the outward packet at that port with the mails which have left England in the middle of every alternate month, and to leave Sydney so as to meet at Singapore the homeward packet which will arrive there from China after the lapse of two months. These steamers are to touch both ways at Batavia, Swan River (or King George's Sound, as may be hereafter determined), Adelaide, and Port Phillip."

The tenders for the contract are deliverable on the 26th of February, 1852.

The conditions are long and very specific, embracing the following points: the mails are to be conveyed at the rate of not less than ten knots an hour, on an average of each voyage, except on the Singapore and Sydney line, on which an average will be required of not less than eight knots and a half an hour. The vessels are to be of not less than 1,100 tons for the main lines, and of not less than 600 tons for the branches to Sydney and to Marseilles. The days and hours of departure and arrival at each port to be fixed by the Commissioners, and may be altered by notice to the contractors. The contract may be terminated by either of the parties at the end of eight years. The Admiralty may, during the contract, in case of great public emergency, purchase the vessels at a valuation, or charter them for the public service. No member of the House of Commons shall be admitted to any share of, or benefit from, the contract.

It appears from the conditions, therefore, that a semi-monthly mail packet service is contemplated by the Government between England, the Mediterranean, India, and China, instead of the monthly East-India and China mail now maintained by way of Southampton and Alexandria, leaving there on the 20th of every month. The mail-packet service, hitherto performed by the vessels of the Royal Navy, between Marseilles and Malta, is also to be performed by packet steamers, and is to be included in these arrangements. The line from Aden to Bombay is, however, omitted from these conditions, and the vessels of the East-India Company will continue to convey the mails on that station as at present.

With reference to the Australian mails, only an alternate monthly communication is to be provided by the contractors from Singapore to Sydney, and the route via Batavia, Adelaide, and Port Phillip to Sydney is selected, in preference to the previously recommended line via Torres Straits. It is, however, conjectured that their lordships have it in contemplation also to establish a semi-monthly mail between England and Sydney via the Cape of Good Hope. Tenders for the latter service were invited about three months since. Supposing this to be the intention of the Government, the joint services will establish a monthly communication with Australia, a mail being despatched every month alternately, via Suez and Singapore, and the Cape of Good Hope.

THE WAR IN CAFFRARIA.

On the 21st November, a public meeting, called by the Aborigines Protection Society, on the subject of the Caffre war, was held at the Friends' Meeting-house, Peter's-court, St. Martin's-lane; Mr. C. Lushington, M.P., in the chair. Some time after the hour fixed for the meeting elapsed before an audience assembled, and the attendance was not very numerous.

The Chairman said, he did not belong to the Peace Society, and he had withdrawn from the Aborigines Society; but he attended because it was a Westminster meeting. He conceived that this country had waged a war of excessive severity against the Caffres, and, judging from the preparations now under disposition, he thought the country was about to wage a war of extermination. Humanity, duty, Christianity forbade it; and though this meeting was not very large, yet he trusted it was influential, and that its voice would be raised to protest against measures which, beginning in great harshness and severity, must be prosecuted with cruelty, and end, not in success, but in making this country the object of hatred to the people they sought to subject.

Mr. Chamerovzow, secretary to the Aborigines Protection Society, proposed, and supported in a speech of some length, the first resolution, which was as follows:—

"That this meeting, firmly believing that in our intercourse with the inhabitants of Caffraria, the just policy recommended by Lord Glenelg was equally politic and effective, and that the evidence with regard to affairs in that country confirms this opinion, earnestly desire that our future relations with the native tribes may be conducted on those principles."

The resolution was seconded by Mr. R. Moor, a barrister, and unanimously adopted.

Mr. J. Bell, treasurer of the Aborigines Protection Society, moved the second resolution:—

"This meeting engages, collectively and individually, to promote a more extensive knowledge of the events which have transpired and are at present going forward in our colonies, and more especially in the British territories of South Africa; and this is to be done most effectually by a careful perusal of the works of Dr. Philip, of the Wesleyan missionary Kay, the late Rev. Joseph J. Freeman, of the London Missionary Society, together with the publications of the Aborigines Protection Society."

Dr. Hodgkin seconded this resolution, which, after a defence of the colonists by Mr. H. Follett, was adopted, and the meeting separated.

A Madras journal states that Dr. W. Gay, of Madras, has extracted an oil from a particular species of fish which occasionally frequents that coast, equal in every respect to cod-liver oil.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Mr. RICHARD FRANCIS MORGAN is appointed a member of the Legislative Council of Ceylon.

AUSTRALIAN MINING COMPANIES.—Several of these are announced. The English and Australian Copper Company is formed for the purpose of smelting copper in England and Australia, at works already established at Swansea and in South Australia, which have been hitherto carried on by a small association, by whom the undertaking will be transferred to this company, which has entered into a contract with the owners of the Burra Burra mine, for smelting its ore. The Bathurst Gold-mining Company is formed for obtaining a grant of land in the county of Bathurst, to carry on gold-mining operations. The Australian Gold-mining and Auriferous Quartz-crushing Company is formed for the purpose of mining, and crushing materials containing gold, in Australia, both on public and private lands.

FURTHER SEARCH FOR SIR J. FRANKLIN.—At a meeting of the Geographical Society, on the 24th November, a letter was read from Lord J. Russell to the president, Sir R. J. Murchison, announcing that the Government had ordered a grant of £500 to Lieut. Pim, R.N., towards his projected exploratory search of Sir J. Franklin, upon the supposition that, after passing through Wellington Straits, he may have navigated to the west and by north, in a polar sea, until he got inextricably encompassed by ice, to the north of Behring's Straits. Lieut. Pim has started for St. Petersburg, preparing to reach the north-eastern shores of Siberia, and thence commence his explorations.

CAPT. FAGAN, formerly paymaster at Benares, dismissed the service by general court-martial for his share in some transactions connected with the Benares Bank, has, we are glad to hear, been restored to the service by the unanimous decision of the Court of Directors, heartily concurred in by the Marquess of Dalhousie. Apart from the mere merits of the question, we are rejoiced at this issue, because Captain Fagan is the son of one of the most distinguished and exemplary soldiers who ever held high staff employment under the Indian Government.—United Service Gazette.

CHINESE LABOURERS IN THE WEST INDIES.—The Court of Policy in Demerara, on the 14th October, adopted the subjoined resolutions:—

"1. That it is the opinion of this court, that the sum of 50,000*l.* sterling (a part of the parliamentary loan of 250,000*l.*) should be applied to the introduction of Chinese immigrants.

"2. That this court requests his excellency the governor will be pleased to take the necessary steps for obtaining the sanction of her Majesty's Government for the introduction of Chinese immigrants into this colony."

BOOK POST.—We understand that the Indian Government have approved of the proposal of H. M.'s Post-Master-General, that the book post between England and the Colonies, which is to come into operation on the 1st of March, should be extended to India. The rates for all printed books sent through the post from the United Kingdom to any British colony, and from any British colony to the United Kingdom, to be as follows:—

	s.	d.
A single volume, not exceeding half-pound in weight. . . .	0	6
exceeding half-pound, and not one pound	1	0
exceeding one pound, and not two pounds	2	0 and so on, increasing one shilling for every additional pound, or fraction of a pound. The Indian Government propose, however, that the weight of each parcel be limited to 120 tolahs, or three pounds.

The ships Hindoo and Charlotte have been engaged for the freight of stores to Calcutta.

— The Mofussilite announces that a new uniform is about to be introduced for medical officers in India, namely, black overalls and silk stockings, pumps and buckles, a drab waistcoat, and a dark blue coat, with black lace facings.

The probability of the existence of gold in the mountain-range of Australia was suggested by the Rev. W. B. Clarke, incumbent of St. Leonard's, Sydney (formerly of East Bergholt, Suffolk), who, reasoning upon the dictum of Humboldt, that gold is a constant deposit in meridian-directed mountains,—the Ural, the ranges of California, and the Austrian Cordillera, verifying the dictum,—argued that there is not a greater deviation in Australia from a true parallel to the meridian than there is in the Ural, which is deflected between north and north 35 degrees west in the northern part of its course, and between south and south 45 degrees west in its southern expansion. "There is, however, one striking fact," Mr. Clarke observed, "never before mentioned. If we look at the globe, we shall find that, in the longitude of about 149 or 150 degrees east extends the middle or the meridian chain of Australia, paralleled by similar chains, having similar axes, in South and in West Australia. Exactly 90 degrees from the main Australian chain occurs the auriferous Ural in 60 degrees east, and exactly 90 degrees from the same chain occur the north and south auriferous mountains of California in 120 degrees west. The fourth quadrantal meridian falls along the Atlantic, between Brazil and Africa, both auriferous regions. In three of these meridians the earth has been fissured, and igneous rocks have pierced and transmuted elevated schistose beds. When this fact first struck my mind, I received a fresh light, and, guided by it, I saw that, if a careful examination and comparison of the natural formations of California and the Ural would justify it, I should be safe in positively asserting what I did, and from the effect of which assertion explorers have been led to verify my conclusions." It results that three of the gold ranges are found precisely at the quadrantal divisions of the globe,—in other words, just where an orange is quartered,—whilst the fourth line passing through the Atlantic, the gold may be supposed to have been thrown up from it on the shores of Western Africa (the Gold Coast) and the Brazils (La Plata, &c.).

As soon as the Hottentot women of Genadendal heard that their husbands and sons, in the Levy, would decline to serve against the Caffres after the expiration of their first term, they formed a deputation, begging their missionary teachers to write them not to return and leave his Excellency, but to remain as long as he may require their services.

BOOKS.

A History of British India. By Charles MacFarlane. London, Routledge.

There has been a gush of single-volumed "Histories of India" of late. Mr. MacFarlane tells us he is assured that a concise sketch of the great events of our Indian history is much wanted by the students at Haileybury and Addiscombe, and by young officers and civil servants of the Company in India. This explains the phenomenon.

We noticed recently two works, published apparently with the view of competing for the distinction of being selected as the fortunate class-book, but without any avowal of pretensions on the part of the authors. Mr. MacFarlane, however, is less modest, or more candid. Not only does he intimate in his Preface, that his book (which is dedicated to the deputy chairman of the Court of Directors) was prepared in order to supply the want felt at the two colleges and amongst the services in India, but he, or his publisher, has in a manner forestalled the decision of the East-India Company, by stamping their armorial bearings upon the back of the cover of his book. This, we think, is taking rather an unfair advantage of the other competitors.

The important point for our consideration, however, is the merit of the work, and our duty constrains us to say (painful as it is to pronounce such a sentence), that it is far inferior to its precursors, imperfect as we consider them to be.

With an opulence of materials for such a compendium in the larger histories of India, a writer of ordinary abilities might, with a moderate outlay of labour, get up a creditable volume. But some judgment is required in the choice and use of the materials, some skill is demanded in the structure of the narrative, and some attention should be paid to the style and diction. In all these particulars Mr. MacFarlane appears to us to have failed. He has taken credit to himself for a style eminently concise; he has tried, he says, "to avoid the use of a single superfluous word." He will probably be surprised to hear, as he assuredly will from others besides ourselves, that his style is loose and slipshod, and that its construction in some passages is ungrammatical. We attribute this and other imperfections in his work, not to ignorance or incapacity, but to rapidity of execution. All these writers of abridgments of Indian history, having in view a sudden demand, seem to have been running a race of speed one against another, each endeavouring to get into the market first.

This sniffing of the corn is more apparent, comme de raison, in the latter part of the book, where, in some places, important matters are slurred over in a few words, and in others despatches and state papers are printed in extenso in the text. In p. 571 we have a whole paragraph about the Afghan war, the insurrection at Cabul, and the heroism of General Nott, thrust in, apart from its connection, between the conquest of Scinde and the war with Gwalior.

The students at Haileybury and Addiscombe, who may be perplexed by the disorder of the narrative, will be rewarded by some specimens of Mr. MacFarlane's facetiousness, though we think he has rated their understandings a little too low. Speaking of the Punches, or military committees, of the Sikhs, he says:—"These 'Punches' were not such pleasant humorists as our street drolls, or as the London Charivari Punch, or as the great Neapolitan Policinella, the prince, if not the father, of all Punches. They had no drollery in them; they were seldom seen to smile," &c. This may be thought too much in the manner of Mrs. Markham and the nursery-books.

It seems to be Mr. MacFarlane's desire—and it is a benevolent one—to put every one in good humour with him. His living characters especially are outrageously lauded. The "Honourable Court," all the Governors-General of India except Lord Auckland, who is, however, allowed to have been "a very amiable nobleman, but whose qualifications for the supreme post in the Indian government were not generally considered as being very obvious,"—all the generals who have figured in India, particularly "the thrice illustrious WELLINGTON,"—whose name is distinguished by capitals,—come in for a very liberal share of so much fame as can be dispensed by Mr. MacFarlane, who has something kind and commendatory to say of many of the authors whose works are referred to in his foot-notes. We were curious to see how he would reconcile his eulogy of the "brilliant administration" of Lord Edenborough with his encomia upon the Court that recalled him; but he has extricated himself cleverly from the dilemma.

Mr. MacFarlane may think our remarks upon his work severe; but, being a critic himself, he will know what is the duty of an honest censor.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 14th of May, 1851, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.
20	On or before 14th of May, 1846.	£1,000	£19 6 8	£10 12 8
30		1,000	24 8 4	13 8 7

*. The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assurers to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

COCOA is a nut which, besides farinaceous substance, contains a bland oil. The oil in this nut has one advantage, which is, that it is less liable than any other oil to rancidity. Possessing these two nutritive substances, Cocoa is become a most valuable article of diet, more particularly if, by mechanical or other means, the farinaceous substance can be so perfectly incorporated with the oily, that the one will prevent the other from separating. Such an union is presented in the Cocoa prepared by JAMES EPPS, and thus, while the delightful flavour, in part dependent upon the oil, is retained, the whole preparation will agree with the most delicate stomach.—1s. 6d. per lb.

CHOCOLATE.—Those who require a very light beverage, will find the prepared chocolate adapted to their particular taste: it is thinner and more highly flavoured than the Cocoa, possessing more the advantages of Tea and Coffee.—2s. 6d. per lb.

THE COLONIAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.

The FIFTH ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of this Company was held at Edinburgh, on Saturday, the 1st of November, 1846.

W. M. STUART WALKER, Esq., of Bowland, in the Chair.

Various statements were submitted, showing the progress of the business, and the following Report by the Directors was read to the meeting:—

The Directors have pleasure in reporting, that the Company has passed another year, exhibiting not only the same signs of early and rising prosperity which marked the opening years of its operations, but evincing in its general results an amount of success which the original promoters of the Institution had not presumed to anticipate, bringing out prominently and distinctly, as the progress of the Company is extended, the wide area over which it may yet spread and disseminate its usefulness.

The past year not only contains elements of congratulation, arising out of new connections and increasing business, but it adds another year's satisfactory experience to the ordeal through which the principles and constitution of the Company are so satisfactorily passing.

Since the opening of the books on 2nd August, 1846, the number of Policies issued has amounted to 1,047, and the sums assured to £739,616. 19s. 7d. The following are the annual results:—

The last year—that to which the present Report has particular reference—shows, it will be observed, the largest extent of business yet transacted; and when the whole is summed up, and the general progress of the Company considered, the Directors hesitate not to claim for themselves, and those intrusted with the management of the Institution, at home and abroad, the approval of the meeting.

The actual sum received in the course of the business amounts, exclusive of the company's original capital, to £76,809 13 9. Of which other Offices have received for Re-assurances to protect the Company from excessive risk on single lives during its early progress 11,480 12 7

Leaving £66,329 1 2
And deducting the claims by death which have been met 7,970 13 3

There remains to be accounted for £57,358 7 11 and this sum, under deduction of the expenses of management, and all other charges, has been invested along with the Company's Guarantee Fund, on good security, affording an available capital of upwards of £45,000.

The Directors direct particular attention to the rate of mortality which had obtained since the commencement of the business, showing highly satisfactory results, on a comparison of the probable expectation with the actual occurrences; and they again refer to the subject this year in the same tone of congratulation, but with the same warning as to drawing too rapid conclusions from results extending over so limited a period.

The number of Lives on the books at the end of each year, and the casualties in each year, have been as follow:—

	Number of Lives.	Number of Deaths.
First Year	112	None.
Second	307	2
Third	473	6
Fourth	615	3
Fifth	837	7
	2,384	18

The rate of mortality, making all allowances, has thus been considerably under one per cent.—a result, which, in the most favourable circumstances, could scarcely be looked for, in a class embracing British Lives only.

To meet all the claims which have arisen, promptly, has been the particular study of the Directors,—satisfied that a position of the highest public confidence must be maintained to insure that measure of success at which they aim; and that it is a requisite of that high character which the Company have endeavoured to attain, that all just demands be met, not tardily, but promptly,—affording the best evidence that Life Assurance is the readiest and surest means by which persons of forethought and prudence may make provision for their families.

The Directors have received from the Auditor a satisfactory report of his yearly investigation.

The payment of interest for the past year on the Guarantee Fund will be made at the rate of 5 per cent., free of Income Tax, at the Company's Offices and Agencies, on and after this date.

To the extension of the business generally, the Board of Directors give their anxious attention; but at this time the progress of the Company in the East is more prominently before them, and the Secretary of the Company will proceed to India next month to organize systems of Local Management. This measure the Directors have for some time contemplated; and, in placing their Indian Branch on a more extended footing, they do so with a fixed intention to give to those who avail themselves of the Institution, the benefit of every new and increased facility which experience in the business of Life Assurance has shown to be practicable and safe. Those Life Assurance Offices which have as yet opened a connection with India, do not in any instance offer to the public such comprehensive and liberal terms as this Company are prepared to do; and "The Colonial" will put forth its claims to support, not as a local institution, not as a society of limited extension, but as one offering to the British merchant, to the civilian, to the soldier, to the sailor,—in short, to all who seek its aid,—the benefits of an institution whose Acts and Regulations have been framed with a view to meet the extended and increasing intercourse which has arisen between all parts of the world. Such extension of intercourse has been a marked feature of the progress of the present century; but it is the privilege of these latter years to develop fully the advantages of rapid and easy communication. It was in consequence of, and in concurrence with, such general movements, that the Colonial Company was established; and it will always be the aim of the Directors to keep pace with the progress of the day and its exigencies.

The Directors ask, in conclusion, a renewal of that confidence which has hitherto been recorded to them by their co-proprietors.

The meeting expressed much satisfaction with the progress of the Company, and a vote of thanks was presented to the Board and office-bearers. A vote of thanks was also proposed and adopted to the Local Boards and Agents of the Company. By order of the Directors,

WILL. THO. THOMSON, Actuary.
H. J. WILLIAMS, Secretary.

INTERESTING FACT.—The following singular and authentic case of restoration of the human hair is worthy of observation, more particularly as it relates to an article of high and universal repute during the last half century. Mr. H. Herrmann, of Queen Street, Solihull, had been quite bald for some time past, and had tried various preparations for the recovery of his hair, but without any beneficial result. He was then induced to try the effects of "Rowland's Macassar Oil," and after daily applying it for about two months, he, much to his gratification, had his hair quite restored, and now possesses a beautiful head of hair. This fact speaks too strongly for itself to require comment.—Bell's Weekly Messenger.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL is celebrated throughout the world for its genial and nourishing qualities for the Human Hair. For Children it is especially recommended, as forming the basis of a Beautiful Head of Hair.—Price 3s. 6d. and 7s., family bottle (equal to four small) 10s. 6d., and double that size 21s. per bottle.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for improving and beautifying the Skin and Complexion, eradicating all cutaneous eruptions, sunburn, freckles, and discolorations, and for rendering the Skin soft, clear, and fair.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, for preserving and beautifying the Teeth, strengthening the Gums, and for rendering the Breath sweet and pure.—Price 2s. 6d. per box.

*Beware of SPURIOUS IMITATIONS.—The only genuine of each bears the name of "ROWLAND'S," preceding that of the article, on the wrapper or label, with their signature at the foot, in red ink, thus—A. ROWLAND & SONS. Sold by them at 20, Hatton Garden, London; and by chemists and perfumers.

DUNN'S PORCELAIN WAX CANDLES, 11s. per dozen lbs.—Among the various candles introduced to public notice, these are acknowledged to be one of the most superior articles ever manufactured, and have been universally admired. They give a brilliant light, are transparent as wax, do not require snuffing, free from smell, and have the most perfect appearance of the finest wax. DUNN'S Sovereign Sperm Candles, 11s. 6d. per dozen lbs., are much admired, being delicately white, brilliantly illuminating, exceedingly hard, requiring no snuffing, and are altogether very superior candles. DUNN'S best Composite Candles, 8s. 9d. per dozen lbs.: these are very excellent candles, and are infinitely superior to those candles usually sold as "composite," are hard, white, require no snuffing, and burn with a silvery flame. All these candles are packed for the country in boxes containing 24 lbs., 36 lbs., and upwards. No charge for boxes. JOHN DUNN and Co., Wax-chandlers, &c., 59, Cannon Street, City.—Delivered free 7 miles.

DUNN'S FINE ARGAND LAMP OIL, 4s. 6d. per gallon.—This very superior oil, so largely patronized and recommended by the nobility and gentry, is equally applicable for the Argand, Solar, French Fountain, and every description of Patent Oil Lamps. Its characteristics are the strength and brilliancy of light, without smoke or smell; extreme purity, as it will not corrode the most delicate lamp; greater economy, in the slowness of consumption, compared with other oils, and not churning with the cold. Half a gallon or upwards delivered free 7 miles.—Sold only genuine by JOHN DUNN and Co., Oil Merchants, 59, Cannon Street, City. N.B.—From the great satisfaction this oil has given during the last 12 years, J. D. and Co. are anxious to assure the public it is only to be obtained at their warehouse, as above, as the same name has been assumed for oils of a widely different character.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE religious excitement in Bombay, which it was apprehended would grow into a serious affair, happily subsided without any further tumult. The Mohurrum festival closed peacefully, no attempt at rioting or disturbance of any kind having been made during the ten days it lasted.

Sir Colin Campbell had commenced operations against the Michnee Momunds. The force, consisting of 2,000 men, marched from Peshawur on the 25th October, crossed the Cabul river, and on the 28th commenced the destruction of the enemy's villages, the "rebels," as they are termed, flying to the hills, leaving in our hands a relation of their chief, named Peer Buksh. As yet, the force had not lost a single man, nor was it expected that any actual opposition would be made to our advance, unless on the way to Pandeelee, which can only be reached through five or six miles of hill country, affording immense advantages to a determined foe. By the 2nd of November, the camp being then at what had been the village of Dubb, the lines of a little fort were marked out, and it having been ascertained that a body of Momunds were threatening Mutta, the 2nd irregular cavalry were sent to hold them in check, on which they turned towards the general's force, and it was generally believed, that, on the next move of the camp, something like active work would occur, especially as the Michnees were doing their best to induce Saadut Khan, of Lalpoora, to join them. The latest news from the camp is of the 3rd of November, and dated from "Dubb."

The Lahore Chronicle states, that it is intended to build a succession of forts round the whole district. The Englishman understands that the village (or town) of Michnee is to be held by two companies of Europeans, the Goorkha regiment, and guns, for some time, probably altogether, as the post is an important one. The Delhi Gazette adds:—"We do not think we shall prove incorrect in expressing our belief, that the brigadier will ere long proceed towards the Sawat river, on the other side of which a post will probably be established at a place called Teelee, where an old fort already exists. The most stringent measures, it is said, will be adopted to overawe the turbulent and rebellious, such as burning their villages and destroying their crops." The same paper assigns the following as the cause of the expedition to the Michnee district:—

"One of the chief maliks, named Rahamdad Khan, has been in the habit of levying heavy tolls on the julas, or floats, on which fruit and other articles of merchandise are brought from Jellalabad. His exactions became at last so oppressive and unbearable, that the merchants even last year made earnest representations on the subject to the civil authorities at Peshawur, entreating them to take measures for the protection of trade. Rahamdad Khan was in consequence summoned to Peshawur, nor did he refuse to appear, but, on the contrary, made profuse promises to amend his evil ways and to spare the innocent. No sooner, however, had he returned to his highland fastnesses, than he relapsed into his former courses with even increased violence. The present expedition was therefore despatched to coerce and chastise the insolent marauder."

The force under Capt. Coke, despatched to take possession of the Meeranzaie valley (which is a branch of that of Doon), had met with no opposition. The annexed territory is said to be in a high state of cultivation, and to enjoy the advantage of abundant rains, in addition to the numerous streams that, descending from the hills, intersect it in every direction. Its possession places us in the rear of the Wuzerees, and enables us to intercept the marauders who might attempt to escape into the Cabul territory, after plundering Bunnoo and the lands adjacent to the Salt range.

Matters, it is reported, have been arranged in a tolerably satisfactory manner with the Afreedies, though the fidelity of these tribes is not to be relied upon. It appears that there are two parties in the Kaka Khel; the one favourable to the British rule, the other as warmly opposed to it. In the hope of effecting "a fusion," Capt. Coke despatched two Affghans to confirm the well-affected and bring round the inimical. Of these negotiators Mirza Samad remained as a hostage for the security of the maliks who accompanied his coadjutor to a personal interview with the British officer. The maliks returned to their own people much gratified by the presents they had received and by the manner in which they had been treated. The same success attended the negotiations with the Jalbalaud maliks, only four of whom still hold out.

A letter from Dera Ismael Khan states that, on the 21st October, a body of 300 horse, supposed to be men of the Sheoranee hills, made an attack on the post of the Punjab Irregular Cavalry (the 5th, or Fitzgerald's) at Zufur Khan ke Kote, just under the Sheoranee hills, and taking them almost unawares, cut several of them up.

The death of Dost Mahomed Khan is still unconfirmed, though confidently reported. The Englishman, and some of the Mofussil journals, assert the fact. At all events, he was seriously ill, and, expecting his own dissolution, he had made arrangements for the succession, by placing the turban of rule upon the head of his eldest son, Afzul Khan, who, however, declined the gift in favour of his younger brother, Gholam Hyder Khan. There is every reason to expect that, at the decease of Dost Mahomed Khan, the country will be the scene of a fierce civil war, since Sooltan Mahomed Khan, late chief of Peshawur, brother of the Dost, had secured the powerful aid of the Kohistanes, and was prepared to fight his way to the succession. The mahajuns (Hindoo traders), with the rest of the peaceable inhabitants, are reported to be flying from the land, some into the districts under British rule. Of the other sons of the Ameer, Shere Alee Khan was collecting revenue in the neighbourhood of Ghuznee; Mahomed Ameen Khan was in Kohistan; Mahomed Akram Khan, in Toorkistan; and Mahomed Azeem Khan, with between two and three thousand men, in Khoorum, adjoining the British territory of Bungush, of which Kohat is the capital. Afzul Khan and the rest of his brothers were at Cabul.

The intelligence from Herat is to the effect that a conspiracy had been formed against the present ruler, the son of Yar Mahomed, which he had met with a strong hand, and put down by beheading the chief conspirators.

The health of Maharaja Golab Singh is still represented as precarious; but we observe that he was entertaining European travellers at feasts and nautches so late as the month of September. One of these visitors describes him as active, very agreeable, and exceedingly polite.

Scindiah's dominions were in an unquiet state. Two influential sirdars of the court had been thrown into prison, and another escaped a similar fate by a timely flight—it is said, to the protection of the Baeza Bace. The Agra paper understands that there is a small fort (called Buragurh), between Sceptee and Gwalior, where the Ranees is holding out against Scindiah's Government; and it is probable that a small force will be sent to compel her submission.

The financial question betwixt the Nizam and the British Government has been satisfactorily settled, his highness having, at the twelfth hour, opened his purses and paid off the whole of his enormous debt to the British Government from his private treasury. This was done, it is said, with extreme reluctance, and only under the pressure of knowing that, unless the money was forthcoming, a part of his territory would be certainly occupied.

The Governor-General was to leave Simla on the 5th November, and was expected at Mussooree on the 13th. The Lahore Chronicle, of November 8th, says:—"We regret much to learn, by later letters, that the Marchioness of Dalhousie had suffered so much from the fatigue and exposure to the heat at Pinjore, that the Governor-General was induced to give up his trip across the hills."

The Commander-in-Chief and Lady Gomm were to have left Simla for their camp at Buddee on the 6th.

Our relations with the Burmese are in an unsatisfactory state, and some correspondence has passed between the Governor-General and Commodore Lambert, of H.M.'s S. Fox, the senior naval officer at Calcutta, on the subject of a visit proposed to be made by the commodore to Rangoon, for the purpose of obtaining redress for wrongs inflicted on British subjects there, and for securing better treatment for them in future. It is believed that Lord Dalhousie has decided on trying diplomacy first upon his Burman Majesty, and force afterwards, if the former should prove unsuccessful.

The advices from the Sandwich Islands, which are to the 29th September, represent that much uneasiness existed there, in consequence of a rumoured design to invade the islands by a body of Californians, which is confirmed by letters from San Francisco, whence it appears that an expedition was actually fitting out there "to take possession of the islands, and hold them either in the invaders' own right for ever, or have them annexed to the United States;" and that "two American clipper ships—the Game Cock, of 1,392 tons, and the Witch of the Wave, of 1,498 tons burden—sailed, on the 27th September, with a portion of this expedition, consisting of about 300 volunteers, on board." This scheme surpasses, in its scandalous injustice, the Cuban expedition, which the President of the United States so properly denounces, and is in the very teeth of his declaration, "that those islands should not pass under the control of any great maritime state, but should remain in an independent condition, and to be accessible and useful to the commerce of all nations." The most mysterious part of the affair is, where the funds come from to set this expedition afloat. "The only feasible solution of the mystery," observes the Times' correspondent, "is the following, which, be it true or be it false, came from some of the principals in the expedition :"—

"You are aware that the King of the Sandwich Islands some time ago made a proposition to the United States Government for the surrender of his territories upon conditions which would soon lead to 'annexation,' and, probably, as some say, to an annuity to the monarch, in which arrangement his old and faithful ministers would not be forgotten. But, as I do not know the underplot of this little farce, I can merely mention the current opinion. The gentleman who was the bearer of these propositions touched at San Francisco on his way back, and gave out publicly that he carried a negative answer from Washington, but, at the same time, let it be known privately and confidentially, that the Government would be very glad to have the Sandwich Islands somehow; and would support a movement on the part of California to accomplish the desired object 'on its own hook'—to use the elegant phrase of my informant. Such an intimation, coming from such a source, and through such a channel—for the envoy was the American consul at Honolulu—had its effect, and the expedition was the consequence. Yet, still, this does not account for the 'ways and means.' Touching my inquiries on this point, I was distinctly told that they were supplied by the Government. The truth of this I cannot, of course, vouch for, and can only repeat that it is the statement of one who ought to know all about the expedition."

The latest accounts from the Cape of Good Hope are of a somewhat more favourable character, though the termination of the war, which is said to cost £112,000 a month, appears as remote as ever. Sir H. Smith was still at King William's Town; but an expedition, consisting of 3,000 troops, under Major-General Somerset, against a large body of Caffres, under Macomo, occupying a strong position in the fastnesses of the Waterkloof, had been successful, the enemy having been expelled from this stronghold, "which he held with determination and pertinacity." The loss of the Caffres was considerable; ours was small. Further operations were in progress; but the major-general says, "The country occupied by the enemy is so extensive, and the position he holds so strong and so difficult of access, that I anticipate many days' operations before he can be effectually dislodged." The Caffres were expected to make another stand at Blinkwater. They are said to have been dismayed by the effects of the artillery and the accuracy of aim of the Rifles. In the Orange River Sovereignty, the farmers have made a separate convention with the Basuto chief Moshesh, and the independent emigrant boers beyond the Vaal River have perplexed the authorities by joining Moshesh in calling on Pretorius, commandant-general of emigrants, to interfere for peace in the Sovereignty. Major Warden, the resident, received the letter of the commandant-general, tendering his good offices, courteously. At their last expulsion from the Sovereignty, three years ago, by Sir H. Smith, Pretorius was proclaimed a traitor and an outlaw, and a reward of £1,000 was offered for his capture; and this proclamation has never been recalled. The Assistant-Commissioners Hogge and Owen were to proceed with 1,500 men to the Sovereignty, to settle the affairs of that province. The new constitutional ordinances for the colony were received at Cape Town on the 31st October; but before they could be read in Council, it was necessary to forward them to the Governor, which would occasion a fortnight's delay. The Cape Town Mail says: "From the information which has found its way to the public concerning the nature of the proposed form of Colonial Government, there is reason to believe that it will be satisfactory to the colonists."

OPERATIONS AGAINST THE MOMUNDS.

On the 25th October, a force of about 2,000 men, under the personal command of Brigadier-general Sir Colin Campbell, marched out of Peshawur to chastise the Momunds of Mitchnie, a town to the north of our frontier station, and commanding one of the main roads into Afghanistan. The force consisted of the 3rd company 1st battalion Foot Artillery; No. 17 Light Field Battery; two companies H.M.'s 61st Foot; and two companies H.M.'s 98th Foot, including the light companies of each regiment, under Capt. Colby; the 2nd company Sappers and Miners; a wing of the 71st regt. Bengal N.I., under Capt. Walker; the 2nd Irregular Cavalry, under Capt. Jackson; and the 66th (Ghoorkas) N.I. under Col. Troup. The cause of this "little war" is not very clearly explained in any of the papers, but as far as we can glean from these sources of information, it appears that, besides ill-treating and robbing travellers passing to and from Afghanistan under our safe conduct, one of the tribes of Momunds recently had the audacity to attack a British outpost at the Fort of Shubkuddur, a little beyond Mitchnie, and nearly in the same direction. A correspondent of the Englishman gives the following account of the point of attack:—"Mitchnie, towards which the force has marched, is a considerable town, inhabited by Momunds, but is on the plain a little way from the Eusofzye Hills, and lies within the district of Peshawur, and is under the British rule. The town is an oblong, surrounded by a low stone wall in ruin, and has about 2,000 fighting men. Shahadut Khan wrote to the Mitchnies, falsely telling them that our Government was in some way about to oppress them, and this has caused them to join with Shahadut Khan, who with all his Momunds owns the sway (when he likes) of Dost Mahomed and the Cabul Dooranees. Mitchnie is about three miles north of the left bank of the Cabul river, where it debouches into the plain. All along the river banks, as far as Lalpoora and Jellalabad, are numerous small watch-towers, each adapted to receive five or six men, and by this means great oppression has always been carried on; all goods floating down the stream have been heavily mulcted by all the petty chiefs, alias robbers and murderers. The fort of Dub lies east of Mitchnie a short way; and this fort is now at once to be taken, and will be destroyed, as it has always been a stronghold of the Momund robber tribe." The latest accounts received from Brigadier Campbell's camp are to the 30th October. The force had been employed all the previous day in the explosion of Rehimidad Khan's fort and the villages surrounding. Heaps of corn, that lay in stores in the houses of these Momunds, were fired, and their goods and chattels thrown into the river. The Momunds themselves were firing on the troops from a distance, but their shot had done no mischief, as they fell far short of the camp.—Bombay Times, Nov. 16.

We learn from our correspondents on the frontier that the force still occupies its first encamping ground, with the exception of the 2nd Irregulars, some guides, and a Company of Goorkhas, who are posted near Matee, a few miles from Shubkuddur, under the command of Capt. Jackson. After destroying some deserted villages and a few miserable mud-forts, the men were set to work on the construction of a fortified out-post. When this is completed, the Brigadier-General will move on to the next station, and then act in a similar manner. Three or four of the insurgent Malikhs have come into camp and tendered their submission, but Rahamdad still holds out. It is expected that the troops will stay out two months, and will be strengthened by another wing of a native regiment.—Delhi Gaz. Nov. 8.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

The Governor-General arrived at Kalka on the 26th ult. and proceeded in state, accompanied by his secretaries, aides-de-camp, &c. to his camp at Pinjore on the 27th. The Maharajah of Pattealla, accompanied by his sirdars, and also the Rajahs of Naba and Jheend, and the Nawabs of Molairkotla and Mundhote, with some others, attended by an immense retinue, proceeded from their camps to meet his lordship and conduct him to his tents. After presenting their bows, they attended the procession to the flagstaff in the centre street of the camp, and then retired. A salute of nineteen guns was fired by the artillery in the Governor-General's camp, and one of twenty-one guns by the Maharajah of Pattealla on the arrival of his lordship. The scene is described as one of great splendour, the concourse of spectators immense, and the appearance of the two great camps exceedingly picturesque, pitched in the centre of the Pinjore valley, the dark outline of hills forming a pleasing back-ground.

On the 28th, the Governor-General held a levee, which was attended by all the officers, civil and military, in camp, and at 3 p.m. there was a durbar held, at which the assembled Amirs were presented. The Pattealla Rajah having been present and seen.

ducted to the Governor-General's durbar by the commissioner, Mr. Edmonstone, and two aides-de-camp, escorted by a party of irregular cavalry. His highness was received by the secretary, and invited to a seat on the right of the Governor-General. About forty or fifty trays of sundries, two horses, and one elephant with a silver howdah, were presented, and khulluts to his brother and others. Uttar and pawn were handed round, and the Maharajah took leave under the customary salute, two aides-de-camp escorting his highness a short distance beyond the camp. A salute of seventeen guns was fired on the arrival and departure of the Maharajah, and the troops lined the street and presented arms.

After the departure of the Puttealla Rajah, the Rajah of Naba and his brother, with some Sirdars, came forward and were received by the commissioner, and conducted by the secretary to the Governor-General, when nearly the same ceremony was observed. The Rajah of Jheend came next, and was received in the same manner. The Nawab of Molairkotla and his relations were next in rotation. The Nawab of Mumdhote, the Rajah of Furreed Kote, the Sirdar of Kulsean, and a number of other chiefs followed, were presented, and then departed; the ceremony not being concluded till half-past five p.m.

On the 29th, a number of other chiefs were presented at the Governor-General's durbar, and the same day the Governor-General, attended by a brilliant staff, was to pay the return visit to the Maharajah of Puttealla.

Although there were not so many Europeans present at the morning's durbar, it was marked by a much greater display of oriental splendour than on the former occasion. The arrangements in the durbar tent are described as perfect, and the scene altogether well worth a day's journey, such as many took, to be present at it.

The Governor-General was to leave on the afternoon of the 30th for Kussowlie, and proceeding to Dughaie, travel, viâ the Kennedy road, back to Simla.—Delhi Gazette, Nov. 1.

The Maharajah of Puteala, a fine-looking man, seemed much pleased with his reception, and the peculiarly courteous manner of the Governor-General. He talked much, Sir H. Elliot interpreting. After the usual presents had been made, including a diamond ring, which the Governor-General took off his own finger and placed on the Maharajah's, the utur was given, and H. H. retired. The Puteala Rajah was the only one who presented no peskhush, and who was permitted to sit on a gold chair next the Governor-General; the others being seated on common chairs, and having Sir Henry Elliot between them and Lord Dalhousie. The Governor-General was seated on Runjeet Singh's throne. The presents made on the part of Government were very considerable. To the Puteala Rajah some handsomely framed prints were given, among them full lengths of the Queen and Prince Albert, and a portrait of the Governor-General, and the fine engraving of the entry of the Sikh guns into Calcutta. For this latter he made particular specification. The rajahs resembled, generally, those happy animals, luxuriously littered, and daintily fed on oil cake, for exhibition, with a view to prizes, at a grand agricultural show.—Lahore Chronicle, Nov. 8.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NUDDEA IS THE OXFORD OF BENGAL, the paradise of pundits. The brahmins there settle every rite and every ceremonial. There dwells in Calcutta a rich widow, Rasmoney Dassee, or Rasmoney Chowdranee, as she is called by her flatterers, who is not only the wealthiest but the most pious female in Calcutta, and whose wealth and piety have been lately attested by the erection of a magnificent temple on the banks of the Hooghly, nearly midway between Calcutta and Barrackpore, just opposite the Bali bridge. She is, however, by caste a Koiburtu, and therefore very low in the social scale. In a luckless hour, the pundits of Nuddea accepted a valuable gift from this lady, to the extent, it is said, of about fifty rupees each. The Raja of Nuddea, indignant at their having degraded themselves by the acceptance of a gift from such an individual, though ten times as wealthy as himself, or perhaps at their having accepted it without his permission, refused to invite them to the ceremony of giving the first rice to his grandson. This was tantamount to a sentence of excommunication, and the pundits met in great wrath, and in their turn excommunicated their protector. Information of the circumstance was instantly forwarded to Calcutta, and the heads of parties resolved to support the Raja. The pundits were informed that the annual allowance was stopped, that they would receive no more invitations; in short, that they were deprived of their bread; and letters were at the same time sent in every direction to make their exclusion complete and universal. The Calcutta baboos, however, add, with a compassionate clemency like that of the Holy Office, that "if the pundits will purify themselves according to the Shasters, and exhibit a letter of forgiveness under the seal of the raja, it is still in their power to exchange wrath for favour."—Friend of India.

THE CIVILIANS AT AGRA are making earnest efforts to forward a scheme for promoting the retirement of seniors. It is said that, if fourteen retirements can be effected, promotion to sixty juniors would be the result.—Agra Messenger, Oct. 25.

ALLEGED HOMICIDE IN CASHMERE.—With reference to the reports in the Delhi Gazette (p. 668) and Optimist (p. 670), of a British artillery officer having killed a native soldier in Cashmere, the Lahore Chronicle gives the following explanation. The occurrence happened more than two months before. Capt. Hungerford, of the Bengal artillery, is the officer alluded to. On his first arrival at Sreenuggur, the maharaja gave him a guard of one havildar and six men, as a mark of respect, and they took post at the gateway of the garden in which he lived. The havildar always reported his coming on duty and relief, and had instructions to obey all his orders. When Capt. H. went out for a few days, the guard were directed to stand at the gateway of the house, instead of the entrance to the garden, and to deny admittance to any one. All these instructions they obeyed with punctuality. Some time about the end of July, on coming home about nine o'clock in the morning from a pigeon shooting-match, Capt. Hungerford saw one of the guard and his own bheestee, about two hundred yards from the garden gateway, on the public road, "bullying" a Cashmere koollee. The captain had previously given orders that none of his servants should molest this class. The bheestee and sepahce, seeing Capt. Hungerford, made for the gateway, and the koollee came crying and saying that he had been beaten by the two, and his load of wood taken from him. The bheestee, after being reminded of the orders previously given, received a cut or two with a riding-stick. The sepahce had by this time picked up his musket from behind the door, and was standing as though on sentry. He was asked why he had ill-treated the koollee, and ordered to put down his musket, with an intimation that when his havildar returned he should be sent to the maharaja to be confined. He answered in a very insolent manner, declaring he would not put down his musket. The order was repeated three or four times, and as often disobeyed in a highly insubordinate manner. Capt. Hungerford then dismounted to take the musket from him, when the sepahce came to the charge, and advanced with his bayonet. Capt. Hungerford, in self-defence, seized the barrel with one hand, and then struck him several times on the head and body with his riding-stick. A servant, upon this, wrested the musket out of the hands of the sepahce, on which he tried to seize Capt. Hungerford by the throat, when he was again struck. He was at once sent to the maharaja, with an account of what occurred. During the scuffle, the sepahce received a cut on his forehead and another on his head from the stick, both of which cuts bled slightly. Either that same day or the next, the maharaja sent his decree wala, Blughut Sing, to Capt. Hungerford, with an apology for the conduct of the sepahce. Some fourteen or fifteen days after this, the Poorbeea regiment, to which this sepahce (who was an opium-eater) belonged, was ordered to Soopur; he having in the interim been seen walking in the bazaar, and never having been heard to complain of any hurt or illness. He accompanied his regiment to Soopur, and was well there for several days. One evening he went into a baker's shop, when he ate very heartily, and the next morning (twenty days after the date of the occurrence above narrated) he was found dead.

THE DEPOPULATION OF THE HILLS OF KUMAON is spoken of by Mr. Batten, in his Report on Kumaon. "Immigration from the plains is unknown," he says, "whilst disease within the hills thins and weakens the population much more than is generally believed; while the tyranny of the neighbouring Ghoorkhalee state (the Nepal) is the only cause of any new importation of emigrants taking place. These must, of course, be the refuse of the Ghoorkhalee population, neither bringing means nor talent for improvement."

THE FLUCTUATIONS IN THE RATE OF PROMOTION have been very remarkable during the last twenty years in the Bengal army, as is evidenced by the number of brevet captains at various periods during somewhat more than the term above mentioned. Little more than twenty years since, such a thing as a brevet captain was scarcely known in the Bengal army, and in less than nine years afterwards the number had increased to considerably beyond one hundred, the engineer corps alone being exempt from the evil. But in the lapse of another similar period we find the engineers with thirteen brevet captains, and at this time (in 1847) the brevet captains of the cavalry had been trebled in number, having increased from eleven to thirty-three. Those of the artillery and infantry had in the same interval been reduced respectively from twenty-two to seventeen, and from ninety-two to seventy-seven. Since that period, the number has been gradually but steadily on the decrease, having fallen from a total of one hundred and forty in 1847 to forty-seven at the present time.—Hurkaru, Oct. 24.

SIMLA BANK.—At the last meeting of the proprietors of the Simla bank it was announced that the last mail had brought intelligence of some 15,000*l.* worth of bills being in a hazardous predicament, a London house, on whom the bank held bills purchased in Calcutta for a sum between 4,000*l.* and 5,000*l.* sterling, having failed, and the goods shipped, held by the bank as security for the bills, having proved of little value. On the other hand, the house had sold bills to the London branch to the extent of 10,000*l.*, drawn on a firm in Calcutta, the safety of which will depend on the stability of the Calcutta firm.—Hurkaru, Nov. 7.

THE HORSBURGH LIGHT-HOUSE.—The Legislative Council has published the draft of an Act for the maintenance of the Horsburgh light-house on Pedro Branca, near Singapore. It is intended to raise the necessary funds by a light duty of 2½ cents per ton on all square-rigged vessels entering the harbour of Singapore; this will not, however, be levied on any vessel more than once in six months.

HURRICANE.—On the 22nd October there was a fearful hurricane at the Sandheads, and at night it came on to blow somewhat heavily here, and so continued, with much rain and frequent squalls till noon on the 23rd. Much damage has been done by the tempest, but happily less than, from the extreme violence of the storm, might have been anticipated, setting aside the destruction of nameless native craft, which seems to have been very extensive, and the mischief wrought on land. The first evil tidings was of the stranding of the steam tug Powerful, below Culpee, with the loss of Captain Smith's the commander's wife, and two of her three children. The vessel has since been got afloat, and has arrived off town. The semaphore below Diamond Harbour was hors de combat, three or four of the towers having been blown down. The post-office at Kedgeree being also destroyed by the hurricane, the communication with the mouth of the river was entirely suspended for two or three days. When it was reopened, we learnt that the P. and O. Co.'s steamer Precursor, outward bound, had gone on shore below Kedgeree, but that, owing to the skilful management of the commander and the pilot, she had survived the tempest with little damage. The Erin was immediately sent down to take the place of the crippled vessel, and started immediately with her packets, passengers and cargo. The only ships yet known to be actually wrecked are the Bengali, outward bound, which was lost on Saugor Island, and the Scourfield, inward bound, which was disabled and driven on the coast near Point Palmyras. In both cases the whole of the crew were saved. It is feared, however, that we have yet to hear of some more fatal disasters.—Hurkaru, Nov. 7.

THE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH, just completed from Calcutta to Diamond Harbour, made a somewhat inauspicious commencement of its labours with the "hurly-burly" of the tempest; but the rapidity and certainty of its operations, and the overthrow of the ordinary telegraphs by the violence of the hurricane, converted the disastrous occasion into an admirable opportunity for bringing out fully the inestimable advantages of the new method of communication.

A YACHT-CLUB is about to be formed in Calcutta.

THE RAILWAY COMMISSIONERSHIP.—Mr. Lushington, the railway Commissioner, having nearly completed his labours on the first section of the rail, and sent in a report of his proceedings, was requested to join the officiating appointment of secretary to the Sudder Board of Revenue, to which Lord Dalhousie had nominated him, and Mr. Drummond, the collector of Burdwan, was appointed to take charge of the railway operations. The arrangement required the Governor-General's approval, of which no doubt was entertained; unfortunately, however, intelligence was received last week, that the appointment had been negatived. This reversal of the proceedings of the Bengal Government has created no small surprise and considerable disappointment. It has been surmised that Lord Dalhousie fancied there was the distant scent of a job, but upon what ground this opinion was formed it is impossible to conjecture.—Friend of India, Oct. 23.

CONVALESCENT DEPOTS.—It is said that Lord Dalhousie is inclined to recommend the establishment of convalescent depots at every available station, and that it is also likely there will be some alteration in the arrangement of those already established, at least as far as the officers in charge are concerned. We earnestly hope, for the sake of the British soldier in India, that this is really one of the objects of Lord Dalhousie's visit to Mussoorie. Anything more worthy of his lordship's attention, both in a humane and financial point of view, cannot well be imagined, and a little loose cash applied upon the principle of the "stitch in time," will not only ameliorate the condition of a much-neglected class of our fellow-creatures, but tend in the long-run to enrich the coffers of our honourable masters.—Delhi Gazette, Nov. 8.

THE WIDOW OF TIPPOO SAHIB, and mother of Prince Gholam Mahomed, died at Russapuglah, in October, at the great age of ninety-seven years.

THE JOTEPEPSAUD INQUIRY.—The Governor-General has personally requested Sir James Colville to associate himself with Sir Robert Barlow in the duties lately assigned to the latter gentleman at Agra, and Sir James consented to do so, subject to the approval of the Chief Justice. When Sir James arrived at Agra he found that Sir Robert Barlow had not reached the station, and fearing he might be delayed there for a longer period than he could spare, he meditated relinquishing the duty which he had undertaken respecting the case.—Hurkaru, Oct. 31.

THE MACKAYS.—A coroner's inquest has found a verdict of manslaughter against Mr. Mackay, the missionary schoolmaster at Benares, and his sister.—(See p. 699.)

MR. BOLDERO.—The answer to the appeal forwarded by Mr. Boldero (late judge at Agra) to the home authorities, against the measures of the local Government has been received, and we learn that the Court of Directors concur in the proceedings of the Lieut.-Governor and of the Governor-General. They have, however, paid Mr. Boldero the compliment of congratulating him on his closing his long career with an unblemished character.—Lahore Chron., Nov. 1.

INDIAN "NAVIES."—A native paper reports that a party of Chooars at work on the embankments near Burdwan had killed a woman and eaten her. So great is the abhorrence of the natives of Bengal for this wild tribe, who possess no caste, and eat rats, frogs, and snakes, that the most preposterous stories are daily circulated and believed.

NATIVE LANGUAGES.—The Hon. the Deputy Governor has been pleased to grant to Lieutenant the Hon. E. P. R. H. Hastings, of the 32nd N.I., and to Ensign S. D. White, of the 42nd N.I., certificates of high proficiency; the former in the Oordoo, and the latter in the Hindee languages. His honour has also been pleased to confer on Ensign W. N. Lees, of the 42nd N.I., a degree of honour for his eminent attainments in the Persian language.

CATASTROPHE ON BOARD THE "FAWN."—This vessel was about 100 miles to the southward of Pinang, when the crew, composed of Malays and Bengalees, rose and murdered the captain and his officers, and took possession of the ship. They placed Mrs. Rogers, the captain's wife, and another lady, a passenger, into a boat, intending to cut them adrift, but the boat upset, and both the unfortunate ladies were drowned. The murderers then endeavoured to scuttle the ship, but not being successful, run her aground near Mount Formosa. The Bengalees gave information of the tragedy to the authorities at Singapore, but it is uncertain whether the Malays have yet been arrested. The Englishman states that the first officer struck the tindal (a Malay), and abused him for smoking in some improper part of the vessel, and that the crew then complained to the captain of this, and other instances of ill-treatment; but he appears to have sanctioned his officer's proceedings, and that night the crew rose.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

EXAMINATION IN PUNJABEE.

Simla, Oct. 14, 1851.—The most noble the Governor-general is pleased to lay down the following rules for the examination of military officers, in the Punjabee language:—

The committees will be composed of three members, one an officer of the civil service, or other person selected by the Board of Administration, as being well acquainted with the Punjabee language, and two military officers who may have passed an examination in that language.

The committees will be assembled annually on the 10th of January and 10th of July.

The following is to be the test:—

1st. The candidate is to read and translate a page of the geographical description of the Punjaub, lately translated from the Persian of Bootah Shah, and published at Loodiana; also a page of the Jaman Sakhi of Nanak.

2nd. An English translation (previously prepared by the committee) of a page from either of the above works is to be given to the candidate for re-translation into Punjabee, in the Goormukhee character.

3rd. The candidate is to answer a dozen common questions in grammar, showing the formation of nouns, verbs, &c. &c.

4th. The candidate is to be made to converse in turn, separately, with a Punjabee shopkeeper, a Sikh soldier, and an agriculturist of respectability, and to keep up a conversation with each involving twenty or thirty questions and answers.

5th. Three native letters, written in a fair hand, are to be given to the candidate to read and translate.

Grammars, dictionaries, and similar aids, are not to be allowed during the examination.

The examinations will be held at Lahore only for the present, and the reports are to be prepared and forwarded by the committee to the adjutant-general of the army.

RULES FOR EXAMINATION OF OFFICERS IN NATIVE LANGUAGES.

Simla, Oct. 3, 1851.—In continuation of General Orders by the Governor-General of the 7th of July last, the following supplementary rules for the examination of candidates desirous of passing the interpreter's and Hindoostanee tests, are published for the information and guidance of parties concerned.

Three copies of the test-books, of the same editions as those used at the college, will be furnished to the staff officers of every station where a committee is to assemble. These are to be sent at the appointed time to the place directed for the meeting of the committee, and delivered into their hands.

The exercises intended for the written examination will be printed in the parlour printing-press belonging to the college, and the college examiners will fix the exercises for the oral examination. The printed papers, accompanied by lists of exercises according to the Forms A and C, accompanying, will be forwarded, under the college seal, to the staff officer of the station, the papers for the interpreter's and Hindoostanee examination being made up in separate envelopes.

These envelopes are to remain in the hands of the station staff officer, with the seals unbroken, till the day and hour of the examination, when they are to be delivered by the staff officer into the hands of the committee, at the appointed place of examination, in order to their being then opened and given to the candidates.

The college examiners, in forwarding the papers, will address to the staff officer a letter containing instructions and explanations. A copy of this letter is to be furnished to the station examination committee, in order that they may have an idea of the nature of the arrangements made for the examination.

The examinations are to be held at all stations at which committees are authorized to be assembled, on the same day.

The interpreter's examination will be held on the first day of the assembly of the committee, and the Hindoostanee examination on the day following.

The reports of the committees are to be prepared in duplicate, according to the forms annexed, B and D. One copy is to be forwarded to the examiners of the College of Fort William, and the other, in which the candidate's name is to be entered under the distinctive marks, will be sent to the adjutant-general of the army.

MADRAS.

REVENUE SYSTEM IN THE NIZAM'S COUNTRY.

The process by which revenue is collected in the Nizam's country may be stated as follows.

An individual of some consideration, and who is at least presumed to be wealthy, goes to the minister, and offers his services as a talooqdar; if they are accepted he is required to pay into the Government Treasury a certain fixed sum, to be collected from the districts assigned to him, with a deduction of two annas on each rupee, for the payment of his subordinates, and the defrayal of all expenses strictly civil. He then receives his sunnud, or authority for holding the districts allotted him, under the seal of the minister, presents his nuzzur, often a good round sum, and makes his salaam; and here, in a great majority of cases, the talooqdar's care and superintendence of his districts are bounded by the one idea of making them as profitable as he can; if his instalments are paid into the treasury with tolerable regularity, no more questions are asked, and he is permitted to remain at Hyderabad sunk in sloth, from which he is roused solely by sensuality and debauchery of the grossest description. Meanwhile, however, he has delegated his authority to a naib, who occasionally possesses some knowledge of revenue matters, and who is bound to collect two or three lacs of rupees annually, on a monthly stipend of 200. This functionary again appoints chotah naibs, or tahsildars as they are called in the Company's country, peshcars, and other subordinates, the whole establishment of the former talooqdar being swept away; with his array he proceeds to his province with the power of a satrap and the pay of an ensign. The persons there with whom, in performance of his duty, he comes in contact, are the zemindars, in some respects congenial spirits, and it often happens that the face of a ryot is not seen in his durbar, nor the complaint of a poor man heard, during the whole period of his stay among them. If the naib is a man of intelligence and good sense he courts the zemindars, attends to their complaints (and these are chiefly directed against the injustice and exactions, whether true or false, of his predecessor), and redresses their grievances. If a good understanding exists between the Government office and the zemindar, the remonstrances of the ryots never reach beyond the boundaries of his village, and all is supposed to go on well at Hyderabad; but in another case the ears of Government are assailed by complaints, which they are compelled to listen to. If the naib, through ignorance or avarice, break cowl, as it is called, with the zemindars, and threaten them with imprisonment and irons in case of refusal or resistance, threats which in time he puts in execution, the whole country is in an uproar; zemindar after zemindar quits his villages and repairs to Hyderabad, where, if he gets no redress at the hands of the talooqdar, he goes at once to the minister with his wrongs, and there obtains redress, if he is in a condition to give a good bribe; if he comes empty-handed his grievances are declared to be without foundation, and he is recommended to return as speedily as he can, to make his peace with the naib, lest worse should befall him: such are the relations the naib and zemindars bear to each other, to the talooqdar and Government. The Sur bastu cowl, as it is called, on which tenure zemindars farm the revenue, is more or less comprehensive, and of greater or less duration according to circumstances. In the Elgundel Sircar not only is the land revenue farmed to the desaeae, or surdeshmook as he is called, but the sahyer and every other branch. This has arisen from the trouble the Government had, some sixty years ago, with a rebellious zemindar of the name of Cona Reddy, who, taking advantage of the unhealthiness and natural strength of the country, set the authorities at defiance. He was at last put down, but his successors benefited by his resistance and obtained the collection of the entire revenue; but zemindars are often excluded from collecting the sahyer, that branch of revenue being left to the talooqdar, who appoints an officer for the express purpose of collecting it. The Ijaru cowl differs in no respect from the Sur bastu, save that in this case the farmer of the revenue is a patell. An Ijaru cowl, it is true, may be granted to any individual who may wish to re-people a deserted village by repairing a ruined tank; but, generally speaking, there is no other real difference. Such independent patells exist about Maiduck, and this kind of lease is common there; elsewhere, patells enjoying the full rights and immunities of their office are seldom met with. There are, it is true, persons who call themselves so in most villages, but they are merely head coonbees, with little authority, save in caste disputes, and with consequence only in as far as it is conceded by their brethren, who accord to them precedence at feasts and processions. At Maiduck, on the other hand, the patell is a real functionary, settling direct with Government, and in the enjoyment of considerable emoluments in virtue of his office—four beegahs per cent. of beegahs in the poonass, as many in the rubbee, four per cent. of the rice rain crop, and two per cent. of the rice cultivated in the dry weather.

These two leases, Sur bastu and Ijaru, are granted commonly for a term of nine years; but this is by no means constant when the village falls into the hands of the Government agent, consequent on the zemindars or patells failing to make good their engagements, or to accede to new terms on the expiration of a lease: the revenue of such a village is collected by the Government authority, and paid direct into the treasury, with the deduction, however, of the zemindars' acknowledged dues. Setting up zemindaries to auction is never practised in the Nizam's country, although the right of Government to resume lands and confiscate the claims of refractory or bankrupt zemindars is insisted on, and sometimes, though rarely, is put in execution: the truth is, that the local authorities are too weak to resort to such an extreme measure. The delinquent, however guilty, commands the sympathy of all his brother zemindars, who regard him as a martyr, and make common cause with him, in so much that, in the case of his being ejected, they will furnish him with means of getting back his rights, or setting the local authorities at defiance. A bribe to the minister at Hyderabad, or some of his underlings, is the shortest and most effectual means to this end; but other measures, less direct and more unscrupulous, are also employed to effect it. Two examples which were reported to me will illustrate this. A few years ago the zemindar in the immediate vicinity of Hunnamcondra, the kushab of the Warungal sircar, had become deeply indebted to Government, and had evinced a turbulent and rebellious spirit; certain of his villages, by way of punishment, were taken from him and given to a respectable coonbee of the name of Rugonah, who stood deservedly high in the estimation of the Government officer. This unfortunate man had scarcely been a year in possession, when he was found inhumanly murdered in his own house. His body was mutilated, with his nose and ears cut off, and carried away, it was thought as trophies. The actual murderers were discovered and hanged; they were low caste men, who could have had no personal animosity towards their victim; but there was not a zemindar in the sircar who was not by the general voice suspected to have been privy to the crime. His fate excited universal sympathy among the ryots, by whom he was much beloved and respected, and who still speak of events as occurring so many years before or after the slaughter of Rugonah.—Report of Dr. Walker—Madras Journal of Science, No. 38.

RETURNED COOLIES.—The ship Zenobia, Capt. Saxon, came into the Madras roads on the 9th November, having on board eighty-seven returned coolies for this port, and two hundred for Calcutta, all of whom have served their five years' apprenticeship in Demerara. They have brought back about 40,000 dollars, which, divided rateably, would give about Rs. 300 as the average savings of each individual; but we are sorry to say the Madras coolies have exhibited during their exile some of the disadvantages of being without caste. A large portion of their wages has been spent in toddy, or whatever substitute Demerara could afford for that exhilarating beverage. They have not got above 6,000 dollars amongst the party, which would only give about Rs. 150 each; whilst the share of the Calcutta emigrants would amount to double that sum. They expressed themselves heartily glad to return; but the example of their gains will no doubt induce a great many of their countrymen to undergo like hardships with the hope of obtaining similar results.—Athenæum.

THE SEPOYS OF THE 39TH.—The native general court-martial for the trial of the runaway sepoy of the 39th regiment N.I., opened its proceedings on the 6th of October, at Cananore. The charges upon which the two havildars, one naik, and seven privates were arraigned, are as follows:—"For having misbehaved themselves before a body of Moplah fanatics, in arms, against whom they were led, by shamefully retreating in panic and disorder before them; and for having, when in the presence of a body of Moplah fanatics, in arms, against whom they were led, shamefully cast away their arms." The charge brought against the subadar is for having, when spoken to by Ensign Turner previously to the attack, as to the mode of attack he had in view, replied in a manner, and made use of language, calculated to discourage the men of the detachment, and to spread alarm amongst them. The result of the trials was looked forward to with great anxiety.

BEAR.—The Hingolee force is under orders for field service. A strong body of Rohilla marauders, who are collected in the Mahore jungle, have committed depredations in the vicinage of Karingiah. The brigadier commanding, with his usual zeal for the good of the country, wishes to dislodge this nest of hornets.—Spectator, Nov. 5.

LORD STANLEY is shortly expected to visit Mysore.

LIEUTENANT C. A. WYATT, of the 37th Madras grenadiers, who was under arrest at Kamptee, broke his arrest and disappeared.

THE MONEY-MARKET.—The violence of our last commercial storm has in some measure moderated. The money-market is still far from being easy, but the banks have recommenced doing business in a small way. The local journals have been strongly urging the establishment of a new bank for the benefit of the general trade and commerce of the place, fortifying their counsel by reference to the abject uselessness of the chartered institution during the present and former crisis. But severe as have been the lessons, we yet seriously question whether they will have this legitimate practical tendency.

MR. KIGHT, THE AERONAUT, has been again unfortunate in his ascent at this presidency on the 20th October. Finding himself being carried rapidly out to sea, he commenced his descent, and though this was effected at a fearful speed, the machine fell into the water between two and three miles from land. As soon as his perilous position was perceived, a boat put off from the ship Rohely, manned by European sailors, who succeeded in rescuing him. Mr. Kight was in a very exhausted state; just able to keep his head above water by clinging to the ropes of the balloon.

BOMBAY.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LONDON MAIL of October 8th arrived at Bombay on November the 7th (per Ajdaha). The Zenobia, with the subsequent Mail of October 24, left Aden on November 16th for Bombay.

THE EMIGRATION OF LABOURERS to Mauritius from this port, as well as from Calcutta and Madras, is legalized by an Act before the Legislative Council of India.

NATIVE FEMALE EDUCATION.—The Bombay Gazette states that, in the vicinity of Poonah, among other gratifying movements, five young women, wives of Hindu young men who have been educated in our colleges, have formed themselves into a normal class, that they may be made efficient teachers of their own countrywomen. Four of them are Brahmines!

MUNICIPAL INSTITUTIONS.—Kurrachee, Broach, Surat, Poona, and Belgaum, all cities of Western India, have petitioned for the introduction of the Municipal Act. The Bombay Gazette notices that the townspeople of Broach have agreed to pay taxes on the export of cotton seed, tobacco, mours, and timber, and some of the citizens propose to establish a carriage-tax in addition. The first object to which the funds are to be devoted is the construction of a pier on the river-side.

THE CURIOUS REPORT, circulated among the natives at Tanm, on the Bombay Railway, that the English intended to offer up a certain number of children in sacrifice, in order to obtain a vast treasure concealed near the line, has undergone a modification. It now appears that the Cazeas have ordered out a number of Seedies to kidnap these children, of course for the same purpose. No English labourers are employed on the railway.

A SOCIETY has been formed in Bombay, consisting of two hundred young men, who have resolved to break down the restrictions of caste, and eat and drink forbidden food. The association is unfortunately secret, and therefore of little use as regards the great majority of the people.

TWO OF THE AZERAS OF SCIND, formerly at Hazareebagh, have lately proceeded to Lahore for the sake of residing with their kinsman, the Lion of Meerpore, who found protection from Sir Henry Lawrence in 1847.

BARODA.—The intrigues of the Baroda "Khutput-makers" continue unabated. The determined efforts of Col. Outram to exterminate the intrigue, bribery, and corruption, which have for many years procured for Baroda an unhappy notoriety, have, of course, raised against him a host of enemies. The court of Baroda, which has, to the present hour, carried on a system of secret diplomacy at the presidency, and maintained an espionage over the Bombay Government, by favour of traitors in the secretariat, has, of course, put forth its best energies to defeat the investigations in which the resident has been engaged for the last eighteen months. Allied with the court are all the rich bankers and noblemen within the Guicowar territory, who, enjoying what is called the "British guarantee," are entitled to refer their suits and claims to the final disposal of the British authorities, and whose wedded to the belief that by means of bribery—"Khutput" it is called—they can procure decisions in their favour, irrespective of the justice of their cause. The local confederacy is still further strengthened by the native establishments of the resident and of the Rewa Caunta agent, a body of men, who it is notorious, have for a succession of years amassed vast fortunes by dishonest courses. At the presidency durbar, bankers and noblemen of Baroda have of course a powerful body of supporters among the rich and influential native gentlemen; and in the Government public offices, there have been found men—some of them we fear Europeans—to betray the secrets of Government, and accept vast sums of money under the pretext of promoting the interests of the khutput-makers, and of handing over the greater part of the bribes to European gentlemen.—B. Telegraph, Nov. 17.

CEYLON.

The sittings of the Legislative Council are for this year at an end, the continued and much-lamented illness of the acting Queen's advocate having forced the governor to postpone his scheme of law reform until early next year. The sub-committee of council have proposed that the expensive and useless steamer Seaforth should be sold. She costs the colony annually about 3,000l., the returns being about nil. She is at present on a trip to the Aripo pearl banks.

The result is still the same unsatisfactory cry of "Young Oysters" and no fishery for four years to come. Some great disturbing cause, or some change in the habits of the animal, must be at work. Intervals of about 13 years were formerly not uncommon, but this time 30 years are likely to elapse without a fishing.

The Buddhist question still engages attention. The clergy of the Anglican church have addressed the Government on this subject, but the bishop refused to take part in the agitation, on the ground that such a course would only tend to embarrass the governor at a moment when he was anxious to discover the means of honourable escape from the unholy fellowship into which he in common with his predecessors had been dragged. There has been a warm ecclesiastical discussion between the Rev. Mr. Boake and the bishop on the minutiae of infant baptism, involving, however, the differences between the High Church and evangelical members of the Anglican establishment.

Parties are still in custody charged with the murder of poor Edward Morgan, but it does not seem quite certain that the actual murderer has been discovered. Government have offered a reward of 50l., and the planters have subscribed more than 100l. for a similar purpose.

The planters are so busy in gathering crop that we have not prevailed on a single friend to furnish us with a time of planting report. All they can say is, that crop will not be over-abundant, and that labourers are by no means over-plentiful. Trade is dull.—Col. Obs. Nov. 14.

CHINA.

THE LONDON MAIL of August the 24th arrived at Hong-Kong on October the 7th (per Singapore).

CHINA presents a troubled aspect. In Peking, treason lurks around the throne; the northern sea-board swarms with freebooters, who, not content with plundering every vessel that crosses their path, make continual ravages in the various towns where anything of value is to be obtained, and in the southern provinces rebellion rears its head, every report giving additional success on the side of the insurgents. With a knowledge that, for months past, there have been upwards of a hundred thousand imperial troops in the field, who make no headway, the great masses of the people are now beginning to despise a government for which they have hitherto felt respectful terror. Two days prior to the date of our last monthly summary, the government forces were severely worsted in an engagement in the Yung-gan district, in which the combatants brought forth the élite on both sides. Following this battle, about the 28th or 29th ult., the rebels laid siege to the chief city of the district, called by one of our correspondents Hunmoo, which they took and sacked, mutilating, in a shocking manner, the district magistrate and his family, who, with a number of the principal inhabitants, refused to give in allegiance to the great king, Tien-tch. Of the inhabitants, generally, great numbers were beheaded on refusal to forswear the Hienfung dynasty. From the credible sources whence this information has been obtained, with exception of a discrepancy in the dates, there is not the least doubt as to its truth.

Governor-General Seu is still at Kou-chou-foo, and is said to be in a very nervous state indeed, making continual efforts to be relieved from his post, and to get back to Canton. In one despatch to the Emperor we are told that he represented the Portuguese as having an intention to invade southern China with numerous troops, alleged to be on the way; and prayed that he might be permitted to throw a chain across the mouth of the Canton river again. His wife died in Canton on the 25th instant; her sickness was reported several weeks ago, but it was supposed to be a ruse got up as a plea for enabling him to return. Seu is still continually sending to Canton for more troops. About the middle of this month from 1,500 to 2,000 men were despatched from the Tung-Kwan district, but they would not move from their encampments off the Fatee creek and the entrance of the Macao passage, until they received large advances of pay, which was given to them on the 18th, and they sailed on the 21st, in company with a force of 900 regulars and 2,000 volunteers, together with twenty field guns. Directly these reinforcements reach him, despite his non-fighting propensities, Seu will, it is said, march rapidly forward, and endeavour to obtain a general engagement. The Peking gazettes have ceased to report Victory as continually on the side of the imperial arms; and that Tien-tsch's star is in the ascendant, the most sceptical do not now presume to deny. Among the rebel leaders, one of the late Dr. Gutzlaff's converts is alleged to be a prominent character. Kwei-lin-fu is still a Hienfung possession.—Friend of China, Oct. 30.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The Cape Town Mail, of November 4th, contains the following summary of intelligence from the frontier.

The mass of hostile Caffres within the colony is estimated at, 6,000, divided into two bodies, one posted on the Fish River Bush, about thirty miles north-east of Graham's Town, and the other in the Water-kloof, about fifty miles north-west of that town. Those on the Fish River Bush were watched on the west by Lieut.-Col. Eyre, who, with a force of 500 men, covered Graham's Town; on the south by Major Wilmot, with a small detachment at Fort Peddie; and on the east by patrolling parties from King William's Town. Several skirmishes have taken place, in which the enemy have been invariably repulsed, but no important success gained, except in one instance, when a body of 800 attempted to carry off several thousand cattle and sheep from the vicinity of Fort Brown. Major Horne sallied out with 220 men, routed the plunderers, killing ten, and wounding many more, and recaptured nearly all the spoil, without any serious casualties among his troops.

On the 12th of October, Major-Gen. Somerset marched towards the stronghold of the chief Macomo, in the fastness of the Water-kloof, with 3,000 men, composed of the regular troops of the 2nd, 6th, 12th, 74th, and 91st regiments, Royal Artillery, Cape Mounted Rifles, Mounted Volunteers, and Fingoe Levies. On the 14th and 16th, the Water-kloof was penetrated in different directions by two brigades under Lieut.-Colonels Mitchell and Fordyce. All accounts agree in describing the operations as being conducted in a most masterly manner. The result was, after several hours' hard fighting, the enemy were completely driven out and their camp was destroyed. The fugitives took refuge in the valleys of the Blinkwater and Fuller Hoek, where they were attacked on the 23rd, and, after some sharp fighting, routed and dispersed. The detached bands still cling to the fastnesses about the Kromme heights, and preparations were making for another movement against them on the 25th of October. The loss of our troops is reported at six killed and twenty-six wounded. Among them, Lieut. Norris, 6th regt., was killed; Capt. Addison, 2nd, and Ens. Ricketts, 91st regts, wounded. That of the Caffres has been rated at from 400 to 500 killed.

During the month the district of Albany has been preserved, in a great measure, from the marauding incursions of the enemy, through the protection afforded by the detachments under Lieut.-Col. Eyre and Majors Wilmot and Horne; but the other frontier districts were suffering severely from heavy losses. On the 16th of September, a body of 2,000 Tambookies made a descent upon Upper Victoria and Craddock, sweeping off several thousand sheep and a large number of cattle. They have also recommenced their incursions into the district of Albert, and carried off some hundreds of cattle. Several colonists have been killed by them in these attacks.

The last reinforcements that arrived in this colony, viz., the 2nd battalion of the 60th Rifles and the 12th Lancers, have reached head-quarters; the Rifles have taken the field, for the first time, under Major-Gen. Somerset, and astonished the Caffres by their accuracy of aim, as well as the distance from which they fired.

In the vicinity of Somerset things are represented as being quiet, but along the line of the Mancazana, and more especially at Bavian's River, the enemy has been numerous, troublesome, and successful. A large party of Caffres and Hottentots had attacked the kraals at Dods Pringle's, and had swept off everything in the shape of live stock which he possessed. They had taken about 5,000 sheep and 280 head of cattle. They were pursued and overtaken by a party of about forty burghers, &c., but the Caffres, being about 400 strong, showed fight, and held the pursuers at defiance. The latter were obliged to retire, after having one man (some accounts say two) killed and one wounded (one of the Ainslies), and a horse shot under Mr. Lucas.

There appears to be now little question respecting the hostile tendency of Krell's feeling towards the colony; and there exists no doubt but many of his people are found among the ranks of the enemy.

The intelligence from the Sovereignty is anything but satisfactory. Bloem Fontein is represented as in a very precarious situation, and Major Warden has brought difficulties upon the country which he finds it no easy task to obviate or remove. The report is current, founded upon some recent letters from that quarter, that the noted Pretorius has sent a message to Warden, to the purport that he is coming down with a large force in order to "prevent the effusion of blood." Should he and his Boers stir up and take part with Moshesh in any extensive movement upon the colony, the consequences would, for a time, be most disastrous. In consequence of some information of this character, some pieces of artillery that were ordered to the front are to be sent up to Burghersdorp.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

We inserted in a former number part of the first chapter of the Vichitra Natak, or "Beautiful Epitome," forming a portion of the Granth, or Scriptures of the Sikhs, translated by Captain G. Siddons. Further chapters of this curious work have appeared in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, from whence we borrow the third and fourth, the former describing the great battle between Lav and Kush; the latter telling of King Lav and the Holy Védas:—

"CHAPTER III.

"God pleased to promote anger and strife;
The best of men could not stand neutral;
Lust and avarice were so potent,
Mighty heroes could not avoid them.
By these excited, madly they fought,
And, using their weapons in fierce strife,
They maimed and slaughtered each other;
The devil rejoicing drummed merrily.
Sheo* wore his necklace of human skulls,
Imps rejoiced, and demons urged to war;
Vultures and hyenas prowled about,
And dead bodies thickly strewed the ground.
Oh! there was hacking and many wounds;
Hands grappling arms, beards with fury pulled!
Heads broken, sinewy arms lopped off,
And many Chettriest† pierced with arrows!
Wild beasts skulked on every side;
Animals of every kind were glad,
And ogres mixed with the happy groups,
Because there were carcases enough to eat.
The shouts of heroes equalled the thunder;
They planted their flags in deadly hatred;
Full of anger, they fought with sword and spear.
Foot to foot on the ground, these heroes fought.
The swords of the brave clashed fearfully;
Their iron weapons dealt destruction.
Battle-axes, pikes, and doubled-edged swords,
Short swords and daggers, and weapons
Of every kind and shape, were flashing
Around, about, and simultaneously.
By wrath excited, the men were reckless,
And fearlessly they wielded their weapons.
Mad with deadly hatred, they heeded nothing,
But, hurling defiance, they cut and slashed about them.
Thousands of fairies came from heaven to see
The combat, vociferating, 'Fight! Fight!'
Some men lost limbs, many bandaged their wounds,
The flesh of others was hacked to pieces,
And warriors strewed the red ground in heaps.
There was a clamour of shields, of loud drums,
Mixed with groans, as these heroes contended.
Now they pause, but only to bend their bows
And shoot their arrows; then again with swords
To wound,—wounds which are not felt, nor cared for.
Phrenzied with rage, lo! neither party flies;
The din of battle mocks heaven's thunder.
They dare each other to single combat,
And gladly yield their souls to paradise.
Their angry blades flash sparks like lightning.
Shouts rend the air. 'Death! Death!' the only cry.
They roll on the ground in deadly struggle,
And hurl defiance, even as they die.
Blood flowed in streams, and fairies hovered near:
Káli applauded, evil imps rejoiced,
And manly shouts shamed the loud thunder.
The armies engage with a violence,
And roar, as the sound when oceans meet.
Fiery coursers plough the soil. Dripping
With red blood, Devl, who knoweth all things,
Gave encouragement, and fierce beasts, who live
On bodies, how'd with joy; elephants and Horses cumbered the earth, their carcases
Mixed in sad confusion with their riders.
Both sides claimed victory. If either were forced Back, it rallied, and fought more fiercely still.
Blow after blow was dealt, quick as lightning;
And the arm of hatred was as active
As larvae in the water!

"The warriors were inflamed as warriors never were before, and the inspiring kettle-drums roused them to deeds of daring and boldness. Cut to pieces and pierced with arrows, they still fought on. The youthful and the veteran alike fell in this great battle, and many reeled and staggered as if they were drunk with blood. Sounds of warlike instruments mingled with the shouts of war, and clouds of arrows obscured the golden sun; the sight was awe-inspiring, and the battle terrible as that which was fought between Indra and Brithrásur; the field of contest was crimsoned as though the Hooly had been celebrated on it.

"Those who remained to fight were all slaughtered;
Those who fled for ever mourned their cowardice.
Awful confusion prevailed everywhere;
Armour and swords were scattered about;
Heads with distorted faces, clotted beards
And gory trunks, mixed with dying horses.

"Kál spared not one of these mighty warriors, who contended so fiercely in this terrible battle; all perished; but their sins were forgiven them; they were hewn in pieces and died the death of brave men. Earth recorded their fame, and their souls found rest and immortality in Paradise.

"This was, indeed, a terrible battle, and mighty were the heroes who fought in it, and are now in the ranks of the blessed. But I must not add more in their praise, for to do so would be like extolling my own excellence, since I am of them, and from them. Enough! the followers of Lav were victorious, and the army of Kush was defeated, the small remnant of the latter who escaped fled to Káshi, and studied the Védas. They remained there many years.

"CHAPTER IV.

"Those who adopted the Védas were called Védís,
And walked in the paths of religion with zeal.
The king of the Punjab sent messengers greeting,
And begged them to return to friendship and love.
The Rájá's messengers arrived at Benares,
And straightway told all that their master bid them say;
On which, the Védís went to Rájá Madnedesh,
And, bowing low, they humbly made obeisance.
In open court, surrounded by his great chieftains
And proud nobles, the Rájá had the Védís read to him.
He listened with great piety; the Sám, Yajus
And Righa Védís, were fully explained to him.
And when his mind had comprehended well the fourth,
Or Atharv Véd, his sins instantly forsook him.
Full of religion, he gave up his kingdom
To the Védís, and sought the shelter of the woods,
There to reflect, and make atonement for his crimes.
His people all went with him, and remained content
That he, their king, had given up all for God.
The Védís rejoiced to get the kingdom,
And most diffusely scattered their aims;
They promised, in the iron age to come,
As Nának, and take the king to heaven.
The race of Lav dwelt in solitude, and
The Védís enjoyed their possessions.

"Oh, king! just as thou listenedst to three Védís in silence, but, on hearing the fourth, gave up thy soul to penitence, and thy kingdom to us; so we shall pass through three stages of existence, and, at our fourth coming, thou shalt be made a Gurú.

"The Rájá, comforted with this assurance, arose and went to the forests, and the Védís were happy in the possession of their new kingdom."

In the fifth chapter, it is said that, in the course of time, the Védís were subjected to feuds and animosities, which the wisest among them were unable to quell or avert, and, after many struggles, their race became almost extinct, for Bráhmans, deeming themselves, became almost as Súdras; Kshétris resembled Baishyas, whilst Baishyas were as Kshétris, and Súdras were exalted to Bráhmans. The Védís retained some twenty villages, the remnant of their large possessions, and became cultivators of the soil; they continued to be farmers for a long time, until at length Nának appeared on the earth. Nának did not long remain with this remnant of his tribe; he wandered among the Sikhs, and imparted comfort to them and religious consolation.

In an address delivered by M. Garcin de Tassy, on opening his course of lectures upon Hindustani, at the special School of Living Oriental Languages, at Paris, December 4, he observed, "This language, which is spoken by upwards of eighty millions of people, is on that account an object of immense interest, political and commercial; but it possesses, moreover, a real literary interest, and it is more especially in this point of view that the study of it is useful in Europe. The Hindu branch is a kind of simplified Sanscrit, bearing nearly the same relation to it as the Rome to the ancient Greek, the Italian to the Latin. An acquaintance with this tongue may, therefore, be very advantageous to the student of Indian philology, who will find in modern forms sometimes the contraction, sometimes the development, of antique forms. The Mussulman branch offers likewise a great advantage to those who apply themselves to Persian. The Persian and the Hindustani have the same origin; but the latter has the simplest phraseology. Applying, in the process of analysis, the Hindustani construction to the long Persian periods, the sense is seized with more facility. The truth of these assertions will be verified by those who study the Sanscrit, the origin of all our European languages, and to which the Semitic tongues are beginning to be traced,—for it is well known that the Arabic system of triliteral roots is fictitious, and that a great number of these roots are really monosyllabic; and the Persian, affluent in historical works, and which is distinguished by a literature of its own, vivified by the spiritualism of Mussulman theosophists."

M. de Tassy notices some works in the two "schools" of Hindustani literature, as well as the metrical system adopted by their poets. Two of the most distinguished living Hindustani bards, are the kings of Delhi and of Oude, who assume poetical names, the former that of Zafar, "Victory;" the latter that of Akhbar, "Star." Of the king of Oude, he says, "He is not only a poet, but a composer, setting to music his own ghazals. The productions of these two bards," he adds, "are highly esteemed in India, and, so far as I can judge from those I have read, deservedly so."

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

Sir,—The opinion of Col. Rawlinson,—"that the Parsi writings were imported from Persia, in their present state, during the seventh century of Christ, and are thus entitled to the same degree of consideration among the Parsis of the present day which they enjoyed among their ancestors at the period of expatriation,"—appears to me worthy of an examination which the occasion did not offer an opportunity of giving to it when I quoted Col. Rawlinson's memorandum in my last letter.

I have elsewhere (Indian Mail of Sept. 19) shown that, at the time when Mohammed lived, the language of Persia was said to excel in "sweetness;" and we also know, from Firdusee's masterly use of it, that, in his day, it abounded in richness, beauty, and grace. Now, as the slightest glance at a page of the Vendidad will at once convince any one that the Zend, instead of possessing these or any similar qualities, is hardly misrepresented by Richardson, when he says that it "resembles more the spells of necromancers than the idiom of a people famed at all times for the melody of their accents," it is clear that, supposing it established that the composition of these writings may be dated so far back as the period indicated, the language would neither be found to bear any resemblance or affinity to the vernacular dialect of Persia, nor, of itself, afford any proof of the Zend, agreeably to Col. Rawlinson's idea, having been derived from this tongue.

As to the substance of the Parsi writings, I would simply invite attention to the sixth chapter of Dr. Wilson's work "On the Parsi Religion," containing an analysis of twenty-two "Sargards" of the Vendidad, for samples of their worth. Looking at these compositions in a religious, moral, or literary view, I think no one can regard them other than worthless exhibitions of human folly.

Venturing, then, upon this one point, to differ from an authority of so high a character as that of Col. Rawlinson, it behoves me to show, in my defence, that even an Orientalist so justly celebrated as the Baron de Sacy has erred in one instance, where his knowledge and opinion might be thought unquestionable.

The Baron, as quoted by Kennedy, "Researches," &c., p. 170, says, "D'ailleurs, si l'on considère l'histoire structure de Persan moderne, on se convaincra que sa phraseologie et son système entier de syntaxe se sont formés sous l'influence de la langue Arabe." "But no opinion," Kennedy remarks, "can be more erroneous; because the Persian bears not the slightest affinity to Arabic, and never were two languages so strongly distinguished by dissimilar properties. In Arabic there is an article, in Persian none; in Arabic nouns have two cases, a dual number, and two genders; in Persian they have no dual number, nor gender, and only one case; in Arabic their plural may be formed in twenty-two different ways, in Persian in twenty. The verb, it is true, has only the same inflections, but by means of two particles it acquires tenses, which exist not in Arabic; its tenses have neither dual number nor gender, as in Arabic; and a distinct passive voice is formed by means of auxiliary verbs, the use of which is unknown to the Arabic. The Persian language is, at the same time, distinguished from the Arabic by its extreme regularity; for in the latter the deviations from one common paradigm are numerous, as the infinitive, for instance, may be formed in thirty-three different ways, while in Persian it invariably ends either in tun or dun. The genius, also, of the two languages is totally dissimilar, the Persian delighting in compound words, inversions, and long flowing periods; but the Arabic does not possess a single compound term, and its syntax admits of scarcely any variety in the length or arrangement of a period."

The same author, p. 267, on summing up his argument, in his concluding remarks, thus, likewise, exhibits the essential difference between Persian and Sanskrit, and their radical dissimilarity; explaining, at the same time, how it happens that a large body of Sanskrit words are to be found in Persian.

"There exists not, therefore, the remotest similarity between the Persian and Sanskrit grammatical systems; for the Persian noun has but one case, and the verb, taking the second person singular of the imperative as the root, only three inflections, including the infinitive, and the personal terminations of the two tenses are precisely the same. Nor is there any further resemblance between the Sanskrit and Persian substantive verbs, than in the third person singular of the present tense. The Persian, also, differs from the Sanskrit by forming several tenses and a complete passive voice by means of auxiliary verbs. There is, in fact, not the least identity between these two languages, except in the words which have passed from the one into the other; but these fully prove, that though the Persian is not derived from Sanskrit, still the Persians must have had, at some remote period, a most intimate intercourse with a people who spoke that tongue. Unfortunately, however, as a negative cannot be proved, it is impossible to demonstrate this truth to a person unacquainted with these languages, or to fully satisfy him that the number of Sanskrit words found in Persian ought not to lead to a conclusion, as in the case of Greek and Latin, that the latter was derived from the former; but as the dissimilarity of their grammatical structure will not be denied by any person competently acquainted with them, it is merely requisite to consider whether any instance has ever existed of a derived language differing totally, in grammatical structure, from the parent tongue; for if not, it must necessarily follow that, notwithstanding the numerous Sanskrit words it contains, Persian was not derived from Sanskrit."

Regarding the confidence I yield to the chief authority relied on in this letter, I would beg to offer this closing remark. To be a competent judge of the history, character, and power of the Persian language, one must either be prepared to agree with Kennedy's arguments and conclusions, or be able to confute them.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

WEDNESDAY, December 17, 1851.

Our comic contemporary Punch might find, in the controversy between Sir Charles Napier and Lord Dalhousie respecting Mr. Arratoon, the Armenian shopkeeper of Ferozepore, materials for the exercise of his talents, graphic as well as literary. In our judgment, however, such a contention, carried on in newspapers, upon matters concerning the administration of government,—the parties being in the relation of Governor-General of India, and ex-Commander-in-Chief of the Forces there,—is a subject of regret, rather than a topic for mirth. Lord Dalhousie was, indeed, in a manner, forced into the field by his adversary, whom he has signally discomfited.

The charge made by Sir C. Napier at the Bombay Byculla club dinner* was, that Arratoon, whom he described as "a wealthy man" (but has since termed "a poor Armenian merchant"), who had largely assisted our armies in Afghanistan by procuring supplies, told him that he had felled an enormous quantity of timber at the sources of the Chenab, but could not bring it down to the dock-yards at Bombay because Lord Dalhousie, to whom he had applied repeatedly, refused him protection, on the ground that he had not proved he had means to bring it down, and it still lay on the banks of the Chenab. Sir Charles, upon these allegations, the veracity of which he seems to have assumed without inquiry, accused Lord Dalhousie of withholding from commerce that protection which it needed, and which, he said, it is the duty of a government to afford.

The Governor-General's reply to this charge, contained in a letter from Sir H. Elliot,* enters very fully into the details of the case. Sir Henry states that Mr. Arratoon applied for a patent, which Lord Dalhousie informed him he had not the power to grant, assuring him, however, that "every facility which he could, by any means at his disposal, procure for him in carrying out his desirable object, his Lordship was very willing to afford;" and recommending him to explain shortly the nature of the assistance he required, and the mode in which it could be most available given; adding, that "the Governor-General would accede to any practicable and reasonable request." Mr. Arratoon accordingly stated that what he required was, "a rahdaree perwanna to the hill chieftains, to the effect that he was not to be molested, and was to have any assistance he might stand in need of,—such as workmen and coolies, at the usual hire,—in felling and floating masts from the Himalayas down the rivers. Moreover, he asked that the Governor-General would sanction the Naval Board of Bombay in granting him a contract for ten years for timbers and spars, and would give him a twenty or thirty years' lease of certain copper and lead mines! To these requests, which do not imply any remarkable bashfulness on the part of this Armenian trader, the Governor-General replied that he was willing to afford him every facility in procuring timber from the Himalayas if he would show that he had sufficient means for carrying the project into execution; and directing him to communicate with the Board of Administration at Lahore on the subject. Sir H. Elliot remarks, that if Mr. Arratoon had simply asked for "protection" for his trade, no reference would have been made to his means; but he asked for privileges,—rahdaree perwannas,—which would have carried him into the territories of Maharajah Golar Singh and every rajah in the hills, with powers over persons and prices; that he, moreover, asked for contracts extending over a series of years, and the Governor-General would have dealt lightly with the public interests if he had granted such privileges and powers without first ascertaining that the grantee was able to fulfil the ends for which they were to be granted, and to perform the large contracts he proposed to undertake: "subsequent events," it is added, "have shown that these usual and reasonable precautions were not without necessity." No application, he says, was made to the Board of Administration, and an explanation given by that Board seems to suggest a reason. Mr. Arratoon had been known to the President (Sir H. Lawrence) for ten or eleven years as an active, enterprising, and plausible man; but, although he had made large profits upon his supplies to the army in Afghanistan, he was not believed ever to have had any capital, or to have been more than a small shopkeeper. They say that, in 1840-41, he induced Sir Henry (then Captain) Lawrence, in charge of Ferozepore, to give him a lease of waste lands on light clearance terms, promising to set up a sugar-mill, and being full of schemes, none of which he carried out. Whatever was the cause, however, Mr. Arratoon made no sign.

This is the reply to the charge, and a more direct, explicit, and complete refutation cannot be expected or desired. As the Board of Administration observe, Mr. Arratoon's not communicating with them appears to prove that he had not the requisite capital, or feared to have his propositions tested. The authority which this crafty Armenian sought from the Government would, they add, "have made him virtually master not only of the forests of the hill chiefs, but of their subjects too."

Sir Charles has transmitted from this country to the editor of a Bombay paper a rejoinder;* and what does it say? It professes to convict Lord Dalhousie of an error in representing that he (Sir Charles) had received Arratoon's complaint at Simla, and treasured it up; whereas it had been made to him at Ferozepore, after he had resigned his command! If the complaint was substantially groundless, what matters it when or where it was made? Of the facts brought forward by Sir H. Elliot and the Board of Administration, which thoroughly justify Lord Dalhousie, and disprove the accusation so publicly and so incautiously uttered, Sir Charles Napier takes no notice whatever. This is not candid.

A man so irritable in regard to all imputations upon his own character as Sir Charles Napier should feel a little tenderness towards the characters of others.

THE Government has at length, in accordance with the recommendation of the Select Committee of the Commons upon steam-communication with India, invited proposals for contracting to convey the mails to and from India, China, and Australia, by five lines of steamers, the scheme of service, though still to a certain extent imperfect, being a vast improvement of the present system.

It is proposed, first, that a line of steamers to Alexandria and back shall leave England in the beginning of each month, calling at Gibraltar and Malta, with a branch from Marseilles to Malta and back, conveying the mails carried across France; secondly, that a similar line, from England to Alexandria and back, shall leave England in the middle of each month, with a similar branch between Marseilles and Malta; thirdly, that a line from Suez to Calcutta and Hong-kong and back, monthly, shall take the mails which leave England in the beginning of the month, touching at Aden and Point de Galle, whence one steamer will proceed to Calcutta by Madras, and another by Penang to Singapore and Hong-kong, these steamers being met at Aden, out and home, by the East-India Company's vessels, which will convey the mails and passengers between Aden and Bombay; fourthly, that a similar line from Suez to Calcutta and Hong-kong and back, monthly, shall convey the mid-monthly mails, in like manner, to Point de Galle, to Calcutta by Madras, and by Penang to Singapore and Hong-kong, vessels of the East-India Company leaving

* No. 178, p. 455. No. 179, p. 486.

* Last No., p. 706.

Suez at the same time with the Bombay mails and passengers, and the return mails from Bombay being likewise conveyed by Company's vessels to Suez; fifthly, that every alternate month, a steamer shall leave Singapore for Sydney on the arrival of the outward packet with the mid-monthly mails from England of every alternate month, and leave Sydney so as to meet at Singapore the homeward packet that will arrive there from China after the lapse of two months,—these steamers to touch both ways at Batavia, Swan River (or King George's Sound), Adelaide, and Port Phillip.

This scheme fulfils the recommendation of the Committee in favour of a full communication every fortnight between England, the different presidencies of India, and China. The communication with Australia is limited to every alternate month between Singapore and Sydney; but as the Government had previously invited tenders for a semi-monthly mail between England and Sydney by the Cape of Good Hope, these joint services will establish a monthly communication with Australia.

The service now performed by the vessels of the Indian Navy between the Arabian Gulf and Bombay is left in the hands of the East-India Company, this subject being connected with political considerations.

As the existing arrangements will not expire until the close of the next year, the scheme cannot come into operation compulsorily until the beginning of 1853.

THE land assessment of India, if the system be well administered, is a simple mode of defraying the cost of government, and far less vexatious than the various indirect imposts which contribute to the same end in Europe. The great bulk of the taxation in the former case is paid in the shape of a rent, and the state has a visible fiscal interest in promoting the agricultural prosperity of the country, whilst all the other great branches of industry,—manufactures and trade,—are almost untaxed. The land-revenue system, however, in native states, is liable to great abuses; extortion on the one hand, and evasion on the other, give rise to innumerable mischiefs, which more than counterbalance its advantages. These two sources of evil react upon and aggravate one another. There will always exist a natural antipathy betwixt the tax-collector and the taxpayer, more especially where the former is armed with discretionary power, and the latter can resort to means of eluding his just demands. But the oppression of the Indian collector forces the taxpayer upon expedients to disappoint his cupidity, and these artifices again stimulate the other's rapacity. Moreover, the agency employed in those states is of the worst description, multiplying and exasperating the evils just mentioned. A long series of functionaries, acting under temporary, delegated authority,—from the great grantee of certain districts, to the lowest deputy, each intent upon enriching himself at the cost of the cultivator,—is the machinery by which the assessment is to find its way from the taxpayers into the Government treasury.

The details given in another part of our paper of the revenue system of the Nizam's territory will create surprise that the Deccan population should have borne its torments so long without some combined attempt at resistance, especially when we are told by the writer of the paper (Dr. Walker, of the Nizam's army), that fiscal oppression, severe as it is, weighs on them far less heavily than the bands of foreign mercenaries retained by the Nizam.

The process by which the revenue is collected in that unhappy country is said to be this. An individual, presumed to be wealthy, goes to the minister and offers his services as a talookdar. If they are accepted, he pays into the treasury a fixed sum, to be collected from the districts assigned to him, less one-eighth, for expenses of collection. He then receives his sunnud, presents his nuzzur (a handsome sum), and here his care of his districts generally ends. He lives indolently at Hyderabad, and delegates his authority to a Naib, who, with a stipend of 20*l.* a month, has to collect a revenue of, perhaps, 30,000*l.* a year. He appoints Chota Naibs, Peshcars, and other subordinates of his own, and with this array proceeds to his province "with the power of a satrap and the pay of an ensign." The parties with whom he comes in contact are the zemindars, or farmers of the revenue; these he either conciliates, and then the grievances of the ryots are not listened to; or coerces, and then the country is in an uproar. If a wronged zemindar repairs to Hyderabad, and, as is very probable, gets no redress from the talookdar, he goes to the minister, from whom, if he can pay a good bribe, he may obtain justice; but, if empty-handed, he is recommended to return, and make peace with the Naib, lest worse should befall him.

The zemindars, however, are not the submissive and tractable vassals they might be supposed to be from what has been just stated. They and the patells, another species of farmer, are congenial spirits, tyrants in their own villages and often rebels to the state. If a zemindar fall into arrear, and, bribes failing, the Government attempt to resume his lands, the other zemindars make common cause with him, and, should the defaulter be ejected, and another farmer substituted, the latter runs the risk, as in Ireland, in analogous cases, of being murdered. Resumptions of lands are, therefore, rare, and the fatal gifts are little coveted.

The cultivators, in this state of things, may reasonably be supposed to be in no enviable condition; but they take refuge, as before observed, in craft and artifice. When, as in some tenures, the Government officials and the ryots are brought into immediate contact, there is, says Dr. Walker, "endless lying and falsehood on both sides." When Tuc-cave advances are made,—at the moderate interest of 25 per cent.—the instalments are levied in the most oppressive manner. Appraisers are employed, whose remuneration depends upon the degree in which they meet the exorbitant views of the collectors. Wilful "mistakes" are made by these publicans, and "any one who makes a progress through the Nizam's dominions too often sees protests against their proceedings, in fields of ripe corn remaining uncut and hastening to destruction, by the refusal of the ryots to cut their crops under the unjust conditions proposed to them."

These particulars will afford a faint idea of the lamentable condition of some of the finest provinces of India, subject to a Mahomedan ruler, whose maxims of government are wholly selfish; who has no commiseration whatever for the sufferings of the great body of the people, even of his own creed. As to the administration of justice in general, we are told by the same authority, that "there is probably no department in the Nizam's state where there are such deviations from all established notions of equity and good government." How can we wonder that persons familiar with this perversion of rule should, in the interest of the people, call for its suppression, and advocate the annexation of the territory to the British dominions, overlooking, for the sake of so beneficial a change, some of the considerations of public law?

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—In your publication of the 4th December, a letter from "M. G." calls attention to a letter which appeared in a former number of your paper, signed "A Mahomedan Moonshee." This latter correspondent alleged, in his communication, that "he has never met with an Englishman who could correctly read, write, or speak, any of the languages current in India;" and from this remark your correspondent "M. G." seems to have struck out the bright idea, that the great specific for all Indian maladies is a thorough knowledge of the languages on the part of the Company's civil and military servants. He says: "Here is an improvement of vast and primary importance, which is simple and easy, and would cost nothing;" and again: "let no civil or military servant be employed in India until he is thoroughly conversant in the native languages."

Now, Sir, we will just suppose a civil servant arrived in one of the presidencies,—say Madras,—fresh from Haileybury, and deeply impressed with the necessity of acquiring the native languages. He has heard much of Hindostani, not only in the letter from "A Mahomedan Moonshee," but also from his revered preceptors at college, and, firmly believing it to be the one language which of all others it is of the most importance for him to become intimately conversant with, he applies himself to it with all the energy of which he is capable. The rules of the college oblige him, we will say, to pass in another language also before he obtains an appointment, and he acquires a smattering of Telugu,—that is, he can read and translate fables in it, and make his moonshee understand what he says. He proceeds up the country to Trichinopoly. Hindostani is the only language which he can speak intelligibly. He is surprised to find that no natives but Mussulmans at all understand him. He tries Telugu; but he is equally at fault with that language. What is he to do? It is true, he can carry on the duties of his office, in Hindostani or Telugu, through the medium of interpreters; but that is what "M. G." will have at no price. And "M. G." is quite right in his supposition, that there are manifold evils in such a course. However, this is what our civilian is driven to, and, while the natives of the country speak the language called "Tamil," he and his interpreters converse in Hindostani or Telugu. Well, after a time, his appointment is changed to the western coast of India,—say Canara,—and there he finds two new languages come into play,—Canarese and Tulu. He can still, as before, find Hindostani, though no Telugu, interpreters; but he finds that the Tulu is the language which the great body of the people speak, while Canarese, the language of the Mysore and Hyderabad countries, is mostly spoken by the officials and higher classes. If he has any great taste for languages, he may also be introduced to the Mahratta and Concani; but his Hindostani will be intelligible to comparatively but a small class, and his Telugu to, perhaps, a stray brahmin in ten thousand: of the two, he must choose the Hindostani, for in that he can find plenty of interpreters, and the abundance of his duties prevents his engaging in the study of either Tulu, Canarese, or Mahratta. His Telugu is entirely neglected, and, in the course of a few years, forgotten, and by that time he gets sent to the Northern Circars, where Telugu and Canarese only are spoken, and where I doubt if he would even find a Hindostani interpreter. Here he is fairly at a loss, and is compelled, probably, to study one or other of these languages. Now, after a certain age, it is well known, people lose all facility of acquiring languages colloquially, and he finds that he can render himself intelligible to the natives (even when speaking their own language) only through the medium of an interpreter.

Now this, Sir, is not at all an unfairly stated case. The fact is, there are, in the Madras territories alone, the following spoken languages: Telugu, with copious literature; Canarese, ditto; Tamil, ditto; Malayalam, ditto; Tulu, some literature; and the most corrupt Hindostani, by the Mussulman population: making six, exclusive of Mahratta and Concani, which should, perhaps, have a place among the number.

Perhaps "M. G." will say, "Very well; the system that sends people about to so many districts is wrong. Let a man learn a language, and settle him down to the locality in which it is current." In practice, however, this plan is found not to answer. Narrow and confined views are the result of too exclusive a residence in one particular part of India. Let us, then, see what is to be done.

It appears from the Mahomedan Moonshee's letter, and it is possibly the case, that no civil or military servants of the Company acquire the languages so perfectly as not to make the most egregious mistakes in idiom and orthography, in speaking and writing. An Englishman cannot transgress the domestic landmarks of the people of India. He is of impure caste, and is not allowed access to their society; and, in consequence, can only learn the native languages from servants and moonshees. Should we expect a Frenchman, who learnt English in the same way, to be ever able to converse easily with the great mass of our people? Few men are Kossuths. There is, therefore, an insurmountable difficulty in the way to the acquisition of even one language so perfectly as to pass the ordeal of educated criticism; how much more forcibly does the above difficulty apply to the array of languages which meets a civilian at the very threshold of his career! But happily, Sir, the fact is, that, although the system of interpreters is dispensed with in but a very few instances, if any, the languages are all so nearly related to each other, that an acquaintance with one enables a careful officer to detect an interpreter in any false play, and the great body of the natives of India, while they have for magistrates and judges honest and courageous men, will put up with the evil of the interpreter system, which can never be wholly dispensed with as long as we hold India. The fact, that the "Mahomedan Moonshee" has included the military in his censure, will, if such an authority can be allowed any weight, show that, even where the attention of Englishmen is devoted for a long course of years to one sole language (namely, the Hindostani, which is the only one required of the military service), little more than a respectable proficiency can be attained to.

It is too much the habit of people in England to believe all the nonsense of grievance-mongers, without inquiring for themselves. They get an idea that the civil service is a bed of luxury and idle enjoyment, and ask, "Why don't they (the civil servants) employ their leisure in studying the languages?" and are incredulous when informed, which is indeed the fact, that the civil servants have no leisure beyond what is required for meals and exercise, and many not even for the latter. No one will deny the advantage to civilians of an intimate acquaintance with the languages of India; but many of the most eminent of the civil service were unacquainted with the vernaculars of the countries where they have served, and where their memories are most revered. Natives of the south of India speak of Sir Thomas Munro with tears in their eyes; but people in those parts no more understood his Persian than the people of Hungary would understand Lord Palmerston's English, were he to go and preach to them. It is deeds more than words that are regarded by the natives of India.

Pardon me, Sir, for having troubled you with so long a letter.

I am,

Your obedient servant,

A CIVILIAN.

EAST-INDIA COLLEGE, HAILEYBURY.

CLOSE OF THE TERM.

Tuesday being the day appointed for closing the second term for the year 1851, a deputation from the Court of Directors of the East-India Company visited the College, for the purpose of receiving the Report of the Principal, and of distributing the medals and prizes awarded to the successful competitors in the various branches of Oriental, Classical, and European literature.

On the arrival of the Directors and the Visitors at Haileybury, the distinguished party proceeded to the lodge to pay their respects to the Principal (the Rev. H. Melvill). The Directors then repaired to the Council-room, where they received the following highly satisfactory Report from the Reverend the Principal:—

"The Principal has much satisfaction in being able to report to the Honourable the Finance and Home Committee, that all the twenty students, constituting the Fourth Term, have been found duly qualified for quitting the College. Nineteen of these have displayed an amount of proficiency exceeding that which is demanded by the statutes, and many of the number deserve very high commendation for the attainments shown in various departments.

"At an early stage of the examination, two students, having been detected in unfairness, were immediately punished with loss of the term, so that only sixty-four are to be considered as having gone through the examination. Of these only two have failed to present the amount of proficiency required for the keeping the term. The remaining sixty-two have passed with various degrees of merit, but a very large proportion have displayed a greater than the necessary proficiency, forty-three being returned as highly distinguished, and fourteen as having passed with great credit.

"It is satisfactory to observe, that, though some students have laden themselves with prizes, there has been a great amount of competition for these rewards, no fewer than nineteen having obtained the honourable distinction of prizemen.

"The important subject of English composition continues to receive a very marked attention. Forty-eight essays were sent in by competitors for the prize, so that more than two-thirds of the students voluntarily undertook a great additional labour. Many of these exercises were highly creditable to the authors, and evinced both ability and industry.

"With regard more particularly to the Oriental classes, the visitor remarks that they do not call for any special notice on the present occasion. The two senior terms have maintained the character which they have hitherto deserved; and the two junior, although not distinguished by many instances of more than usual ability, have exhibited a very creditable amount of steady application. The fourth term offers in all the languages studied, a few cases of great proficiency; and it may be observed that of the five students who have that mark in Sanscrit, four have the same in two other languages also: one has the medal awarded him for Sanscrit and Telugu; another for Hindustani.

"In the third term there is a similar accumulation of honours. Of the five students who stand first in Sanscrit, four have also the mark of great proficiency in Persian and Hindustani. All the senior students of this term have distinguished themselves by the very great amount of their extra reading, voluntarily added to the amount required for passing the statutory examination. Two have also added to their studies very respectable proficiency in Hindi, and one of them has further added to his acquirements a creditable knowledge of Bengali.

"At the same time, it cannot be denied that both the senior terms have a considerable proportion of students, whose attainments only just secure them against absolute failure.

"With at most two exceptions, the students of the second term have not displayed any great aptitude for the acquirement of languages, there being but one instance of great proficiency in Sanscrit, and two in Persian. The student who is at the head of both these classes had added to his attainments a knowledge of a third language, Arabic, very respectable for the time during which he has been able to prosecute the study.

"The students of the first term have all made considerable progress in the elements of Sanscrit, their only subject of Oriental study.

"The principal has great satisfaction in being able to report to the committee, that the term has, on the whole, been passed in remarkable quietness and good order. The great body of the students have conformed themselves, in a most praiseworthy manner, to the rules and regulations of the place; and no occasion has arisen which has called for any severe exercise of authority."

The deputation, after receiving the principal's report, repaired to the Examination Hall, where the visitors and a considerable number of the students had already assembled.

The chair was occupied by John Shepherd, Esq., chairman of the hon. Court of Directors, who, together with the following directors, formed the deputation:—Sir James Weir Hogg, Bart., M.P., deputy chairman; Lieut.-gen. Sir J. L. The following civilians at home were also present:—R. N. Cust, Esq.; C. T. Le Bas, Esq.; A. F. Bellasis, Esq.; George Couper, Esq.; Bransby Cooper, Esq.

Mr. Hope read his Prize Essay in English composition—subject: "How far is it desirable that works of national utility should be left to private enterprise?" The essay was a very able, argumentative, and practical dissertation on the question—whether it is best to confide the execution of public works, such as railways, to Governments, or to private associations of enterprising capitalists. The essayist's conclusions were favourable to private enterprise; but he suggested the propriety of a certain extent of governmental control, in order to ensure the safety and convenience of the public. Mr. Hope, on concluding the reading of his essay, was warmly and repeatedly applauded.

Mr. Ouseley read a passage from Malcolm's History of Persia, translated by himself into Persian. Mr. Ouseley was loudly applauded by his fellow-students.

Mr. Norman, who was also greeted with a burst of cheering, read a passage from Waring's History of the Mahrattas, translated by himself into Telugu.

Mr. Moore read a passage from Dow's Hindustani, translated by himself into Hindustani. He was loudly cheered.

Mr. Norman read a passage from Thomson's Seasons,—the Hymn at the close of the work, commencing—

"These, as they change, Almighty Father, these Are but the varied God."

translated by himself into Sanscrit verse.

The prizes were then distributed to the successful students, who were loudly cheered as they came up to the Directors' table.

Mr. Hooper next read the classification of the Rank of the Students about to depart for India, as follows:—

The Chairman then addressed the assembled students as follows:—

Gentlemen Students,—It is very gratifying to me that, on this, the last occasion on which I shall have an opportunity of addressing you, I am enabled to congratulate you, and all interested in this college, on the successful issue of the present term. I am glad to find that the whole number of the Fourth Term have been duly qualified for quitting college; that out of twenty (the whole number of students in the Term), no fewer than seventeen are returned as "highly distinguished," and that two out of the remaining three have passed with great credit. I find, also, the same favourable proportion of merit both in the Third and First Terms; and only a slight diminution of that proportion in the Second Term. Were it not, therefore, for the circumstance of four students having forfeited their Terms, my task this day would have been one of unalloyed pleasure. This forfeiture, in the case of two out of the four, has, I understand, been caused by the use of unfair means to enable them to pass the prescribed examinations. I must say, I can feel no sympathy for those individuals; such conduct—such a want of that proper self-respect and high-mindedness which ought to characterize students at this college—richly deserves the exposure and punishment which it has met with. (Cheers.) But, gentlemen, I will not dwell on this untoward event. The report, upon the whole, is highly satisfactory; forty-three students out of sixty-four have been returned as highly distinguished, and fourteen of the remaining number have passed with great credit. We have been assured by the Rev. the Principal, that the term has been passed in remarkable quietness and good order; that the great body of the students have conformed themselves in a most praiseworthy manner to the rules and regulations of the college, and that no occasion has arisen which has called for any severe exercise of authority. Therefore, upon the whole, the report is highly creditable to this institution, and satisfactory to all who are interested in its success. And, when I speak of those interested in this college, it is impossible to confine our thoughts to those of our friends who reside in this country. Interesting as the occasion is to us all, peculiarly interesting as it is to the parents of, and others connected with, those who have distinguished themselves here, yet we must admit that these examinations are still more vitally interesting in their results to the people of India, whose welfare and happiness, under God's providence, are so deeply involved in the success of this establishment; and indeed, I may say, in the character and success of each of you individually. (Cheers.) When we think of the vast population of British India, exceeding now in number 120 millions of souls, we cannot resist feelings of intense anxiety and hope on every occasion on which we meet here for the purpose of sending forth those to whom are to be confided such an extended and important trust as administering the affairs of that vast population; and we cannot over-rate the importance of the duties which you will be called upon to perform. That the various duties of the civilian in India are such as may be truly said to involve, in every act of their performance, the happiness of the people, is, I hope, obvious and intelligible to you all. It was this grave and important truth that induced the East-India Company to raise this structure, and to appoint as professors of this college the learned men who are your instructors. It is our thorough conviction of this fact which induces our continuous and anxious desire that those whom we send forth for such important purposes, should be men eminent, not only for superior talents and enlarged views, but also for their sound and substantial virtues, and above all that they should be men animated with a sincere desire to promote the great objects of our Government—the prosperity of India, and the happiness of the people. (Cheers.) And, gentlemen, let me ask what effect are these reflections calculated to produce on your minds? Surely I may answer for you, that your feelings are of a kindred spirit with ours—that you feel deeply the responsibility that devolves upon you—and that you are fully conscious that it is your bounden duty to use your utmost exertions to qualify yourselves for undertaking with success the very important duties which the nature of our Government and the peculiar position of the people of India will require you to perform. (Cheers.) This must be the predominant feeling in the minds of all of you who accustom yourselves to reflect on your future position; and I should be sorry to think that there are any of you who do not occasionally think seriously on these things. I should regret it still more if I thought that by thus dwelling on the importance of your duties I should be merely adding to your own importance. It would be my endeavour rather to chasten such feelings if they exist in the minds of any of you; and to induce that calm and sober reflection, which will convince you that power and influence can only be exercised for good by those possessing the virtues and qualifications to direct them aright. (Cheers.) Whilst I press upon you, therefore, the advantages of superior talents, remember that I combine with them the possession of the strictest principles of honour and integrity. We require the sound qualities of the heart as well as the necessary furnishing of the head; and the present period of your life is that during which both objects must be accomplished; for the most transcendent talents may be worse than useless if unaccompanied with the substantial principles of Christian virtue. Hence, I am desirous of impressing upon you the importance of attending to every portion of your prescribed duties. That portion of them involving the inculcation of religious principles and sound morals, deserves equal, if not more special attention; and therefore I repeat the request I made last Term, that you should by no means consider attendance at chapel a matter of form, which may be dispensed with without detriment to yourselves, on the ground of want of time for your numerous studies. I admit the various branches of your necessary studies are numerous, and require the devotion of a considerable portion of your time; but if I could only induce you to adopt a regular method or system of pursuing them, I am persuaded you would find ample time for them all. It is the want of regularity and system in apportioning your time, which is the cause of the occasional failures that occur. To attain excellence, or proficiency, in any pursuit requires a certain degree of arrangement, attention, and labour for its accomplishment; and it is too much for any man to expect to qualify himself for the civil service in India without adopting means necessary for attaining so high an object. While speaking on this point, let me call your attention to the exertions making by the natives of India in the present day. European science and European literature are now studied in India, not only with diligence, but with success. The examinations on those subjects, passed by native students, show little, if any, inferiority in comparison with Europeans. They have become competitors with you on your own field of action, and on ground hitherto untrudged by them; and unless you sustain the race with additional zeal and energy, they may pass you. Should this ever occur; should the natives of India surpass us in intellectual vigour and qualifications, can we hope to remain longer the possessors of the powers and privileges we now enjoy? Certainly not. Our country, then, calls upon you, and upon all seeking service in India, not to fall short of the attainments of the most distinguished of your predecessors; not even to be content with equalling their attainments, but to go on and exceed them; and thus to secure, and to show that you are worthy of, pre-eminence of place by your pre-eminence in qualification. Gentlemen of the Fourth Term: You will not return to this college, and some months will elapse before you reach your several destinations in India. Permit me, therefore, to impress upon you, now, the advantage and importance of your adopting means for preserving and retaining fresh in your memory that which you have already learnt. I allude particularly to the knowledge you have acquired in the native languages. I am informed that the progress of many of our students in India has been retarded, and the position of some lost, by their having neglected to take this precaution. Now, this ought to be guarded against, by your making a point of devoting a portion of each day to refreshing your memories, by looking over the exercises, which you have prepared during your residence here, and in endeavouring to add to your knowledge, generally, such information as will be most valuable during your future career. You must all be aware of the great advantages attending a speedy completion of your studies in India, and of the great danger—indeed, the utter ruin, which protracted delay may bring upon you. It is my duty to inform you that the regulation which requires the civil servant to qualify himself for the public service within a prescribed period is rigorously enforced, and that failure in accomplishing this object involves the heavy penalty of forfeiture of your appointment. Such a regulation is but just to the people of India and to our Government; for it must be evident to all men, that those who will not take the necessary trouble of qualifying themselves for their duty within a reasonable period, will never become creditable or worthy members of the civil service of India. I trust, however, that there are none here who are thus likely to hazard their future prospects and good name. It would be far better that gentlemen, who do not possess the proper spirit and energy for fully qualifying themselves, should choose some more appropriate field for their labours than the civil administration of India. (Cheers.) When you are once appointed to the public service, you will soon perceive the advantages and facilities which your attainments will afford you for the ready performance of your duty. You will be fully able to appreciate the acquirements of those placed under you. You will know how to estimate their character; how far your confidence may be extended, and when, and how, it is to be modified by personal vigilance and observation. I may safely assure you that the native character is such as always improves under judicious, efficient, and considerate masters. There may be exceptions to this rule; but I believe that there are no people on the face of the earth more open to the influence of good example, and more susceptible of attachment and gratitude to those who treat them well, than the people of India. This, therefore, of itself, apart from feelings of duty, ought to influence your conduct favourably towards them. (Cheers.) And, whilst I would have you to insist on the faithful and strict performance of every public duty, I would beg of you to be considerate and forbearing in all matters involving their peculiar habits, and more particularly their religious feelings. The manner in which you perform your own duty will materially influence the conduct of those around you. A lax and careless chief is not likely to have a very attentive assistant. I would impress upon you, therefore, the necessity of exhibiting in your own persons a prominent example, from the first commencement of your career, of a prompt and regular performance of your own public duties, avoiding all procrastination or postponement of business that can be dealt with immediately. (Cheers.) And, gentlemen, I would have you remember that if there ever was a period when it beloved men in your position to be fully alive to the importance of the full, prompt, and faithful discharge of your public duties, it is the present. The days are gone by when it required many months, nay, years, to review in England the proceedings of our administration in India. This is now only the work of weeks. The facilities of communication bring you almost under the immediate control of public opinion in your native country. There is now no longer concealment in distance; and in a brief period, we shall have the mistakes of incompetence and the offences of indolence, so speeded to us by electricity and steam, that the errors of the courts of Delhi shall be as patent and as promptly before us as those of Westminster Hall. (Loud cheers.) I must not forget to mention that one very necessary accessory to the prompt and efficient discharge of public business, is care and circumspection in the management of your own private affairs. Nothing is more hazardous to the prospects of a young civilian, than carelessness and embarrassment in pecuniary matters; if once tolerated even for a few months at the commencement of your career, the probability is that it will go on increasing until at last it becomes a serious obstacle to your preferment. Debt will paralyze your energies, destroy your feelings of independence, and create towards you, in the minds of others, that mistrust and want of confidence which will prove a fatal barrier to your employment in any position of value and importance. With what propriety can Government entrust the management of the important affairs of others to those who cannot manage their own? Make it a point then, not, under any circumstances, to get in debt. Treat with scorn that absurd notion which sometimes takes possession of weak minds, that young men in your position will be looked up to and respected in proportion to the amount of their disbursements. The fact is directly the reverse; prudence and judicious economy will be strong recommendations in your favour, especially to the Government under which you serve. Gentlemen, by the kindness of your friends, you are placed in a position where, in addition to benefitting yourselves, you will also have a most extensive field for contributing to the happiness of others. It has often struck me that this is one circumstance peculiarly calculated to encourage the civilian;—the whole range of your duties is such, that you may be continually instrumental in doing good to others. Do not treat lightly this delightful privilege, or the responsibility you thus incur. Endeavour, through life, to avail yourselves of every opportunity thus afforded you. You will find the satisfactory accomplishment of these high objects the greatest solace and comfort, in after life, you can enjoy, either in circumstances of prosperity or adversity. (Cheers.) You are proceeding to join a distinguished service, which has furnished many bright examples of the virtues I have alluded to,—of men whose services both to India and England have been rewarded with the highest honours. Be it your study to emulate the example of such men, and you may merit similar rewards. Remember, that the honour of your country and the prosperity of the people of India are the great objects of your mission; and that in forwarding them you adopt the surest means of promoting your own advancement, and establishing your own reputation. Remember, that the strength and security of our government in India rest upon the attachment of the people to our rule; that this attachment must be retained by a strict adherence to principles of honour, justice, and good faith; and that each of you, in your several stations, will be expected to exhibit and develop these principles in your daily life, and more particularly in the discharge of your public duties. These objects will be effectually attained if, under the blessing of God, you earnestly desire to accomplish them. I say, under the blessing of God, not merely as words of course; I desire anxiously that on all occasions—in matters of great or small importance, on questions of public duty or of a private nature, you should earnestly seek that the blessing of God should attend you. It is the highest test by which you can prove the propriety and purity of your motives and actions. Trust not, therefore, to your own strength alone, but seek support, daily and habitually, of Him who will always prosper the faithful exertions of those who put their trust in Him. Gentlemen, I wish you all farewell. (Loud and continued applause.)

At the close of the address to the students, the deputation and visitors left the examination-hall; and having perambulated the college grounds for a short time, repaired to the library, where an elegant luncheon was provided by the college purveyor, Mr. Coleman. John Shepherd, Esq., the chairman of the Court of Directors, presided, supported by the Rev. the Principal, and the members of the deputation. The Oriental visitors also sat at the chairman's table.

At the close of the repeat,

The Chairman rose and said—It is not necessary for me to use any persuasion to induce this distinguished company to do honour to the toast which it is usual to drink upon these occasions. It is my duty to tender the best thanks of the Court of Directors to the Rev. the Principal, the dean, and the professors of this college, for their zealous and successful labours in furtherance of the great object we have in view. (Cheers.) What a theme for a speech it would be if I dwelt upon the importance of the duty which is confided to them of training men for the civil service of India! On this subject, however, I shall not touch. Permit me, however, to say, that it is most gratifying to the Court of Directors to know that, in the persons of the principal and the professors of this college, they have the assistance of men eminent for their talents and acquirements,—as eminent for their eloquence and their various attainments, as any in the world. We are also assured that no teachers could be more anxious than they are to promote, by their efforts, those great objects which the Court of Directors seek to carry out by the instruction and preparation of the young men in this college for the important duties they will be called upon to fulfil in India. (Cheers.) Gentlemen, I have much pleasure in proposing the health of the principal and professors of this college, and in wishing success to their labours. (Loud cheers.)

The Rev. the Principal rose and said—It cannot fail to be highly gratifying to myself and the professors of the college to find our endeavours to promote the efficiency of this institution acknowledged in terms of such marked approbation. We know, indeed, that such expressions as have now been kindly used are often a mere empty compliment; for, certainly, he were but young in the world who should attach too much weight to a toast or an after-dinner speech. But the position in which this college stands to the East-India Company is too important,—interests too vast depend on its wholesome estate, to allow me, for a moment, to suppose that the Court of Directors, or you, Sir, as the organ of that Court, would bestow praise where it was not believed to be thoroughly deserved. (Cheers.) And much as we love praise—we confess to that weakness—I can answer for myself, I can answer for the professors, that we desire, above all things, to have fault found wherever there may appear a just cause for blame. (Cheers.) I have, indeed, learned—though it took me some years to acquire the requisite hardness—not to be disquieted at every rumour which may chance to be afloat; not, for example, to be distressed, if those who cannot distinguish between a school and a college, complain that we do not rule young men on precisely the same laws as those on which ushers rule boys. But this does not indicate any indifference to wholesome censure. I do not so much dread, as court, that censure. (Cheers.) I long for the well-being of the civil service of India. I feel that with that well-being is associated the prosperity, the permanence of our East-Indian empire,—I might almost say, the glory and the greatness of the British name. Show me, then, deficiencies in the administration of this college, which trains the civil service; and, if they be deficiencies for which I am answerable, I thank you for the reproof; if they be deficiencies which I can remedy, I will set myself to their correction. (Loud cheers.) The day may not be distant when this College will have to be put on its defence. Let that day come, and we think to be able to prove, that here we labour, and not unsuccessfully, to impart high and varied information; that we strive to develop the mental powers; to prepare men for the discharge of judicial and political functions: above all, that we do our best to discountenance vice, and uphold virtue, and thus to stock India with the best missionaries of Christianity—civilians of high principles and pure lives. (Cheers.) Such shall be our defence. If we can make it good, we are above attack; if it be not a truth, we deserve to fail. But I ought, perhaps, to ask pardon for dwelling thus much on ourselves. Suffer me now, Mr. Chairman, in the name of the college, to thank you for the very excellent address that you have this day delivered to the students;—one would have thought, from its freshness, that it had been your first, in place of your sixth. I desire, also, to thank this distinguished company for the kindness which they have shewn to myself and the professors. I can assure you that we are deeply sensible of that kindness, and we desire to drink all our healths in return. (Loud cheers.)

The deputation and visitors then retired from the library, and shortly afterwards returned to town.

The next term will commence on Monday, the 19th of January.

The examination of the candidates for admission into the college next term will be held at the East-India House, on Thursday, the 8th of January.

The Chairman, in presenting a handsome sword, the prize of good conduct, and the Pollock gold medal, to Mr. Basevi, highly complimented him upon the exemplary conduct and diligence which had obtained for him this accumulation of honours and rewards. The Pollock Medal, he reminded the students, had been struck by the inhabitants of Calcutta in commemoration of the distinguished services of Lieut.-General Sir G. Pollock, which he trusted every winner of the medal would endeavour to emulate. (Cheers.)

Mr. T. Clarke, of the Cadet Department, East-India House, then read the reports of the Public Examiner, Major-General Sir C. Pasley, K.C.B., and the Lieut.-Governor of the institution, Lieut.-Colonel F. Abbott, C.B., which gave a most satisfactory account of the acquisitions, conduct, and discipline of the cadets during the past term.

The Chairman thereupon addressed the students as follows:—Gentlemen cadets, I congratulate you most cordially on the very satisfactory reports which we have just heard read. They assure us that, during the late term, you have conducted yourselves with strict propriety, and have improved your time with praiseworthy diligence and attention to your studies. It is very gratifying to find that an average proportion of the first-class have attained the highest standard required for commissions in the corps of engineers; that sixteen have gained commissions in the artillery; that the remaining number have fully qualified themselves for commissions in the line; and, further, that there is not one instance in the whole seminary of rustication or loss of term. (Hear.) Thus, the high reputation of Addiscombe as a military college has been fully and honourably maintained. (Hear, hear.) I need not tell you that those results are most gratifying to the Court of Directors. Deeply interested in the prosperity and honour of the Indian army, nothing can be more satisfactory to us than to witness the successful exertions of those to whom we must look hereafter for the maintenance of the character and reputation of that army. (Hear.) Before I proceed further, then, let me express how much we are indebted to the distinguished general, Sir Charles Pasley, the Public Examiner, for his care and impartiality in conducting the examinations; to the gallant and indefatigable lieutenant-governor; to the learned professors and teachers, and to all the officers of the establishment, for their very zealous and successful labours in furtherance of these gratifying results. Gentlemen, I have addressed you on so many occasions on the great advantages which the Indian officer derives from superior education, that, seeing I must repeat the same sentiments, I shall find it difficult to avoid reiterating the same arguments. I would observe, however, that these advantages are now so obvious to all men, that it may be considered superfluous to dwell upon them. The measures adopted and continued by Her Majesty's Government and his Grace the Commander-in-Chief for securing a certain degree or standard of education from all candidates for commissions in the Queen's army, and the similar regulations enforced by the Court of Directors with reference to all direct nominations to commissions in the Indian army, evince, in the most emphatic manner, the increased value and importance which those authorities attach to the subject of education. Gentlemen, if you require further stimulus or inducement to exertion, believe me it is to be found in every possible view that can be taken of your future position. Your reputation as officers, and your personal interests as individuals, will entirely depend upon your abilities and good conduct; for, although length of service may bring you promotion in your regiment, it does not carry with it, as a matter of course, high office or increased honour. In India the duties intrusted to military officers are frequently of an important and very onerous character, and, before selecting men for such employment, the necessary inquiry must be made for those possessed of the highest talents, the most extensive information, and whose character for zeal, energy, and discretion renders them fittest for the particular duty. And in such positions officers are frequently thrown entirely on their own resources. They may be removed a great distance from headquarters, and obliged to act with promptness and decision in difficult matters without reference to higher authority. Now, let me ask you to imagine yourselves for one moment placed in such a position as I have described, and that, peradventure, you are found wanting in those acquirements which are now within your reach of attainment at this seminary. What would be your feelings in such a position? Why, undoubtedly, a never-ceasing regret that you had not laboured more earnestly at Addiscombe, or that you had ever been selected to perform a duty to which you were unequal. Gentlemen, are you not, one and all, ready to exclaim, such shall never be your position, and that, whatever others may do, you will not hazard your future prospects in life by neglecting the favourable opportunities that are now afforded you? You will bear in mind, also, that it is not alone in positions of high importance where the qualifications I have alluded to are so beneficial. In situations of an ordinary description the advantages of knowledge and education are equally obvious. For instance, the duties of any staff appointment—say in the Judge-Advocate's, the commissariat, or pay-department, of an adjutant or quartermaster, or even the ordinary regimental duties of an officer, will be executed with a promptitude and facility by the well-educated man altogether unknown to him of inferior attainments. I trust, therefore, I have said enough to convince you all of the great advantages ultimately to be derived from diligence and exertion in the prosecution of your studies, and that you who are to return here after the vacation, will renew with continued and increased vigour the laudable course which has marked your progress during the last term. (Hear, hear.) Gentlemen of the first class, you now quit this seminary for ever, and will in a few months proceed to India and enter on the active duties of your profession. Now, although I have no desire to deprive you of proper relaxation and moderate enjoyment, I would warn you against falling into the common error of supposing that because you have now left college your education is complete, and that henceforth pleasure and amusement may be properly followed as the chief objects of your pursuit. To act on this principle, and thus run the risk of forgetting what you have learnt, will really be sacrificing most imprudently the advantages you have acquired here by hard study. Let me entreat you rather to cherish the regular habits of application which your training here must have in some degree inculcated. Continue to appropriate a certain portion of each day for the purpose of keeping alive in your memory what you have learnt, and for the increased cultivation of your mental improvement by useful reading. With reference to the latter, I would recommend you to be as select in your choice of books as you would be in your choice of companions. (Hear, hear.) The biography of great and good men, the best histories of your own country, of India, and of Europe, and such standard works, will be more instructive than the numerous evanescent publications of the day. (Hear, hear.) Let me remind you that your character as gentlemen and officers will be moulded and formed during the next few years of your life; that your daily habits and occupation, the character of your companions, and your amusements, and your reading, all tend to form the future man for good or evil; and that consequently your prospects through life must be materially influenced by the degree of care and circumspection you exhibit during this the most critical period of your career. One of your first duties on your arrival in India will be to acquire a knowledge of the native languages, to enable you to communicate readily with the Sipahes. Until this object is effected, you will not have the power of estimating his character, or conciliating his esteem and good-will, objects most essential for your own comfort as well as for your efficiency as officers of the Indian army. I may assure you, however, for your encouragement, that those duties, the more they are pursued, the more easy and gratifying they become. A colloquial knowledge of Hindustani is by no means difficult of attainment, and such is the character of the native soldier, with reference to his bearing towards his European officer, that he is proverbial for his susceptibility of the most attached and grateful feelings, particularly towards those who treat him with kindness and consideration. (Hear.) You will easily understand how much your own efficiency as officers will depend upon the degree of influence you can gain over those under your command; you should, therefore, endeavour to secure this advantage by evincing at all times a sincere regard for the comfort and happiness of the native soldier. This hold over the minds and affections of those under your command is the most powerful element of strength in the possession of good officers; and to insure its permanency you must maintain it also by the moral effect of your own character and example. The Sipahes is a very observing and sagacious judge of character, and to command, not only his obedience, but his respect and esteem, you must exhibit in your own person a consistent, firm, discreet, and honourable deportment. Violence, arrogance, and irritability of temper, or immoral and dissolute conduct, will render you an object of general dislike and distrust. Gentlemen, I am so well satisfied with the reports which I have received of your good conduct, that I am unwilling to allude, even in the way of warning and caution, to the irregularities and vices which are sometimes the cause of much misery to the careless young officer in India. You will not mistake, however, the spirit of friendship in which I advert to them. (Hear, hear.) In this country you know that intemperance is the fruitful source of nine-tenths of the wretchedness and misery that exist. I am sorry to say that as regards Europeans in India it is not less so, but with this aggravation, that the descent to ruin and degradation is tenfold more rapid, and equally certain; and it is a melancholy and lamentable fact, that when once the baneful habit is acquired, all reform becomes utterly hopeless. This vice ought, therefore, to be shunned and abhorred, as the greatest evil that can befall human nature. I would have you avoid also that nauseous habit of smoking, which has of late become so prevalent; to say the least, it is a filthy and unwholesome practice, and it often leads to the more dangerous excess I have just alluded to. (Hear.) I would entreat you to be careful with regard to your personal expenses. You may have heard of the difficulties in which officers have involved themselves from a disregard to this necessary precaution. I state with deep regret that instances have occurred where extravagant habits have led to such discreditable proceedings as have ultimately involved the loss of commission. You will find your pay and allowances sufficient for your necessary wants, but not without due attention to a prudent and economical management. Extravagance must lead to debt, and nothing will prove more fatal to your comfort and future prospects than such embarrassment. Be careful, therefore, and commence with the greatest precaution. Make it a rule never to allow your expenses to exceed your means (hear); and you will find that such a course of proceeding will gain you the respect and confidence of all good men. (Hear, hear.) I hope it is unnecessary to warn you against a hateful vice which has sometimes been resorted to on the plea of the monotony of life in garrison. The excitement arising from play, or gambling and betting, is beyond all doubt the most demoralizing and debasing that can affect the human heart; it destroys all generous and noble feelings, and engenders a spirit of sordid cunning which frequently terminates in acts of positive dishonesty. (Hear, hear.) The true way of avoiding these evils, my young friends, is to cultivate rational and useful occupations. It is the idle, listless, and ignorant man who becomes their prey. Accustom yourselves to read, as I have said before, and to interest yourselves in useful, in at least innocent pursuits, and you will never be drawn into such dangerous resources. There is still one more important and certain safeguard from such evils which I exhort you earnestly never to lose sight of,—I mean a continued regard to your religious duties. I mention them last, because I desire, above all things, that they should be permanently remembered. If they flourish and abide in your hearts, other duties will not be forgotten. You are about to leave the roof of affectionate parents, who have hitherto watched over you with the most anxious care; do not forget their good counsel; be constant and regular in your correspondence with them; do not imagine that time or distance can weaken or sever the ties that bind you to their hearts; remember the joy and delight inspired through the family circle by glad tidings from a distant land of those beloved. I bid you cherish these precious feelings of affection for your parents. You may perhaps feel the want of such valued friends; but, on such occasions, let me entreat you to have recourse to Him who is your father and your friend in heaven. He will guide you aright in all things. He will show you that the path of duty to Him will ever prove to you the path to honour and reputation.—The chairman concluded by expressing the obligations under which the directors as well as the students lay to his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, to Sir G. Pollock, Sir R. Inglis, and the other distinguished visitors who had honoured them by their attendance. He regarded the presence of the Primate as especially gratifying, because his Grace, being a resident in the immediate vicinity of the college, had an opportunity of appreciating the conduct of the cadets, and had, he believed, formed a favourable impression of their demeanour. His Grace had, at his request, consented to address a few words to the gentlemen cadets, and it was unnecessary he should entreat them to treasure up the wise admonitions which would fall from their venerable and distinguished Primate. (The chairman then resumed his seat amid much applause.)

The Archbishop of Canterbury proceeded to address the meeting, after requesting the cadets, who had risen with his Grace, as a mark of their respect, to resume their seats. His Grace said, their hon. chairman had desired him to say a few words, but they would be very few, for he should be sorry if the last impressions upon their minds should not be those created by the wise and paternal admonitions which they had just heard, and the effect of which he should regret to weaken. Living, as he did, in their neighbourhood, he could not but be interested in such an assemblage as he then saw before him; but, independently of his residing near them, no one could see such a body of young men as were now collected in that room, and who would so soon leave this country, without feeling that interest in their welfare which he was now glad to express. (Hear, hear.) They were going to maintain the honour of their country and their queen in distant lands, but he would have them remember at the same time that they would have to maintain not only their country's honour but also their country's religion. (Hear.) They were going among many who, not knowing the principles of Christianity, would form their opinion of its precepts from the conduct of those whom he was addressing. (Hear, hear.) They would exhibit a spirit of subordination to earthly commanders, and of obedience to military duties; but there was a heavenly Commander still more deserving of their obedience, and He had promised that they who sought Him should find Him if they sought Him with their whole hearts. Let the thought of this promise comfort them in a foreign land, and in those emergencies which the chairman had so feelingly alluded to. He affectionately entreated them to maintain the high character that belonged to them, and never to forget the privileges they had inherited of being English Christians. (Great applause.)

The directors and visitors then adjourned to the dining-hall, where an elegant repast awaited them.

We subjoin some further details of the studies and progress of the cadets during the past term:—

Mathematics.—The full tests of qualification for the scientific corps of the service may be defined as follows:—

Artillery.—Application of algebra to geometry and analytical trigonometry; mechanics, including statics and dynamics; projectiles, hydrostatics, and hydrodynamics; theory of curve lines and conic sections.

Engineers.—Theory of equations and expansion of series; differential calculus, spherical trigonometry, and astronomy.

In subjects so extensive and a class so numerous, it would be impossible to enter into the particular degrees of merit evinced in this examination. The numbers selected for these branches of the service may be considered the best criterion of the success with which this study has been pursued, and amply justified the commendations which the solution of the problems received.

Fortification Department.—The proceedings in this branch of study commenced, as usual in the December examinations, immediately after dinner, in the spacious Sandmodelling-hall, in which the following works were exhibited:—1. Nearly two fronts of Choumura's celebrated system (on a scale of a quarter of an inch to a foot), one of the bastions showing the arrangements of the works under ordinary circumstances, while another bastion illustrated Choumura's idea of a shifting parapet to repel an enemy on discovering the fronts of his attack; every other bastion remaining as originally disposed to repel an attack from within, being, in fact, like so many citadels. This model, which was explained by Cadet Martin, covered a space of about 1,400 square feet. 2. The next was a horizontal section of a complete system of countermines before a front of the modern system, the plane being supposed to pass through them just below the spring of their arches; thus the whole were exposed to view. This model was also on a scale of a quarter of an inch to a foot, and was explained by Cadet Brownlow. 3. The third was a model of the new Prussian system, as constructed near Coblenz, called Fort Alexander, casemates, embrasures, and loopholes, which produced a very striking effect. This was on the same scale, and was explained by Cadets Basevi and D. Thomson. Then followed a cavalier battery for two guns and two howitzers, on a scale of an inch to a foot, and a sunken battery, on a scale of two inches to a foot, which were explained by Cadet Goodfellow. Lastly, a specimen of a double direct sap, pushed out from a parallel, on a scale of an inch to a foot. Nothing could exceed the beautiful symmetry of these sand-models, which were very deservedly admired. The chairman then adjourned to the examination-hall, where the other cadets underwent a viva voce examination by the public examiner, Lieutenant-General Sir Charles Pasley, eight or ten of them having been called upon to construct plans or sections of different systems during the progress of the examination. The drawings of this department were, as usual, highly satisfactory.

LAW.

VICE-CHANCELLOR PARKER'S COURT, DEC. 5.

Ostell v. Lepage.—This was a plea to a bill, the ground being that there was a suit pending in the Supreme Court in Equity in Calcutta, by the plaintiff's attorney there, against the defendant, touching the same matters as those which formed the subject of the present suit. The defendant had put in his answer to the bill filed against him in Calcutta, but it had been declared insufficient, and he had been allowed time to put in a further answer. This he had not done; and in February last a decree was made in Calcutta to take the bill filed there pro confesso. The defendant being in this country, that decree could not be prosecuted. As to part of the bill which had been filed against him in this country, the defendant put in an answer, and pleaded to the whole of such bill the existence of the suit in India, and the decree of the Supreme Court in Calcutta in that suit.

Mr. W. M. James and Mr. Cotton, in support of the plea, submitted that it was contrary to justice that a defendant should be harassed by two suits touching the same matter by one and the same party, especially when the proceedings in the first suit had arrived at a decree.

Mr. Russell and Mr. Bagshawe, for the plaintiff, submitted that no other than a final decree in India could be a bar to the present suit.

His Honour did not think he could allow this plea. A final decree or sentence of a foreign court might be pleaded in bar of a suit. This was not the case here, but merely a plea of a pending suit in India. If both suits were pending in two courts of equity in that country of concurrent jurisdiction, the present would be a good plea, for the second suit would be vexatious. Where an action at law and a suit in equity are pending touching the same matter, the plaintiff may be compelled to elect in which court he will proceed; but, in such a case, it would not be a good plea in this court that there was an action at law pending. In every one of the cases referring to a pending suit in a foreign court, reasons had been found for overruling the plea. Nor could the plea be supported on principle. Pending the suit against him in Calcutta, the defendant quitted India and came to reside in this country, and it was sought to impose on the plaintiff, having the defendant here, all the difficulties of going on against him in Calcutta. The proper course for the defendant would have been to apply to stay proceedings in this court. The plea must, therefore, be overruled.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CAPT. SIR HENRY J. LEEKE, R.N., appointed Superintendent and Commander-in-Chief of the Indian Navy, was sworn in, at a Court of Directors held on the 10th inst.

THE PRINTING-PRESS IN THE EASTERN ARCHIPELAGO.—An interesting shipment has recently taken place to the Church Mission at Sarawak, in Borneo, in the shape of 5 cwt. of type, the gift of Mr. Samuel Lewis, as a further supply for the printing-press, which, with some type, was presented to the mission by Mr. Sharpe, the banker.

THE SOCIETY FOR THE PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL IN FOREIGN PARTS, taking into consideration the probability of a large influx of people into the newly-discovered gold regions of Bathurst, New South Wales, has guaranteed the support of three additional chaplains for that district, to be sent as soon as well qualified men can be found. It is thought that for this particular service unmarried men should be preferred.

A LUMP OF AUSTRALIAN GOLD, weighing 51 oz., has been brought home by H.M.'s ship Havannah, as a present to her Majesty.

LAW MEMBER OF THE SUPREME COUNCIL OF INDIA.—It is now stated, and we have no reason to doubt, that Mr. Peacock, Q.C., will be appointed to this office.

THE PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL COMPANY have latterly expended immense sums of money in applying to their vessels the most recent improvements of which engineering science is capable, in order to augment the speed and efficiency of the large steam ships employed, under contract with the Government, in conveying the mails and in maintaining steam-communication with our Indian possessions, China, &c. The company, in fact, seem determined to beat off and prevent all competition by a lavish, but prudent, expenditure of their ample capital and resources; and not only are the whole of their existing steamers to be improved successively, as opportunities may present themselves, but the company have ordered to be constructed a fleet of gigantic new steam ships, of greater size and power than any that have hitherto been projected for inter-oceanic communications.—Times.

THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.—The Message of the President of the United States to Congress, December 2nd, contains the following passage relative to these islands:—"It is earnestly to be hoped that the differences which have for some time past been pending between the Government of the French Republic and that of the Sandwich Islands may be peaceably and durably adjusted so as to secure the independence of those islands. Long before the events which have of late imparted so much importance to the possessions of the United States on the Pacific, we acknowledged the independence of the Hawaiian Government. This Government was first in taking that step, and several of the leading powers of Europe immediately followed. We were influenced in this measure by the existing and prospective importance of the islands as a place of refuge and refreshment for our vessels engaged in the whale-fishery, and by the consideration that they lie in the course of the great trade which must, at no distant day, be carried on between the western coast of North America and Eastern Asia. We were also influenced by a desire that those islands should not pass under the control of any other great maritime state, but should remain in an independent condition, and so be accessible and useful to the commerce of all nations. I need not say that the importance of these considerations has been greatly enhanced by the sudden and vast development which the interests of the United States have attained in California and Oregon; and the policy heretofore adopted in regard to those islands will be steadily pursued. It is gratifying, not only to those who consider the commercial interests of nations, but also to all who favour the progress of knowledge and the diffusion of religion, to see a community emerge from a savage state and attain such a degree of civilization in those distant seas." On the previous day, notice had been given of a bill "to establish ocean mail-steamer from San Francisco, via the Sandwich Islands, to Shanghai, China."

The ship Essex has been engaged for freight of stores to Calcutta, in lieu of the Hindoo, and the Ramilies for freight of stores to Bombay.

NOTICE TO MARINERS.

THE COURT of DIRECTORS of the EAST-INDIA COMPANY have lately received from the Governor of Prince of Wales Island, Singapore, and Malacca, the following Notification, which is published for general information.

HORSBURGH LIGHT HOUSE.

Notice is hereby given, that a Light House, bearing the above designation, in commemoration of the celebrated Hydrographer, has been erected on Pedra Branca, a rock which lies off the eastern entrance of the Straits of Singapore. The Light will be exhibited on the night of the 15th October, 1851, and on every night thereafter from sunset to sunrise.

The following is a specification of the position of the Light House, the dangers which come within the influence of its Light, and the appearance of the Light, by Mr. J. T. Thomson, Government Surveyor.

The Light House is situated, according to the Admiralty Chart, in Lat. 1° 20' 20" N. and Long. 104° 25' East of Greenwich, and by compass bears from Barbuet Point East distant 12½ nautical miles, and from the N.E. Point of Bingtang N.W. by W. ½ W. distant 12 miles.

The following Rocks and Shoals lying in the way of vessels, and coming within the influence of the Light, bear from the Light House.

The Light will be known to Mariners as a Revolving bright Light, which gradually attains its brightest period once every minute, and as gradually declines until it totally disappears to the distant observer; whilst, when viewed from a short distance, it is never entirely invisible.

The lantern, which is open all round, elevated 95 feet above the level of the sea at high-water Spring Tides, will be seen from the deck of a vessel at a distance of 15 nautical miles.

As a beacon during the day, the Light House will be known by the following description:—It stands on a rock, which measures 150 feet long and 100 broad, and is 24 feet high at its highest point above the level of high-water Spring Tides. The Light House is a pillar of dressed granite, and the lantern covered by a spherical dome, which is painted white.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 14th of May, 1851, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.
20		£1,000	£10 6 8	£10 12 8

* The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assurers to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

At the TENTH ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of this Society, held on the 27th day of November, 1851,

Benjamin Phillips, Esq., F.R.S., in the chair,

The following Report was read, showing the progress of the Society since its establishment:—

"The Directors beg to refer the Shareholders to the following table, which shows the speedy increase of the business of the office.

YEAR.	Number of New Policies issued in each Year.	Sums Assured by New Policies in each Year.	Annual Premiums payable on New Policies issued in each Year.
1842	130	£55,245 1 0	£1,882 13 7
1843	208	87,830 16 11	4,992 18 6
1844	197	80,415 8 6	4,120 4 3
1845	258	103,014 11 0	5,563 17 0
1846	199	83,700 14 5	4,985 8 5
1847	313	113,542 4 8	4,237 3 0
1848	412	124,458 17 9	4,980 2 8
1849	475	201,712 15 6	7,496 0 6
1850	569	213,469 16 11	9,163 13 7
1851	613	263,162 1 5	10,527 17 2
Total.	3,374	£1,326,552 8 1	£57,949 18 8

"From this it is found that the business done during the last year is larger than that of any preceding year, and that 613 Policies were effected yielding Annual Premiums to the extent of £10,527, while the whole business of the first three years of the Society's existence was confined to the issue of 335 Policies, yielding £10,995 in Annual Premiums.

"The deaths during the year ending 1850 were much under the number expected. It was reasonable therefore to suppose that in the following year they would have equalled or even exceeded the number expected; and it is therefore satisfactory to find that the number of deaths in the present year is still somewhat below that provided for by the Society's tables.

"It is also a source of much satisfaction to the Directors to be enabled to state that the peculiar feature which originated with this Society, and which at the outset constituted its principal claim to public support, viz., the assurance of unsound lives on strictly scientific and sound principles, is fully appreciated by the public; and that the experience of ten years has completely shown the correctness of the opinion originally expressed, that such business can be conducted with safety not only to the assured but to the assurers. The assurance of unsound lives is now very generally practised by other offices as well as this, but the principles upon which such business is done are by no means uniform. In this office, however, the premiums are tabulated from data quite as accurate as those used for ordinary lives, whereas in other offices the premium is fixed without any accurate tables or data.

"The Directors going out by rotation are Thomas Stevenson, Esq., F.S.A., and Alfred Waddilove, D.C.L., and the Auditors going out of office by rotation are John Stirling Taylor, Esq., and Joseph Whitehouse, all of whom being eligible, offer themselves for re-election."

The Directors and Auditors retiring from office having been duly re-elected without opposition, the business of the meeting terminated by the usual vote of thanks being given.

Prospectuses, containing very full tables of rates, forms of proposal, and every other information, will be forwarded, postage free, on application to any of the Society's agents, or to the Secretary, at the chief office, 25, Pall Mall.

F. G. P. NEISON, Actuary.

HINDUSTANI WORKS BY JOHN SHAKESPEAR, Esq.

NEW EDITION, with GREAT ADDITIONS.

This Day is published, the 4th Edition, in 1 vol. 4to. price £5. 5s. in boards. SHAKESPEAR'S HINDUSTANI and ENGLISH DICTIONARY, GREATLY ENLARGED: to which is added, a DICTIONARY, ENGLISH and HINDUSTANI, ENTIRELY NEW.

•• To the First Part of this Dictionary, the author has, by laborious study of Hindustani works, both printed and manuscript, made the most extensive additions. In the Hindustani and English Part, the Hindustani words are printed in their proper characters, together with the pronunciation in Roman letters. The Derivatives, which are traced from the Sanskrit, Arabic, Hebrew, Persian, and Greek, are given respectively in the character peculiar to each of those languages.

The Second Part, English and Hindustani, is ENTIRELY NEW. It comprises the most common English words, and also numerous usual phrases, with the fittest corresponding translations into Hindustani.

REVIEW IN "TIMES," Jan. 3.—"Much attention has been paid to the collecting of scientific terms, especially botanical ones, as well as to the correct rendering them into the technology of Europe." ••• "The Hindustani and English Part of it now contains upwards of 53,000 words and phrases explained, being 7,000 more than in the last edition, and 11,000 more than in any other Dictionary of the like description now extant." ••• "In India, as well as in Europe, the character of this work has long been fully established, and the present edition will greatly enhance its reputation."

COCOA is a nut which, besides farinaceous substance, contains a bland oil. The oil in this nut has one advantage, which is, that it is less liable than any other oil to rancidity. Possessing these two nutritive substances, Cocoa becomes a most valuable article of diet, more particularly if, by mechanical or other means, the farinaceous substance can be so perfectly incorporated with the oil, that the one will prevent the other from separating. Such an union is presented in the Cocoa prepared by JAMES ERSS, and thus, while the delightful flavour, in part dependent upon the oil, is retained, the whole preparation will agree with the most delicate stomach.—1s. 6d. per lb.

CHOCOLATE.—Those who require a very light beverage, will find the prepared chocolate adapted to their particular taste; it is thinner and more highly flavoured than the Cocoa, possessing more the advantages of Tea and Coffee.—2s. 6d. per lb.
